The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to close debate upon section 2 and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 76, noes 13.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. Whenever the gag rule is going to be applied they will not gain any time by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-two Members are present, a quorum. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That any room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or place of any kind where intoxicating liquor is sold, manufactured, kept for sale, or bartered in violation of the war prohibition act, and all intoxicating liquor and all property kept and used in maintaining such a place, is hereby declared to be a public and common nuisance, and any person who maintains or assists in maintaining such public and common nuisance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for not less than 30 days or more than 1 year, or both. If a person has knowledge or reason to believe that his property is occupied or used in violation of the provisions of the war prohibition act and suffers the same to be so used, such property shall be subject to a lien for any may be sold to pay all fines and costs assessed against the occupant of such building or property for any violation of the war prohibition act, which said lien shall attach from the time of the service of summons on the owner or his agent; and any such lien may be established and enforced by legal action instituted for that purpose in any court having jurisdiction.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, line 4, page 3, by striking out the first "or" and inserting "nor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 4, after the figures "$100," strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, on page 3, line 10, I move to strike out the word "any" and insert "and." It is a clerical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the word "for," strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 16, after the word "jurisdiction," insert "any violation of this title upon any leased premises by the lessee or occupant thereof shall, at the option of the lessor, work a forfeiture of the lease."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I accept that.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I think the chairman has that covered in another section, and I reserve the point of order, so that the chairman may explain that after the explanation by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does not apply to this title.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, the necessity of that amendment comes by reason of the fact that it is undertaken here to make the lessor of a building liable if intoxicating liquors are sold or used on the premises contrary to law, and, of course, as a fundamental proposition of justice you can not hold a man legally liable unless he is in some way responsible for the wrongful act. The lessor of premises has not the right to terminate the lease and hence no control over the conduct of the lessee unless he is given that power by law. This provides the same provision that is carried in the second division of this bill, but it is not applicable here because by the language there it is confined to that particular section and hence would not have reference to this. Without such a provision I doubt the validity of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made on this section? If not, the Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 16, after the word "jurisdiction" insert, "provided that in no case shall any lien attach exceeding in amount the equitable holding of such owner."

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman and gentleman, it is clear that in the matter of a mortgaged piece of property a great many people who have had nothing to do with the commitment of any crime and who are only guilty of owing property should not have their interests in the property jeopardized by this law, and I take it for granted that the gentlemen do not want to do any such thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman understand as a matter of law that a lien can attach to a man's property beyond what he possesses in it, whether it is equitable or legal?

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman will wait a minute I will show you the difficulties you are getting into. If a piece of property is tied up by a mortgage or a deed of trust there would be a great deal of difficulty at the time of expiration.

Now, I wish to have the attention of the gentlemen for a minute. I do not intend to take but a minute or two to explain this amendment. You will notice that a mortgage or a deed of trust about to expire, with the difficulties pending against the property on account of the violation of this war prohibition act, that it would be next to impossible to renew the lease or the mortgage, and now I take it for granted that you gentlemen have no desire to ruin anybody, that you want to sit here and play fair. If you play fair, what you ought to do is to tie up the owner of the equitable title in the property to the extent of his equity only. You should do no more than that, and I take it for granted that that is all you intend to do. My amendment provides that no lien shall attach in excess of the amount that the owner has as an equitable interest in the property.

I do not think there is anything unfair in it, and it would settle in the mind of any financial man to whom you might apply for a renewal of your loan exactly the amount of the difficulty in which the property is involved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that the lien which is created in line 9 of page 3 of the bill does not make it a first lien. Therefore the lien retained in this bill would be subject to the lien the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. JUUL. Correct; but you have not defined in this bill what the lien amounts to. I am defining what the lien amounts to when an applicant comes to the bank and wants to renew the loan on his property during the term of his difficulty. The limitation would be equal to the owner's equity.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Do you expect that one could procure a renewal of the lien while a suit to enforce a forfeiture for the wrongful use of the property is pending?

Mr. JUUL. I wish to tell the gentleman that I think it would be very difficult. With possibly a first, second, and sometimes a third mortgage on a piece of property, I think it would be extremely difficult to go to any financial agent in the city in which I reside and renew a mortgage unless you are able to assure him of exactly the difficulties you were in by virtue of the passage of this act. My amendment provides that your difficulty is no greater than your equity, title, or interest in the property, and I can not see why any gentleman should sit on this floor and be unreasonable to the extent of refusing this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if it would not be possible under his amendment for the owner of property to mortgage it for its full value so as to escape the large penalty which would accrue by reason of this Government lien?

Mr. JUUL. I wish to say to the gentleman that that would not be possible at all, because, at least in my State, the mortgage would have to be a matter of record. And I wish to say to the gentleman that one of my reasons for asking for this amendment—and, mind you, you are serving your own people in passing it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JUUL. I ask for a minute and a half more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a minute and a half more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JUUL. Now, if——

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague have three additional minutes.

Mr. FESS. I object. He has not asked for it.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JUUL. I wish to say here that according to the provision at the bottom of page 4 and in the top line of page 5 the owner is brought into court and is asked to give bonds in the full value of the property; of course he can not do that. He does not own the full value of the property. Therefore I am desirous that you define the extent of the difficulty the owner has gotten into by limiting the amount of the lien to the amount that the owner whom you are hailing into court owns in that property. Now, do you want more than that?

I submit my amendment to your tender mercies.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the amendment——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This proposition I do not think dangerous to anybody. It does not involve the lien beyond the equity that the man has. It would simply be whatever interest the person had, or in case there was an owner who suffered or permitted the property to be used for the purpose, it might attach to his interest as well as the other. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] moves that all debate upon this amendment be now closed.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask, since I want to vote understandingly on the amendment, unanimous consent that it be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the gentleman's request as soon as he has put the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 31.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for tellers. All in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been disappointed with the attitude taken by those who have framed this bill and are now forcing it through the House. The principle of prohibition has won a great victory in the United States. In 45 States the legislatures have voted to ratify an amendment to the Constitution making it unlawful to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors. It is a great experiment, one that no other great Christian nation ever tried. The enactment of statutes by which such an amendment to the Constitution is to be enforced becomes a serious as well as important matter. Surely it is a time when all right-thinking persons can afford to sit down and consider calmly and carefully what are the best means for working out satisfactorily under the amendment a most complicated social and economic problem.

Unfortunately we have seen no such attitude on the part of the proponents of this bill. Instead of considering calmly the kind of provisions that might work the least hardship, this bill seems almost fanatical in its methods and apparent purpose to make law abiding just as difficult and law breaking just as certain as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. He is not speaking to the word "jurisdiction."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am doing nothing more than what is usually done in debate under the five-minute rule. At any rate, I am discussing the bill. I have not heretofore taken one single minute of time since the discussion of this bill began.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point.

Mr. TILSON. I thank the gentleman. The spirit of some of those who are demanding the most extreme legislation is well characterized by Clarence Day, jr., in some verses printed in the New Republic, entitled:

SIC SEMPER DISSENTERS.

In the town of Hottentottenville an aged Hottentot,
Whose name was Hottentotten-Tillypoo,
Was feebly hottentottering around a vacant lot,
With a vacant look upon his higgaboo.
Now "higgaboo" is Hottentot, as you may know, for "face,"
And to wear a vacant look upon your face is a disgrace.
But poor old Mr. Tillypoo, he had no other place
Though I understand it grieved him through (and thru).

He was grubbing up potatoes in an aimless sort of way
(Which really was the only way he had),
And an officer was watching him to hear what he might say,
And arrest him if the thing he said was bad;
For it seems this wretched Tillypoo had gone and had the thought
That his neighbors didn't always do exactly as they ought;
And as this was rank sedition, why, they hoped to see him caught;
For it naturally made 'm pretty mad.

So the men of Hottentottenville, they passed a little law,
Which they called the Hotta-Shotta-Shootem act,
Which fixed it so the postman was a kind of Grand Bashaw,
Who determined what was false and what was fact.
And the postman sentenced Tillypoo, and wouldn't hear his wails,
But kept him twenty years apiece in all the local jails,
And said he couldn't vote no more, and barred him from the mails,
And expressed the hope that this would teach him tact.

Well, the last I heard of Tilly, he was trying not to think,
And he'd tied a piece of string around his tongue,
And he never went within a mile of either pen or ink,
And he always stood when any song was sung.
And maybe you are thinking that his fate was rather tough,
But what I say is, not a bit, they didn't do enough;
When anybody differs with you, dammit, treat 'm rough;
Why, they ought to be bub-boiled alive and hung.

Why should a bill for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and a bill to perpetuate war-time prohibition be attached to each other like Siamese twins? Is it not because of the fact that so-called war prohibition is not able to stand upon its own merits? Everyone knows that war-time prohibition was from the beginning one-third fraud and two-thirds fake. It was not put into operation until the war was over, and there never was any substantial ground for it as a war measure.

The eighteenth amendment stands upon entirely different ground. In the way and manner provided in the Constitution itself it was submitted and ratified. It is now an integral part of the Constitution we have sworn to support and defend. My own State of Connecticut, in the proper exercise of its rights, did not ratify this amendment; but the amendment being ratified in the orderly, constitutional way, the people of Connecticut are now just as ready, just as zealous, as the people of any other State for the proper enforcement of its provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. As one of the representatives of Connecticut in this body I am ready to vote for a reasonable law to enforce the eighteenth amendment, and, as I said at the outset, I am deeply disappointed that the proponents of this bill have seen fit to couple together two matters that do not belong together and otherwise endeavor to make it difficult or impossible to support the bill. Is it vain to hope that even yet the advocates of this bill will relent so as to permit the passage of a law than can and will be enforced? [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the word "person," on page 3, line 6, has any limitation? I notice on page 7 it is defined as meaning "natural persons," and so forth. Would "persons" include executors, administrators, and trustees within the meaning of this act?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The Federal statutes define a person as a company, firm, or corporation.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. But not as a trustee?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. On line 13 of page 3 your committee provides only that the summons shall be served "on the owner or his agent." Now, we all know that the owner is responsible for his agent. But suppose A dies and leaves an estate to B, and C is executor. B lives in England and knows nothing about his property, and his property is used in violation of the provisions of this act. We all know that an executor is an officer of the court. On whom would you then serve the summons?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think I would leave it to the court to determine. It would probably be served by publication, he being a nonresident.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. You provide that it shall be served on the owner.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You serve it on the owner by publication. If he could be reached, you would serve it in person; and if not, you would serve it upon him by publication.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Suppose the owner lived abroad?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would be the same as in any other case.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Why not provide for the service of summons on the fiduciary? It seems to me the door has been left open for fraud. A fiduciary who knowingly leases property contrary to this bill should be held responsible. This section only makes the owner or his agent liable.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment and ask to be recognized to present the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Page 3, line 6, after the word "person," insert "as the owner or fiduciary." In line 7, after the word "property," insert "or property held by him in any form of trust whatsoever." And on line 13, after the word "summons," insert "on the fiduciary or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, my impression——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My impression, Mr. Chairman, is that that is entirely unnecessary, and besides I do not think it would be fair to charge the estate in that fashion for the misconduct, for instance, of some fiduciary officer of the class that might come under this provision. I do not think we ought to try to make this so extreme that people would object to it on that account. [Laughter.] I think we cover enough ground in this for war-time prohibition, and I do not think we should go any further.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, I will withhold my remarks until I offer my amendment.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I propose an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, let us have it reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Can not a man on this side be recognized once in a while?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be given an opportunity.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, after the word "both," in line 6, on page 3, the remainder of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: Page 3, line 6, after the word "both," strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Is this amendment in order before an amendment to perfect the text?

The CHAIRMAN. If there are any amendments to perfect the text, it will be in order to offer them before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out.

Mr. GARD. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text, but I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Is my amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any amendment to perfect the text, that can be offered before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized to offer an amendment, which he has offered. He has a right to be heard on his amendment, and he can not be taken from the floor by anyone seeking to offer other amendments. When he has concluded it will be competent for any Member to offer a perfecting amendment, and such amendment will be voted on first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair had not ruled that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not entitled to five minutes to discuss his amendment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] announced that he had an amendment to perfect the text, and the Chair announced that amendments to perfect the text would be in order before the vote was taken on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARD. I may have an opportunity to offer my amendment later?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the people of this country have risen in their might and their strength and are determined to wipe out drunkenness and carousing, and I do not believe there is a gentleman on the floor of this House who is opposed to that proposition.

It is our duty to pass a proper enforcement law, but in this proposed enforcement act there are different provisions to which I take exception. One is the section that I propose to strike out by the amendment which I have just offered. I do not think it is at all within reason to subject every man's real estate to levy and sale because somebody has violated a law on that piece of property. If you own an apartment house occupied by many tenants, should you be liable for violations of law by some of your tenants? If you own a farm, should you be responsible for violations of law committed by tenants or any person that might visit or trespass upon that farm? If, by the savings of a lifetime, you or any thrifty son of toil accumulates a home and that home be rented, should that modest home be put in jeopardy because of a violation of law by that tenant? A thousand crimes, a thousand violations of the law, can be committed on your property to-day without subjecting it to levy and sale to satisfy a fine that may be imposed upon the offenders.

I say it is entirely wrong to make this an exception, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. LAYTON. In such a case is not the language of this bill and the spirit of it a very definite statement that the owner of the property is in collusion with the tenant, and is not that the part of it which you seek to strike out?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. It should be only where he is in collusion. The language which I seek to strike out is as follows:

If a person has knowledge or reason to believe that his property is occupied or used in violation of the provisions of the war prohibition act and suffers the same to be so used, such property shall be subject to a lien for and may be sold to pay all fines and costs assessed against the occupant of such building or property for any violation of the war prohibition act, which said lien shall attach from the time of the service of summons on the owner or his agent; and any such lien may be established and enforced by legal action instituted for that purpose in any court having jurisdiction.

Now, many cases might arise in which a man owning property could be put on the defensive and be obliged to defend himself, at an enormous expense, to save his property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. No; I will not yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I wish to say that the language used in this section and that which the amendment seeks to strike out is in effect like the language used in the red-light law for the District of Columbia which is now in force, and that is almost identically copied from the law of Iowa. It has been very effectual in its operation here, and I am informed also in the State of Iowa, and it has worked no wrong upon anybody who was not guilty and did not have guilty knowledge, and I do not believe it should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the membership of the House to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS], and what I wish to say regarding it will be from a very different viewpoint. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says, in discussing his amendment:

That the people of this country are determined to wipe out drunkenness and carousing.

I do not believe there is a Member here who is opposed to stamping out drunkenness. He also says:

I do not think it is at all within reason to subject every man's real estate to levy and sale because somebody has violated a law on that piece of property.

Now, the gentleman appears to have a great deal of sympathy for the man who owns property, because he says:

If by the savings of a lifetime you or any thrifty son of toil accumulates a home and that home be rented, should that modest home be put in jeopardy because of a violation of law by that tenant?

I agree with him that it should not. I do not believe that the property of any man should be jeopardized by the passage of this act. However, I suppose he is going to vote for this bill.

I am of the opinion that the Members here, who are anxious for this bill to become a law, care very little for property rights, because they propose to wipe out thousands of millions of dollars' worth of property belonging to men who have spent their lives in the liquor business, and who, by their thrift and labor, have been able to accumulate a certain amount, which you now propose to destroy without any consideration for them or compensation for the loss they suffer. The man who owns a house or any other building may have the same placed in jeopardy by the passage of this bill if some one has violated the law upon it, but the hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property that men own who have been in the liquor business for years, as has been said in partnership in a way with the Government, to whom they have paid billions of dollars in revenue, does not seem to excite any interest or consideration here whatever, and gentlemen who favor the passage of this bill apparently do not care how much property belonging to them or what kind is destroyed.

I do not hesitate to say that I have some regard, respect, and sympathy for the people who will be ruined by the enactment of this law. If there was any decency or fairness left in the framers of this proposed legislation, they certainly ought to compensate these men for the loss of stock, leases, and the destruction of their business; but instead of that you propose to wipe them out without any regard or thought for their future welfare. To destroy property in the name of the State, without reimbursing the owners, is a dangerous practice.

You seem to think it a joke to injure, ruin, and make worthless their holdings and wreck a business long legalized. Never before in the history of the Government was such a tyrannical reform attempted. Home rule, self-government, and the liberty of the people is to be destroyed, and persecution is to be the order of the day, but before long you will find that you have gone too far. You have the votes to do it, but might is not right; you should be fair and just in this matter.

I believe in temperance; I believe in proper laws to regulate the sale of liquor, and it can and ought to be regulated; but there has never been any effort since I have been a Member of Congress to pass laws for its regulation. What the men want who are behind this prohibition movement is to force prohibition upon the country, regardless of consequences, because they have learned the practical and up-to-date way of doing it. The legislative agents, or the lobby, of the prohibition combine that has been forcing this law through Congress have studied the practical methods adopted by the great combinations and corporations, and because of this they have been able to secure favorable legislation in nearly every legislative body in the United States; they are up to date in practical politics and through their browbeating, bulldozing, and threatening tactics this well-financed antisaloon lobby have scared men in political life everywhere in this country into believing that all of the good people in this country are in favor of this kind of legislation; that all of the church members of the country are demanding it. My, how human nature has changed, if that is so. I think this legislation is wrong and when enforced it will put more men out of politics than any law that was ever passed.

I am opposing this bill to-day—although you have the votes to pass it—because it is unjust, unfair, and un-American, and the most malicious assault on personal liberty that could be made. Fair-minded people, regardless of their views on prohibition, are against it. If it goes into effect, thousands upon thousands of men directly employed in the liquor business, as well as thousands of others in business dependent upon the liquor trade, will be thrown out of employment at a time when the Army is being demobilized and work is hard to obtain. Is it any wonder we have unrest, disaffection, and discontent in the country? We are fighting this measure because it is wrong; and you may think you are winning a great victory by passing it, but the fight has only commenced. It will be denounced in every section of the United States before long, and the men in politics who are responsible for this legislation will be driven from office and power. [Laughter.]

My friend from California [Mr. RANDALL], the prohibitionist, is laughing at that statement. Well, he may laugh about it; he can afford to laugh; he was elected as a Prohibitionist; but let me remind the House that "those who laugh last laugh longest."

Mr. UPSHAW. Does not the gentleman think that the gentleman who depends upon the keg of liquor should be put out of politics?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Oh, that is cheap talk; we hear that line of talk from men who think they are making friends by going around speechifying and pretending to work for the general welfare of the people and the good of the public.

Unto those who talk and talk,
This proverb should appeal:
The steam that blows the whistle
Will never turn the wheel.

Men who do the greatest good for the community in which they live, as a rule, do not blow about it. Professional agitators shout about anything they think will make them popular. [Laughter and applause.]

I voted against the so-called prohibition amendment to the Constitution, to take effect January 1, 1920, when it was before this House for passage. I do not believe in this kind of legislation or the way it was put over. At the time of its passage it was understood that men in the liquor business would have one year after the ratification of the article by the States to wind up their business, and it was so stated at that time by the then chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He said:

While we prohibitionists desire to have the country go dry, we do not propose to let our zeal in that great cause destroy our sense of justice, and I for one was willing to advocate the right of the brewers and distillers to have one year to wind up their business. We have distinguished precedents for this in the action of nearly all the dry States. Most of the States give them a year in which they may wind up their business. I think it a perfectly fair amendment, and I will be very glad to vote for it, and I hope the dry Members will vote for it. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 17, 1917, p. 432.)

In view of this understanding, men in the liquor business withdrew large quantities of liquor from the bonded warehouses, upon which they paid a tax of $6.40 a gallon, and the retailers throughout the country now have large stocks of liquor on hand, many having already paid a license to conduct their business for a year believing they had that length of time to wind up their affairs before the constitutional amendment would be enforced January 16 next.

I have many letters from men in the business in Chicago that will show the injustice of this law. Let me read you a letter from a firm in my district, through whose efforts has been built up one of the largest businesses of the kind in the United States:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 27, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS GALLAGHER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: With the war-time prohibition bill of November 21, 1918, apparently going into effect July 1, 1919, we respectfully call your attention to the injustice of this untimely legislation.

We are holders of large stocks of whiskies of various ages that are doomed to remain unsold in the United States bonded warehouses. Many others find themselves similarly situated, and, in fact, records seem to indicate that 60,000,000 to 70,000,000 gallons of whiskies will be denied an outlet of sale by the arbitrarily setting of this date of prohibition. These spirits were distilled according to specific laws passed by Congress compelling distillers to carry stocks for bottled-in-bond purposes four years in advance of public sale. These liquors, suddenly cut off from public sale after having been brought into existence under Government permission and approval, are virtually confiscated and places an unprecedented loss on their owners.

In addition to this, the Government will sustain a loss in tax at $6.40 per gallon, or approximately $400,000,000, not to mention a further loss through income and profit taxes that will be consequently charged off by owners.

Can Congress, in justice to the business interests of both the people and the Government, consistently deny the owners of these liquors the right to dispose of their stocks before the coming into effect of the Federal prohibition amendment?

We ask you in true-spirit fairness to give this subject, so vital to the welfare of business during these critical moments, your worthy consideration, and only ask sufficient time to tax pay and dispose of distilled spirits now in bond.

Trusting that you will do all in your power to impress on Congress the necessity of legislation to that effect, we remain,

Yours, respectfully,

MORAND BROS.,
S. J. MORAND, President.

Here is another statement from a business concern in Chicago that will no doubt prove interesting, if reason and fair dealing has anything to do with the passage of this bill:

CHICAGO, May 29, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS GALLAGHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Permit us to present for your consideration the following facts: At the present time we have a floor stock of liquors which cost us over $50,000; paid in revenue and war taxes, $150,000; still owing additional war taxes due in September, $150,000; total cost of floor stock, $350,000. In other words, for our floor stock the Government receives $300,000. Besides we own bonded goods at cost price of $60,000, on which we must pay the Government about $400,000 before we can get a dollar of our investment.

Our situation is typical of hundreds of others throughout the country.

Is it fair or just that our entire investment, made in good faith and under Government sanction and approval, should be wiped out next July 1 without any chance of redress? Is it consistent with just principles of Government to arbitrarily destroy the property of its citizens without just compensation?

We do not protest against constitutional prohibition. All we ask is protection against the ruinous operation of a war measure which has now ceased to have merit or reason. In fairness and plain justice we ask you to use every honorable means to bring about the repeal of the act of November 21, 1918, or in some manner make it lawful to dispose of liquors now on hand until constitutional prohibition becomes effective.

Respectfully, yours,

EITEL BROS.

A few months' time means a great deal to liquor dealers under the circumstances and would help them to dispose of their stocks, upon which they have paid the Government tax.

We were told that war-time prohibition was necessary to control the food cereals of the country; that it was a food-conservation measure to help us win the war. It was made a law when more than 4,000,000 men were in the service of the country at home and abroad, at a time when we were shipping rye, corn, and barley abroad for the use of foreign brewers. Every sane person, whether he is in favor of prohibition or not, knows that this was not a war measure. The war is over and peace has been declared, and to force this war-time prohibition act upon the country a few months after it was understood that one year was to be allowed those in the liquor business to close up their affairs is indefensible and unjust. Is the Government willing to back up this fraud? I do not believe it. The President is against it; he has said so. Let me read you his message to Congress May 20, 1919:

The demobilization of the military forces of the country has progressed to such a point that it seems to me entirely safe now to remove the ban upon the manufacture and sale of wines and beers, but I am advised that without further legislation I have not the legal authority to remove the present restrictions. I therefore recommend that the act approved November 21, 1918, entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products,' and for other purposes," be amended or repealed in so far as it applies to wines and beers.

WOODROW WILSON.

In the face of this fact, do you believe for a moment the President will sign the bill that you are now attempting to pass? He will veto it, and he ought to veto it.

It was stated here in debate that Illinois is for prohibition, that the legislature of the State ratified the constitutional amendment. That is so, but it has never been approved by the people themselves.

The question was submitted last spring to the people of Chicago, that contains nearly one-half of the population of the State, and the people voted against prohibition by a large majority. In the dry districts of Chicago, where there are no saloons, the vote was against prohibition. Even Hyde Park voted wet, and Lake View voted wet; in wards where the saloon keepers have little or no influence they were carried by the wets. One hundred and twenty-four thousand seven hundred and thirty-one women voted wet, while 76,325 women voted dry. Nearly 400,000 men and women voted against prohibition, and less than 159,000 voted for it. I merely cite these figures to show you that national prohibition has been fastened upon the people through the activities of prohibition agents without ever giving the public a chance to express their wishes upon it.

Listen to what the New York World in an editorial, April 27, 1919, says:

Neither of the great parties, Democratic or Republican, ever advocated national prohibition. No Congress was ever elected on that issue. No President ever championed it. No Democratic or Republican candidate for President ever championed it. It was never put forward by the leaders of either party. The Congress that submitted it was elected in 1916, but neither the Democrats nor the Republicans had a word to say about prohibition in their national platforms. Neither Mr. Wilson nor Mr. Hughes ever mentioned the subject. When Congress submitted the amendment to a country whose attention and energies were all absorbed in the greatest war of all history it submitted an amendment on which the American people had never been permitted to go to the ballot box.

We are now called upon to pass a bill to provide for the enforcement of war-time prohibition and to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages under the constitutional amendment that will be more drastic and unreasonable than any legislator ever dreamed of when he voted for the ratification of the amendment. You propose now to make prohibition a political issue that will remain with us for years to come, and it will plague every man who is responsible for forcing this unwise, unfair, and drastic act upon the people without their consent, and every man responsible for it will have to answer to the people, who will not forget it.

As John J. McKenna, the poet of Archey Road, says in Public Safety:

WE CAN'T FORGET IT.

July the first will soon be here,
When they'll shut off our wine and beer.
Why have they pulled that awful stunt
To hang crêpe on that glorious month
In which we won our freedom?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the end of five minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice that I had an amendment that I wanted to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota by making it 10 minutes, and that the gentleman from Ohio have 5 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that that is not in order.

Mr. IGOE. Then I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota by making it 15 minutes, so that three gentlemen who I see have arisen may have 5 minutes each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes had it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my motion by making it 10 minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division on the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again put the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to amend the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were 65 ayes and 20 noes.

So the motion to amend the motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is limited on this section and all amendments thereto to 15 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment and have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, strike out the language after the word "the" in line 13 and the words "or his agent" in line 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "entry and indexing of judgment."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the members of the Judiciary Committee to this language, which I think should be changed in the interest of justice as affecting the transfer of property. It in no way affects the fact that a lien may attach, but provides that instead of being a secret lien, such as there is now, by which no person purchasing property could be safeguarded, the lien attaches from the time of the indexing and the judgment in such cases. At the present time it provides that the lien attaches from the time of the service of the summons on the owner or his agent. No one seeking to buy property would have any notice at all of the service of summons on the owner or his agent, since the service of the summons is entirely a personal service, whereas the making of the index judgment is a public record of which every man is bound to take notice.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not required that any legal notice of service by an officer must be returned to the court from which it issues and is a matter of record?

Mr. GARD. No; the return is made by the sheriff. The summons is given to the sheriff and the sheriff makes the return, but there is no record of the return except possibly his memoranda. But in this instance on the files of the clerk's or the recorder's office, whichever it may be, there is a permanent public judgment which all persons would be bound to observe. As I say, it makes no difference in reference to the lien; it provides that the lien may be taken, but it safeguards the interest of those who might be innocently and legitimately interested in the purchase of the property.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman that in New York there is no way of ascertaining that the summons has been served, by way of public record, until the recovery of the judgment, unless it be revealed by the individuals who begin the suit?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, any owner of property under the language of the gentleman's amendment might sell it to anyone else and thereby defeat even the lien on the judgment.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 3, line 13, after the words "of the," strike out the words "service of summons on the owner or his agent" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "filing of notice thereof for record in the public office wherein are kept the records of the title to such real estate."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as to this language and the impracticability of giving notice of lien thereunder. In most of the States, as I understand it, there is no record in the office where land titles are kept of the service of a summons. The return of the service of summons is filed in the office of the clerk of the court. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, under it the lien will not become effective on property until the judgment is entered. The purpose of my amendment is to make the lien effective as soon as the legal notice is filed in the recorder's or registrar's office, where are kept the records of the title to real property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman does away with all of the summons. What does the gentleman mean by "legal notice."

Mr. BARBOUR. Whatever legal notice is required in the State where the notice is to be given—a notice of attachment——

Mr. BLANTON. Should you not retain the words "of the service of summons on the owner or agent"? You do away with those words.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do away with those words so far as they affect the title to real property. You can not protect an innocent purchaser of real property if you put a lien on a man's property simply by service of summons on him.

Mr. BLANTON. You leave no provision here for the summons.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then put one in. I drew this amendment very hurriedly.

Mr. BLANTON. Which the gentleman from Ohio had in.

Mr. BARBOUR. If it is necessary, in order to get jurisdiction of the defendant, it should be in, but I think this other amendment should be adopted.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What the gentleman means by legal notice in the amendment he offers is the same as they do in some of the States by summons.

Mr. BARBOUR. I mean lis pendens or notice of attachment or notice of lien.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In my State we do not know of any such thing as a summons. It is always a service of notice.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then you have no summons there.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We have no summons.

Mr. BARBOUR. The amendment offered may not cover that point.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. Would not the situation be met by requiring the clerk of the Federal court to keep a record of lis pendens, upon which there should be immediately on the issuance of the summons a notice of the fact that the summons has been issued?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; if that would give notice to the purchaser of real property.

Mr. VENABLE. It will, because the purchaser of real property is under a legal duty to go to the official records, wherever they are maintained, to determine whether or not there is anything on file which affects the title of the property.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; if you give notice to the purchaser of the property that there is a lien, I do not care what form it takes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, the last amendment offered somewhat lessens the danger that threatens innocent owners of property. The provision in the bill which provides that immediately on the commencement of suit a lien shall attach, although no notice of the suit be made a public record, will grievously affect a number of real estate owners, especially in many of the cities of the country. I am glad the gentleman has offered an amendment that at least will make it possible for innocent mortgagees, lessees, and grantees to discover that a lien is claimed upon the property of the owner who is charged with having violated the act, but the amendment does not go far enough. Upon the filing of an information or announcement of a suit charging that an owner has had reason to believe that contraband liquors are kept or stored upon his property, though that owner might be ever so innocent of the charge made against him, his property would be subject to a lien under the bill as now framed and that lien would be pending until the suit was tried and decided in his favor. The bill provides the lien attaches from the time of the beginning of the suit, notwithstanding that no notice of the pendency of the suit is to be filed in a public office, and so the owner would have to wait until the suit is terminated in his favor before he could get rid of the lien that is attempted to be imposed upon his property. This unfair and oppressive situation would, I am afraid, be frequent in cities, particularly in those of the first class and particularly in New York. I speak advisedly as one who as a lawyer has had large experience in the passing of titles to property in my city.

Under the bill as framed, I repeat, if through the malice or exploitation of spies or others or even through some error an action against an owner under the provisions of the bill be commenced, there is no provision under which he could rid his property of the lien or even through bond discharge it until after trial, which in many jurisdictions would be long after the suit was begun—some months, some years. And so the owner would be hampered and frequently prevented from raising a loan by way of mortgage or conveying his property.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In a moment; and if, perchance, he shall, before the Government suit is commenced, have made a contract to convey, and the vendee would want to get out of the contract or not care to have himself saddled with the lien, after taking the deed, that vendee would be relieved from the contract, and the owner, however innocent of actually violating this prohibition statute, would lose the benefit of his sale. Such a condition, I submit, works hardship and oppression and creates an injustice which never should find place in any law governing a free people.

Now, I want this House in fairness to consider the immense value of property in New York which seriously might be affected by this section. I want you to understand that many an owner of an apartment house in New York, any house, if you please, in which there is no shop, no saloon, no boarding house, in which there is no hotel, would be at the hazard of being affected as I have indicated. This bill is manifestly unfair. I do not rise for the purpose of protecting guilty men; I do not rise for the purpose of trying to allow men to evade the law. If the purpose is to have liens imposed upon the property wherein liquors are found, very well; but I want this House to safeguard the interests of innocent owners and the property rights of parties in interest, and not go further than they think they ought to go in practically confiscating the property of innocent people. I want the rights of real estate owners and lessees safeguarded. I do not want this House in the spirit of fanaticism to run away with itself in trying to hamper owners of real estate to obtain mortgages or to convey their property to bona fide purchasers. If the owner is guilty, very well; let the judgment recovered against him constitute the lien.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more? I ask unanimous consent that I may have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But two minutes remain of the time fixed for closing debate.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is that time to be taken in addition to the 15 minutes fixed?

The CHAIRMAN. It will take the remainder of the 15 minutes and 1 minute more.

Mr. DEWALT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask for three minutes, not to be counted as part of the time already fixed.

Mr. DEWALT. If the ruling of the Chair is that it will take all of the time, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I did not ask to have it taken as a part of the 15 minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. The Chair so rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It is a question of whether the committee will give unanimous consent to add three minutes to the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, has my request been objected to?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, conceding, for the purpose of argument——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It has been suggested that I respectfully suggest to the Chair that before the Chair says that my request has been denied it is due to me, as well as it is due to the members of the committee, that the request be put by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The request was put by the Chair, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest for a moment, the gentleman from New York preferred an original request for three minutes, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] asked what would be the effect of that and the Chair ruled then and there, very properly, that would consume the balance of the 15 minutes and 1 minute more, but then the gentleman from New York asked to have his request modified to 3 minutes, not to take up the 2 remaining minutes of the time fixed by the House, but that it should be in excess of that and not interfere with that, and I do not think that request was ever put to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. And thereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] demanded the regular order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The regular order was, if the amended request of the gentleman from New York should be granted, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to be fair in the matter——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. And if the gentleman from New York makes the request that he be allowed three minutes, not to be taken from the time fixed by the committee, is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I think after these various objections I shall withdraw my request, and I will address this House at a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, conceding for the purpose of argument what I am not willing to concede as a fact, that a person who has knowledge or has reason to believe that his property is occupied thus unlawfully could be punished in the way determined by the provisions of this section, let us see what the effect of this would be upon other parties who are interested in this property and are certainly entirely innocent. Now, I will give a concrete example. The gentleman from Kentucky owns a property worth $10,000. Upon that property he has given a mortgage of $2,000 which is a first lien. Subsequent to that first lien there are three judgments, one held by you, another by a second gentleman, and another by a third. Then comes this process by which a subsequent lien to the first mortgage and these three judgments is entered. We will say that the lien is for $200, being the fine and the cost, and, in the enforcement of the lien, what are all these people required to do?

Now, in the first place, the man who owns the property is obliged to protect it, we will say; and he would undoubtedly try to protect it by bidding to the value of the property if he had the money. But here is a first mortgage creditor, and he is protected because he has the first lien, but according to the laws of almost all the States all of the judgments would be discharged. And every one of these subsequent judgment creditors would be obliged to do what? To bid to the amount of his judgment in order to protect himself, and to bid to the amount of the two prior judgments in order that he might be protected; and would also be required to raise the cash to pay all the prior judgments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to explain this matter for just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving my right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already put the request and there was no objection.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, the effect of that judgment——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Has all time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, the effect of that is merely this, that if the first mortgage is $1,000 and the first judgment is $1,000 and the next judgment is $1,000 and the next judgment is $1,000, the man who has $1,000 judgment will be obliged to provide himself with $4,000, the amount of these liens, in order to protect his judgment. In other words, all the innocent people other than the owner of the property must protect themselves by getting money enough to bid in that property. You say this lien shall be enforced and shall be a lien in what court? It must be a lien in the Federal court. And I take the position that the lien in the Federal court does not become effective or capable of enforcement until that lien is recorded in the county in which the property lies. Now, that is certainly true, and therefore it can not become effective simply by the service of the summons.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it seems to me the chairman of the committee is pursuing a wrong policy. Members of this House who are able lawyers want to discuss some of the important features of this bill, and it seems to me that it is not the proper course to pursue to cut off further debate. But in view of the statement made by the gentleman from New York, who represents, in part, the great city of New York, and other gentlemen here, it seems to me on an important matter of this kind there should be more debate. However, I am not going to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to say that it did appear to me quite singular that whenever the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge sees fit to limit debate he rises and moves to limit debate, and when any gentleman here, not for the purpose of delay but for the purpose of calling the attention of this House to some provision which he desires to perfect, rises on the floor, objection is made to his either having an extension of time or the privilege to complete a sentence. I object to that kind of procedure. Like the gentleman from Missouri, I do not like to object to the request that is already made, but I do want to give notice now that if this policy is pursued I will object to unanimous consent being carried hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; I do not object.

Mr. JUUL. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment in the third degree and is not in order at this time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment in the third degree and would not be in order at this time.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. WALSH. That, of course, would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR]?

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, my motion is a substitute amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania: Page 3, line 13, after the word "the," in line 13, strike out all of the balance of line 13 and the words "or his agent," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the words "filing of notice of the commencement of the suit in the office where the record of the transfer of the real estate is kept."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted on this section and all amendments thereto. The question now recurs on the amendment to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute as amended.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as amended by the substitute.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be read as modified by inserting the words "on the owner or his agent."

I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry as to what we are voting on; whether it is this part of the section that has already been stricken out or not, and what is the status of the amendment I proposed; and also I ask unanimous consent to correct my amendment by allowing the words "on the owner or his agent" to remain in the language.

The CHAIRMAN. Answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will state that the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] offered a substitute to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio. To that substitute the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES] offered an amendment. The amendment was agreed to, and the committee has now agreed to the substitute as amended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES], and the motion now recurs on the original amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have that reported?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor, and has asked that the amendment be read by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be reported again, with the addition of the words "on the owner or his agent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment?

Mr. GARD. Yes, in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing and send it to the Clerk's desk? Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may we first have the amendment as it exists at this time reported to the House, so that we will know what we are doing?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it has been agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARBOUR offers as a substitute for Mr. GARD'S amendment the following: Page 3, line 13, after the words "of the" strike out the words "service of summons."

Mr. WALSH. That is not what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asked to have reported.

Mr. GARD. We have asked to have the language of my amendment reported.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, as adopted by the committee.

Mr. WALSH. He asked to have the Jones amendment reported.

Mr. SABATH. The substitute as amended.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the substitute as amended by Mr. JONES.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute as amended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania: On page 3, after the word "the," on line 13, strike out all the balance of line 13 and the words "or his agent," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof "filing of notice of commencement of the suit in the office where the record of the transfers of real estate is kept."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to modify his amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Chair able to advise the committee which word "the" in line 13 is included in the Jones amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the opinion that it was the second word "the."

Mr. WALSH. Which one?

The CHAIRMAN. The second word "the." But the amendment itself does not so state.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will allow me to suggest, the amendment does state it. It says after the words "of the." There is only one instance where the words "of the" occur in that line.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, what the committee is seeking to get, and certainly what I want to get—and I think that was the request preferred on my right—is how will the substitute of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] read after the amendment has been written into it as proposed by him and acted upon by the committee? How will the substitute read as an entity, as a complete proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the substitute as amended.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, would it not be better to read the substitute first, and then the amendment, to see how it is modified?

Mr. WALSH. I am going to object to the reading of what has already been adopted. It has been voted on, and now the only thing that has not been read is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] that he be permitted to modify his amendment? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, as I understood from the reading at the desk the modification that the gentleman wants to make would destroy it.

Mr. GARD. I do not ask for the modification. I think it is carried in the original. I ask that my amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks that his amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: On page 3, line 13, strike out the language after the word "the," and the words "and his agent" on line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "entry and indexing of judgment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as modified by the substitute.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: On page 3, line 16, after the word "jurisdiction," insert "if the amount of the proposed lien is less than $3,000, action to enforce same shall be prosecuted in the State courts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS] offered an amendment to strike out all after the word "both," in line 6, page 3. What has become of that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment will be put by the Chair as soon as the perfecting amendments have all been acted upon.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERSMAN: Add, at the end of section 3, the following:

"Provided, however, That neither the provisions of this section nor of Title I of this act shall apply to the manufacture or sale of wine containing not more than 11 per cent of alcohol by weight."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 3, line 12, after the word "act," insert "occurring after the passage hereof."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. STEVENSON) there were—ayes 60, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS] so long ago that we have almost forgotten it. What has become of that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is now in order. The vote could not be taken on that amendment until all amendments to perfect the text had been disposed of. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS] to strike out all the remainder of section 3 after the word "both," in line 6, page 3.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 48, noes 67.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 77.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the United States attorney for the district where such nuisance as is defined in this act exists, or any officer designated by him or the Attorney General of the United States, may prosecute a suit in equity in the name of the United States to abate and enjoin the same. Actions in equity to enjoin and abate such nuisances may be brought in any court having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity causes. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this section shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States.

If it be made to appear by affidavit, or other evidence under oath, to the satisfaction of the court, or judge in vacation, that the nuisance complained of exists, a temporary writ of injunction shall forthwith issue restraining the defendant or defendants from conducting or permitting the continuance of such nuisance until the conclusion of the trial. Where a temporary injunction is prayed for, the court may issue an order restraining the defendants and all other persons from removing or in any way interfering with the liquor or fixtures, or other things used in connection with such alleged illegal sale of such liquor. No bond shall be required as a condition for making any order or issuing any writ of injunction under this act. If the court shall find the property involved was being unlawfully used as aforesaid at or about the time alleged in the petition, the court shall order that no liquors shall be sold, bartered, or stored in such room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or places of any kind, for a period of not exceeding one year, or during the war and the period of demobilization. Whenever an action to enjoin a nuisance shall have been brought pursuant to the provisions of this act, if the owner appears and pays all costs of the proceedings and files a bond, with sureties to be approved by the clerk of the court in which the action is brought, in the full value of the property, conditioned that he will immediately abate said nuisance and prevent the same from being established or kept therein a period of one year thereafter, the court, or in vacation the judge, may, if satisfied of his good faith, direct by appropriate order that the property, if already closed or held under the order of abatement, be delivered to said owner, and said order of abatement canceled, so far as the same may relate to said property; or if said bond be given and costs therein paid before judgment on an order of abatement, the action shall be thereby abated as to said room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or places only. The release of the property under the provisions of this section shall not release it from any judgment, lien, penalty, or liability to which it may be subject by law.

In the case of the violation of any injunction, temporary or permanent, granted pursuant to the provisions of this act, the court, or in vacation a judge thereof, may summarily try and punish the defendant. The proceedings for punishment for contempt shall be commenced by filing with the clerk of the court from which such injunction issued information under oath setting out the alleged facts constituting the violation, whereupon the court or judge shall forthwith cause a warrant to issue under which the defendant shall be arrested. The trial may be had upon affidavits, or either party may demand the production and oral examination of the witnesses. Any person found guilty of contempt under the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment of not less than 30 days nor more than 12 months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 4, line 12, after the word "with," strike out "such alleged illegal sale of such liquors" and insert "the violation constituting the nuisance."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer that, on the authority of the committee, to correct the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 4, line 23, after the word "owner," insert the words "lessee, tenant, or occupant."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 5, line 4, after the word "thereafter," insert the words "or during the war and period of demobilization."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in line 17, on page 5, I move to strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 5, line 17, strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in line 18, on page 4, after the word "be," I move to insert the word "manufactured."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 4, line 18, after the word "be," insert the word "manufactured."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 24, after the word "causes," insert "in all equity cases in this act provided the defendant shall have the right to demand a jury to pass on all matters of fact."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat encouraged by the statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD] that he wanted to put mercy and justice into this act. I want to point out that all through this bill provision is made for actions in equity—that is, injunctions, restraints—and in every way giving administrative and prosecuting officials the right to go into court and obtain writs before the defendant has an opportunity to be heard.

I am sure the distinguished chairman of the committee wants to be fair and at least give the defendant a chance to be heard. In most of the equity cases which will arise from this act there is no law involved; it will be almost entirely questions of fact. The testimony of officers and agents and police as to what occured will have to be determined, and it is but fair to permit such questions to be decided by a jury. In all Federal statutes and the Federal criminal code the defendant is entitled to a trial by jury, and is entitled to have the facts passed upon by a jury. Also, in injunction cases, under the Federal act applicable to labor cases, a trial by jury is provided.

In this bill, in the case of a temporary injunction, not even a bond is necessary. Application might be made for an injunction on an affidavit, and even if the affidavit does not contain sufficient facts to sustain a permanent injunction, the defendant would have no redress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman's amendment was adopted, would it not be possible where a man had been convicted of a criminal offense of conducting a nuisance to demand a jury trial and have a second jury trial on the question of an injunction, and perhaps get a verdict of not guilty, and nullify the first?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. "A" might be found guilty of a certain act, but this equity action lies not against "A" but against "B," the owner of the premises. You would have a different action.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily; it might lie against the man who committed the crime if he was the owner of the property.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, where there is a different state of facts or a different defendant is the gentleman willing to provide a trial by jury?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I would not be in favor of a trial by jury in an equity case involving the abatement of a nuisance, whether the man who conducted the nuisance has been convicted in the criminal court or not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is not the purpose of this bill to get away from a trial by jury?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman point out in the bill where a defendant is entitled to a trial by jury?

Mr. BARKLEY. All defendants charged with violating the law have a trial by jury. After the trial by jury if the district attorney wants to abate the nuisance he would have an equity proceeding.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it were true that the man must first be convicted of a crime before he resorted to the equity action——

Mr. BARKLEY. But that is not true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know it, and that is why it is vicious. You do not intend to resort to criminal action, but you want to go right into the equity court for enforcement of a criminal statute.

Mr. BARKLEY. Sections 1 and 2 provide for a trial by jury in all criminal cases.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But is it not true that you can resort to the equity proceeding without going into the criminal court?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true under State laws already enforced in many of the States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that either is wrong.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think it is right that a defendant should be taken into the equity court without first taking him into the criminal court and there convicted. I earnestly believe you do not intend to resort to criminal action, but want to go right into the equity court and hold him up in that way. How simple it will be to obtain a temporary writ, make it permanent, and if at any time, even years thereafter, another alleged offense is committed, a man can be hauled up for contempt without any chance of a defense as to the merits of the case and imprisoned, and kept in prison according to the whims of a judge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, no one in this committee is more heartily in sympathy with the principles and general purposes of this bill than myself, and no one possesses less sympathy for the people who in contumacious violation of this positive statute, and of the amendment to the Federal Constitution, will hereafter knowingly or negligently allow property owned by them to be used in contravention of this act. But I can not agree, Mr. Chairman, that in dealing with highly technical details, such as are found in the section just passed, we should be hurried to a final action fruitful of possible hardships. Other provisions of a technical character will confront us hereafter, and they should be carefully and thoughtfully considered. The section just concluded relates to situations that will arise under the registry laws of the States, a highly technical body of law. I undertake to say that the amendment just adopted will fail to give in a number of States of this Union, any protection whatever to an innocent vendee.

The gentleman who drafted this amendment may think that he has made adequate provision for an innocent purchaser, but certainly he fails to do so, so far as such purchasers in my State are concerned.

I think the gentleman who has charge of this bill, Mr. VOLSTEAD, when a section like this is under consideration and a real difference of judgment with reference to a highly technical subject is developed, ought to allow more time for real consideration and debate than was afforded in this instance. It has frequently been within my observation that during the progress of considering a bill, when a highly technical amendment was under consideration, the chairman of the committee would ask that the section be passed by for the time being, in order that in conference with the advocates of amendment, some amendment adequately covering the entire situation could be drafted.

I tried to have the substitute as it was amended read in its final form, so that I could apprehend its meaning.

My request to this end was shut off on objection by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I have tried privately to secure a copy of the amended substitute, and if it has been correctly given to me, then I undertake to say that in Virginia at least, an intending purchaser will not be sufficiently protected against the liens that will be made effective under this section as amended. This situation ought not to exist. The registry laws of the States are largely different. This act should contain some general provision, wisely and carefully drawn, under which every situation in every State likely to arise as to intending purchasers of property that may be impressed by a lien pursuant to the terms of this statute, may be justly and adequately met, so that innocent purchasers may not suffer. As a friend of this bill, and speaking as such, I ask the gentleman who has charge of this measure to give a reasonable time for consideration of amendments dealing with difficult and perplexing subjects, and not to hastily cut off debate. Technical details should be carefully worked out, in a comprehensive way, and by carefully drawn amendments, that will provide against all situations of difficulty hereafter likely to arise in the enforcement of this act. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. REAVIS: Page 6, line 3, after the word "not," strike out the rest of line 3 and the figures and word "$500 nor"; and, in line 4, strike out the last word of the line and the words "than 30 days nor" in line 5.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to bring this bill within the well-defined policy of the Judiciary Committee of eliminating a minimum fine. It was my understanding—and I had the impression at the time the bill was presented to the House—that it had been agreed upon in the committee that all of these provisions with reference to minimum fines had been stricken from the bill. That was done on page 20 of the bill, and on page 21 of the bill, and I think, to make the matter harmonious, it ought to be done at this place. For many years, at least ever since I have been in Congress, it has been the policy of the Judiciary Committee, at the request of the Federal judiciary, to eliminate the minimum fine and minimum penalty, to leave something to the discretion of the court, who have all of the facts and circumstances of the case before them, to determine anything up to the maximum that would be a just penalty to inflict upon the accused. I do not know that it would ever occur under this section, although the possibilities of such occurrence are here. There might be a case where the minimum fine and minimum imprisonment provided by this section would work a hardship. There might be a case where the man would be guilty of nothing more than an indiscretion, and in such event the court having jurisdiction of the trial, knowing all the facts and circumstances, ought to be privileged to fix the punishment commensurate with the offense. It would not only work for justice to eliminate the minimum fine and penalty from this bill but it would make the provisions of the section harmonious with the general policy of the Judiciary Committee in cases of like character, which policy has been adopted at almost the unanimous request of the Federal judiciary of the country.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, if we are to enforce this law we must have minimum penalties. I have joined with my friend in striking out minimum penalties in a number of bills and would generally follow that policy, but in this bill we are dealing with a business that is pursued for profit, and unless you impose a penalty that is large enough to make it unprofitable it will continue to go on. [Applause.] This is not a new question. Every State that is attempting to enforce laws of this kind has been compelled to put into them minimum penalties. Turn to the liquor and prohibition statutes anywhere and you will find in almost every one of them a minimum penalty of considerable size. That is true not only in prohibition statutes but even under the ordinary license statute. I have had occasion to examine the Pennsylvania statutes, and I find there that $500 is the minimum for selling without a license. It is necessary, and that is the reason why it is written into these statutes. We can not enforce this kind of a law without making it unprofitable, and that is the reason why we must insist on it.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if in this very bill the committee of which he is the chairman did not strike out the minimum penalties in three other sections in the bill in answer to that general policy?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. For the first offense, but for a second and subsequent offense we wrote minimum fines and inflicted, in addition to that, imprisonment, and where it was stricken out it was against my judgment, except in section 30. I could not prevent the committee from doing so. This does not punish for a single sale. This is a case where a man runs a saloon, where he makes a nuisance of himself. That is the instance in which we apply this minimum penalty. When a man does that, he has no business to ask mercy. If he is trying to profit by this kind of violation of law he ought to be punished, and the courts ought not to be permitted to put him in jail for a day or to impose a penalty of $1—as I have been told in some sections they do and will be sure to do—if this amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. All time is exhausted upon this amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I believe that it was Shakespeare who said, "Heat not a furnace for thy foe so hot that it do singe yourself." The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] pointed out to the committee that there is a great deal of danger if you write this legislation in too radical and in too drastic a manner. The other day I spoke in general debate and called to the attention of the House the fact that lawlessness had been increasing in the District of Columbia in spite of the prohibition law. The Evening Star of this city took exception to my statement. Now, I do not want to disparage the conditions at the Nation's Capital. I believe Washington is one of the best governed cities in this country. But I desire to place in the RECORD in addition to the editorial from the Star of July 14 the news items concerning the crimes which were reported that very day here in Washington and which appeared in the same edition of the Star that carried the editorial. The Washington Times, of that same evening, also reported these crimes, and in addition the cases of drunkenness that had come up in the police court of the District that very morning. These newspaper articles speak for themselves. I also desire to call to your attention that the superintendent of police has asked for more policemen. And the citizens have organized a sort of vigilance committee under the name of Home Defense League. This despite the fact that Washington is bone dry and that since July 1 even Baltimore has gone on the water wagon. I want also to call your attention to the drastic character of the bill with regard to the quantity of alcohol that can be used in various liquors. I have here from the Department of Agriculture a letter, written by the Acting Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, showing that in such home-made liquors as hard cider, elderberry wine, blackberry cordial, cherry bounce, peach bounce, and cordials of that kind there is anywhere from 4 to 40 per cent of alcohol.

Mr. BUTLER. And makes you very drunk, too.

Mr. KAHN. I suppose it does. Now, do you propose to write a law which will submit your mothers, your sisters, your wives, and the wives of the farmers of this country to be hauled to jail for violating this drastic law? I ask that that letter from the Department of Agriculture be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that the letter referred to be read in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY,
Washington, D. C., July 15, 1919.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your telephonic request of July 14, the following data on the alcoholic content of the beverages mentioned are given. A list of references is also appended. Reference to this list is made by number under the headings given below. These beverages as made in the home vary according to the formula used. It is generally true that the formulas used in the home are quite variable, so that the alcohol content given must necessarily be approximate.

Hard cider: The alcoholic content of the undiluted, fermented juice of cider apples may run as high as 8 per cent by volume (8). This alcohol content is produced by fermentation of sugar naturally present in the apples. Adulterated ciders have been analyzed in the bureau which ran as high as 10 per cent alcohol by volume and over (11). This excessive alcohol was produced by added sugar before fermentation.

Elderberry wine: As made in the home this article varies much in alcohol content depending on the formula used. The natural sugar of the berries (4 to 6 per cent sugar) is deficient for wine-making purposes. Sugar is therefore added in varying amounts. In addition to the alcohol produced by the fermentation of the sugar naturally present in the berries and the sugar added, most of the formulas call for an addition of alcohol or brandy (4, 5, and 9). By fermenting natural elderberry juice only about 3 per cent alcohol by volume would be formed (8). This content is increased by fermenting added sugar and by the addition of alcohol. An approximation of the alcohol content of most elderberry wines would be from 7 to 20 per cent by volume.

Blackberry cordial: As made in the home this product may be fermented or may depend entirely on added alcohol, according to the formula used. The product as made by the formula given in the National Formulary, 1916, page 7, is recognized as the official formula (10). This formula would yield a beverage with an alcohol content varying from 20 to 30 per cent by volume. If, however, the alcohol content is dependent on the fermentation of the natural juice of the blackberry, the alcohol content would be 3 to 5 per cent by volume. This is usually augmented by fermentation of added sugar or a straight addition of alcohol in some form.

Cherry bounce: This class of beverage is made from fruit or juice with rum added (1) or by adding alcohol or brandy to alternate layers of crushed fruit and sugar. As generally made it is not fermented. If it depended on the natural sugar content of cherries for its alcohol content, only about 4 to 7 per cent alcohol would be produced. Its alcohol content, therefore, depends on the extent to which the added alcohol is diluted by the fruit juice. Cherry bounce varies in alcohol content between the approximate range of 30 to 40 per cent by volume.

Peach bounce: This article is made in practically the same manner as cherry bounce, and the alcohol content when made as above would be about the same.

As general information, it may be stated that sugar will produce, when completely fermented, approximately one-half of its weight of alcohol. By complete fermentation of sugar only about 16 per cent by volume of alcohol can be produced. In order, therefore, to make a beverage containing more than 16 per cent by volume of alcohol it is necessary to add alcohol, usually in the form of a distillate. The production of alcohol from natural fruit is limited by the sugar content of the juice of the fruit, which may be augmented first by the addition of sugar and, secondly, the addition of alcohol.

Respectfully,

P. B. DUNBAR, Acting Chief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks by inserting the newspaper clippings in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from Washington, D. C., Evening Star, July 14, 1919.]

PROHIBITION AND "CRIME."

Representative KAHN'S figures showing that "crime" has increased in Washington since the local prohibition law went into effect are not conclusive. They undoubtedly show a greater number of cases in the police court and a larger amount of money collected from fines, but they fail to take into account the increase in population due to the war and they do not show the character of the cases brought into court. Until they can be analyzed to show proportion to the number of people in the District and to indicate the nature of the charges brought against defendants they are of no value in establishing an actual increase of what is broadly termed crime.

It is well known that a large percentage of the police court cases during the past 18 months are incident to the enforcement of the prohibition act. It was inevitable, with "wet" territory close at hand, that there should be much running of liquor into the District. The early efforts at enforcement were handicapped by lack of juries in the police court, which slowed the disposition of cases. Until the "bone-dry" amendment was extended to apply to the District, convictions were hard to obtain. When that law was made to apply to the District the war-time prohibition act was soon to take effect, and the result was a rush to bring liquor into Washington in anticipation of the drought after July 1. This fact alone would account for a material percentage of the increased number of court cases.

Washington is not crime ridden. It is an exceptionally peaceful, quiet, and safe place. The police are inadequate in numbers, and the problems here presented are difficult. Nevertheless, there is a small percentage of crime; and even in the extraordinary conditions that have prevailed during the past year and a half the city has been well ordered. Prohibition brought work for the police, undeniably, but the work has been as well done as the circumstances permitted. Nor are the police court records for the past few months a measure of the value to the community of the dry law, in the enforcement of which the passing conditions were a severe handicap.

(News items.)

W. U. WILL PROBE ALLEGED ASSAULT—SEEK GROUNDS TO PRESS CHARGES IN BEHALF OF "MESSENGER GIRL."

Investigation into a reported attack upon a Western Union messenger girl while in the subway connecting the Senate Office Building with the Capitol Friday afternoon was taken up by Western Union officials to-day with intent to press charges against the alleged assailant of the girl.

According to reports, the girl was coming through the subway with messages on Friday afternoon when a white man stopped her and attempted to make an engagement for the evening. On her refusal, Capitol police say, he grabbed her and attempted to force personal attentions on her. She screamed, and the approach of footsteps caused him to release her.

The girl rode up into the Capitol building in the same elevator with the man. She did not make a complaint until some time later, and a detective from the police headquarters in the Capitol was assigned to the case.

BEGIN PROBE AT ONCE.

When the matter was brought before H. F. Taff, general superintendent of this district of the Western Union Co., this morning, he declared that an investigation would begin at once.

W. R. Williams, district manager, and a superintendent of delivery, under whose jurisdiction the girl was working, went to the Capitol this morning to investigate the charges.

"If we find any basis whatever for prosecution," declared Mr. Williams, "we will press charges. The company intends to look after the interests of its woman employees, especially, to the fullest extent. If we get this man and have any sort of a case whatever, we will press the charges to the finish. We believe that an example should be made of the man, in order to safeguard the interests of the other messenger girls in the employ of the company. The company will take up the fight on the verification of any charges."

DESERTED FOR SEVERAL MINUTES.

During late hours of the afternoon the subway between the Senate Office Building and the Capitol is often deserted except for a few pedestrians passing at short intervals of time between the offices. At some periods as much as 5 or 10 minutes elapses before anyone passes. It was in one of these periods of desertion, it is declared, that the alleged attack was made.

Police at the Capitol on finding reluctance on the part of the girl to press charges declared that they would make an examination of the charges at any rate, and assigned a detective to the work. The man who grabbed the girl is not believed to have been an employee of the Capitol by them. It is said, however, that he had been seen loitering in the vicinity of the subway several times.

COLORED MAN FATALLY SHOT OVER CRAPS GAME—ALLEGED ASSAILANT OF "PEP" JACKSON THIS MORNING THOUGHT TO HAVE LEFT CITY.

Richard Jackson, colored, familiarly known to his friends as "Pep" Jackson, is dead of a bullet wound in his stomach, and the police are looking for James Porter Marshall, also colored, as his alleged slayer. The shooting took place about 2.15 o'clock this morning in the home of Jackson, 2025 Virginia Avenue, the wounded man dying at Emergency Hospital three hours later.

Several acquaintances of "Pep" Jackson assembled at his house last night and participated in games of cards and craps, according to witnesses' statements to the police, and Marshall, angered by the loss of his money, is alleged to have left the house, returned a few minutes later, and fired two shots, without giving Jackson the slightest opportunity to defend himself.

"GUESTS" FRIGHTENED AWAY.

Frightened at the sight of the weapon and reports of the shots, three of Jackson's guests quickly made themselves scarce. They remained out of sight until they were satisfied that the armed man was where he could not shoot them. Then they went to the assistance of their dying companion.

Mrs. Jackson, aroused by the reports of the pistol shots, hurried to the lower floor and found her husband on the floor giving evidence of intense suffering. Detectives from police headquarters and the third precinct police reached the house before the wounded man was taken to the hospital.

WOULD NOT NAME SLAYER.

Efforts to have him name his slayer proved unsuccessful. Several times he was asked if he would tell who shot him, the police stated, and each time his answer was in the negative.

"No" was his response to the question put by a detective.

"Let me alone," he added, "I'm suffering."

Surgeons from Emergency Hospital gave the wounded man first aid. He died without making a statement of the affair.

Information obtained by the police early to-day suggested the probability of the alleged slayer having left the city shortly after the shooting. Marshall, who resided at 621 New Hampshire Avenue, formerly lived at 201 West Sixty-first Street, New York City, the police learned. He came here several years ago.

DESCRIPTION OF MARSHALL.

Detective Edward Weedon, night chief of detectives, sent several members of the detective force to the scene of the crime. It is thought two upper gold teeth of Marshall's will assist in his capture. He is 33 years old, has what the police term reddish-yellow skin, and smooth face. He wore a brown suit with a green stripe and a yellowish panama hat.

Jackson's body was taken to the morgue to-day. An autopsy performed by the deputy coroner showed the cause of death, and Coroner Nevitt arranged to hold an inquest later.

WATCHES, CASH, CHECKS, THIEVES' MAIN BOOTY—WOMAN ROBBED IN THEATER, WHILE HOME, STORES, AND HUCKSTER WAGON ARE LOOTED.

Watches, cash, and checks formed the principal objects of loot in robberies during the past 36 hours in thefts totaling several hundreds of dollars.

Police were told that Mrs. Ella Louise Yeager, of the Bristol apartments, was the victim of a theft in a downtown moving-picture theater, losing a United States pay check for $25 and $12 in cash. The money and check was in a long tan leather purse, which Mrs. Yeager laid on an adjoining seat, from which it disappeared.

Alexander Petlon, a roomer at 722 Fifth Street, reported stolen from his room yesterday a gold watch valued at $50. Another watch theft was reported by Max Ladle, of 1427 Fifth Street, who told the police that a gold hunting-case watch and chain had been stolen from him while at Eaton Hill, Anacostia, yesterday.

James Maladets, of 919 Twenty-second Street, reported to the police that $85 in bills and four checks had been stolen from his huckster wagon in front of 1775 California Street.

Theodore Petty, proprietor of a barber shop at 802 M Street, told the police that on Saturday night a boy was given $75 to take to his home and that the boy failed to do so.

George F. Morris, manager of a store at Connecticut Avenue and Van Ness Street, reported that his store had been broken into Saturday night and $25 in cash and cigars and cigarettes to the value of $10 had been stolen. Twelve gallons of gasoline had also been stolen from the tank in front of the store.

Fifty dollars in silver was stolen from the store of Lewis Cohn at 408 Twenty-sixth Street by a "jimmy thief," according to a report received by the police last night.

THIRTY-FIVE "DRUNKS" ARRESTED IN DRY WASHINGTON.

More than 35 cases of intoxication were recorded on the police-court blotter to-day. This is the largest number which has been in court since July 1. Twenty-six persons were locked up, while the others forfeited collateral of $50.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not want to take up any of the valuable time of this House, but for a moment or two I desire to answer the statement that has just been made by my good friend from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN submitted certain figures to the House relative to the increase in cases in the police courts of Washington, which he contended showed an increase in crime in this city under prohibition.

I desire to say that those figures do not correctly represent the situation, and I wish to take direct issue with the gentleman from California and show that there has been a very great decrease in crime in Washington under prohibition, in spite of the great increase in population during the war and the general social unrest growing out of the war, which is apparent in all centers of population, whether under prohibition or not, and which unrest is made more difficult to handle wherever the saloon and drinking places openly and publicly exist.

In answer to the gentleman from California I wish to first quote from the 1918 report of the superintendent of police of Washington, Maj. Pullman, who says:

In actual figures, from November 1 to July 1, under license, there were 6,771 arrests in the eight months' period. In the same period under prohibition there were only 2,863 arrests, a decrease of 3,908 cases, or nearly 58 per cent decrease for the eight months.

[Applause.]

Regarding the police-court records which were quoted in the attempt to show that prohibition is not effective and beneficial in Washington, I wish to say that these figures are absolutely refuted by the statistics, which show a most marked decrease of almost 200 per cent in the total number of crimes for which prisoners in the District receive sentence, in the reduction of commitments to the workhouse, and in the figures showing the result of war emergency prohibition.

In the year ending June 30, 1917, the total number of crimes for which prisoners received sentence in the Washington courts was 6,222. This was the last year of the open saloons in Washington. In the year ending June 30, 1918, the number was 3,537, and in the year ending June 30, 1919, the number was 2,511. [Applause.] For violations of the excise and kindred laws, the number of cases for the year ending June 30, 1917, was 3,524; for the year ending June 30 1918, was 1,976; and for the year ending June 30, 1919, was 1,184. It should be remembered that this reduction occurred during war conditions, when the population of Washington was increasing by leaps and bounds.

When general war-time prohibition went into effect on July 1 last, figures show that there was a considerable decrease noticeable at once in arrests in Washington for violation of the liquor laws. Liquor could not be obtained, so readily at least, in Baltimore and other near-by points, and immediately the number of arrests in Washington dropped. For the first 13 days of July, 1918, the number of arrests in Washington for violation of the liquor laws was 223. For the first 13 days of July, 1919, the number of similar arrests was 129. [Applause.] For the first 13 days of June, 1919, the number of such arrests was 242. With the coming of war emergency prohibition on July 1 there has been a reduction in the violations of the liquor laws in comparison with a similar period during any one of the preceding six months.

Concerning the police court cases there has been an increase in the number of cases and the amount collected in fines. This is readily explained and does not indicate increased crime or drunkenness in Washington since prohibition became effective in the District of Columbia in the fall of 1917.

In the District of Columbia branch of the police court are tried all offenses against municipal regulations, and the figures presented can by no process of reasoning be accepted as an indication of any marked increase in crime.

The increase in the number of cases filed and in the amount collected in fines and forfeitures is the natural result of the tremendous increase in population and the resultant increase in the number of arrests for violations of the various municipal regulations and also to the increase in the number of arrests made for violations of the Sheppard law.

A large proportion of the increase is accounted for by reason of the fact that the increase in population brought about a great influx of vehicles, and numerous arrests for violations of the traffic regulations resulted.

While the figures in the United States branch of the police court for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, also show a considerable increase when compared with those of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, such increase can be largely accounted for by reason of the fact that all informations for violations of the Reed bone-dry amendment and for selling liquor within 5 miles of a military reservation are filed in the United States branch of the police court.

The great increase in the amount of fines imposed and collected is also accounted for by the fact that the fines for violations of the kind mentioned were in most cases very heavy, and in many cases were paid.

Mr. Chairman, I rose at this time only with the object of defending the good name of the District of Columbia. After the statements by the gentleman from California on this floor last Saturday the big newspapers all over the country carried it in great headlines that the District of Columbia was overrun with crime, and that there was more crime here at this time than there ever was before in the history of this city.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. I have only five minutes and I wish the gentleman would excuse me. We all know war conditions have brought an increase of population into this city. We know that war conditions have brought an increase of crime all over this country. It is not only true in the city of Washington to some extent, and it is admitted that there have been some very serious crimes committed here in this city in the last six months.

But that in no way can be attributed to prohibition of the liquor traffic in the city of Washington. And of the number of cases which the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] referred to, in the police court, I was told by Maj. Pullman that not one of those 17,000 cases which he referred to was a criminal offense except those for violation of the liquor law [applause]; that they were all misdemeanors for violation of the traffic laws, of the health code, and the building code, and so forth. He informed me that the District police court did not try criminal cases except bootlegging cases and violations of the liquor law. I desire to say a word about Maj. Pullman and the police force of this city. The people of the District are proud of Maj. Pullman, for he is one of the most efficient and capable officials in the country, and he has surrounded himself with a high-class force of officers, and I, with many other Members of Congress, heartily commend him for the splendid, efficient service they are performing for this city. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will you please have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. REAVIS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 57, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 5, line 18, after the word "thereof" strike out the words "may summarily try and punish the defendant" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"May try the accused, or upon demand of the accused a trial may be by jury, in which latter event the court may impanel a jury from the jurors then in attendance, or the court or the judge thereof in chambers may cause a sufficient number of jurors to be selected and summoned, as provided by law, to attend at the time and place of trial, at which time a jury shall be selected and impaneled as upon the trial for misdemeanor, and such trial shall conform, as near as may be, to practice in criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or upon information."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the language which I have placed in this amendment is the verbatim language adopted by the Sixty-third Congress of the United States in 1914, appearing in volume 38 of the Statutes at Large of the United States at page 739. The policy which led to the enactment of this legislation, which is still upon the statute books, was the policy of giving every laboring man a square deal before court and jury. Therefore, it was written into the law as it appears in section 21 of this act:

That any person who shall willfully disobey any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of any district court of the United States or any court of the District of Columbia * * * shall be proceeded against for his said contempt as hereinafter provided.

And the provision affecting the phrase "hereinafter provided" is that—

In all cases within the purview of this act such trial may be by the court or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury.

Now, the subsequent language which I have adopted here is the exact verbatim language of this particular section, concerning the way in which trial for contempt may be had by a jury, to wit, by impaneling of juries from the jurymen in term or by selection by the court. The whole question resolves itself down to this, gentlemen of the committee, whether we are to adopt in this law the language which the Congress of the United States has heretofore adopted in regard to all courts or whether we are to revert to the old process of dealing summarily in all questions of contempt.

It has been my idea that the Congress once having definitely established the fact that no matter with what offense a man may be charged upon contempt, that upon that charge he may present to the court—referring to the charge against him—a demand for a trial by jury, and thereupon he may have that trial by jury, and that there should be no recision from that established principle of legal procedure here at this time.

I know my attitude has been to attempt to write here a reasonable code for the enforcement of the law. I want to be a party to such a code as will carry out the meaning and intent of the terms of war-time prohibition, if that is to be considered, and of the eighteenth constitutional amendment, and I know that should be considered. And in doing that I want to apply to this act as nearly as I can the existing laws of the United States of America. This is an existing law. It provides that a man charged with contempt of court may have a right to trial by jury. This includes in the list of those cases men who may come to the bar of justice if upon contempt for a violation of this war-time prohibition act. And I say right here, I intend to offer this amendment in the same language when I reach the section carrying into effect the constitutional prohibition. I think that is a matter where the fairness of the legislative body of the United States, heretofore evidenced, as it has been evidenced and heretofore carried out, as it has been carried out since 1914, should be continued and should not be abridged, and the guaranteed right of trial by jury should not be denied.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, and Mr. JUUL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anyone who has had any experience with liquor laws and is in favor of enforcing the law would offer such an amendment. Turn to the statutes in the various States where they have attempted to enforce prohibition, and you will find that enforcement by injunction is the method that they practically all rely on.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I will not yield. I decline because I have only five minutes.

Not very long ago New York—I do not know just how long ago—passed a local option law. The old State of New York, a section from which so many arguments for constitutional liberty have come on this floor in connection with this legislation—old New York wrote the provision for an injunction into its statutes and took the jury trial away in these cases. The only way you can enforce a prohibition statute, the only way it has been found practical to enforce it, is by injunction. There is no other crime where so much ingenuity is displayed in trying to evade, in trying to defeat, the statutes as in the illegal sale of liquor. And with a jury there is always the appeal to the man who is a neighbor that sympathizes with the lawbreaker. In cities like New York, Chicago, and many other places, a law such as this amendment would make it would be a farce, and you know it.

I am going to be frank with you. If we mean to enforce this law, if we mean to write upon the statute books something that will honestly and fairly mean prohibition of the liquor traffic, we ought not to flinch from using the necessary means. The courts have repeatedly held that it is legal to enforce such laws by injunction. We are not depriving anyone of a jury trial guaranteed to him by the Constitution. Are we to take the method for enforcement that has always been a failure or the method that is known to be successful? That is the question. If anyone can point out to me a single instance where they have been able to enforce this kind of a law without this remedy, I would like to know where it is.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman speaks of intrusting the jury with the determination of facts. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to intrust such a question to 12 jurors in his State?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I challenge the gentleman to point out a single instance in a wet locality where it is possible to enforce this law without this remedy. It is a question of whether we believe in prohibition or not. I appeal to the Members in favor of prohibition to oppose this amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SABATH. I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by striking out all after the word "jury."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], which the Clerk will report. Will the gentleman state his amendment?

Mr. SABATH. For that purpose, Mr. Chairman, I will move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], notwithstanding the objection of the chairman of the committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD], should prevail. All that that amendment aims to do is to secure for a man who is held in contempt by any judge the right of trial by jury.

Now, some of you older Members will recall that for years we tried to bring about legislation that would eliminate these abuses on the part of judges, who, without reason and frequently without justification, would hold men guilty of contempt of court without giving them any chance or opportunity to be heard, and after many years we finally succeeded in passing the act in which that great power, which had been abused by a majority of Federal judges, was taken away, and the right of trial by jury given rightfully to such accused defendants.

Now, I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, has so little confidence in the citizenship of America, that he has so little confidence in the people and citizens in his own State and in his own district, as not to trust them to pass honestly and fairly upon the question of whether a man is actually guilty or not of an offense or any violation of any injunction which may issue in his district or in his State. I myself have the utmost confidence in the citizenship of the people, not only of the gentleman's State but of our entire country. If you prohibitionists are afraid to leave the question of guilt to a jury of 12 men and depend upon some prohibition judge to enforce it, then indeed you yourselves realize that the law is unfair, unjust, and incapable of enforcement.

Now, I repeat, I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of this committee, should take the position that he has taken. The right of trial by jury ought not to be denied to a man accused of any offense or crime. That has been granted to him, and it should not be taken away from him. For that reason I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I take it that every man in the House is in favor of the enforcement of the law on this amendment, and if this war-time prohibition proposition is not cut out of the bill they are also in favor of the enforcement of that law. The eighteenth amendment was adopted by an overwhelming majority of the American States and of the American people. If it is good, the people will know it. If it is bad, the best way to get rid of it is to enforce it. So, good or bad, it should be enforced—honestly, fairly, and reasonably. I am in favor of giving these men the right of a trial by jury. [Applause.] The right to trial by jury is one of our most ancient and fundamental rights, and has been ever since Runnymede. In fact, the barons who made Magna Charta always claimed that that great paper merely set forth their immemorial rights.

Lord Henry Brougham said that all the machinery of law and legislation was consummated in getting 12 good men into a box, and I believe it. I take it that I have had as much experience in trying criminal cases as any man in the House. All of this talk of not being able to enforce prohibition laws is tommyrot, absolutely. I enforced it when I was prosecuting attorney. We had one of the most stringent local-option laws that was ever put on the statute books of any State in the Union, and I can prove that by appealing to Judge ALEXANDER and all the rest of these Missourians here. He was a circuit judge at the time. I enforced that law just as I would have enforced any other law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the law had not been stringent. Would you have enforced a lax law?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would have enforced whatever law there was, whether it was stringent or not stringent. [Applause.]

The truth is that I voted against the adoption of the local-option law in my county because my predecessor, as prosecuting attorney, and myself had both enforced the old dram-shop law, and we had broken up every blind tiger, blind pig, speakeasy, or whatever you choose to call it in the county, and I did not think we needed the new law. I knew that the stiff penalty in the local-option law would make it harder for me to enforce it than it was to enforce the old law. That is, I knew it would be harder to secure convictions. But I only had to crack two of them to break it up entirely. I sent one fellow to jail for 12 months and fined him $300, and stuck the next bootlegger for six months, and that was the end of it. They quit. And, the truth is, the best thing that the temperance people could have done 10 or 15 years ago was to have elected prosecuting attorneys who had the courage and the honesty to enforce the laws as they found them on the statute books.

I will tell you about judges. You can take the most mild-mannered and tender-hearted man you ever saw, make him a judge for life, and his disposition to tyrannize over people will grow with what it feeds on. [Applause.] I will give you the finest example of that in all history. Robespierre, one of the bloodiest despots that the sun ever shone on, when he was a young man was very modest, unassuming, tender-hearted. He was a criminal judge, and he resigned his office rather than pass sentence of death on a man who had been convicted. Yet he lived to cut off the heads of two or three hundred people every morning before breakfast, who had committed no crime whatever, with as little compunction as though they were flies instead of human beings. The English law will not allow a butcher to sit on a jury in a capital case, because the English people hold that the shedding of the blood of lower animals hardens the hearts of men, and that butchers would be very free about shedding the blood of human beings brought before them if they were sitting as jurors.

While I am at it, I want to make another remark or two. I am willing to trust the American jury. [Applause.] There has never been devised by the wit of man a better way to administer justice than that. Of course, juries go wrong sometimes. We all know that. They have brought in verdicts against me sometimes, not only in criminal cases but in civil cases, that made me doubt their sanity; but the same rule that applies to them applies to the judges also. Everybody knows that who has practiced law any.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Judges are just as apt to go wrong as juries are. I lay that down as a proposition that I can prove by all the Supreme Court reports, not only the Supreme Court of the United States but of every State in the Union. Somewhere from one-fourth to one-half of all the cases that are tried in the nisi prius courts are reversed in the superior courts, and the juries could not do worse than that. The juries are picked from the best men in the community. Lawyers on both sides examine them thoroughly on their voir dire to ascertain whether they have formed or expressed any opinion and ask them some other questions that are pertinent in determining their qualifications. Of course, once in a while you run across a fellow who does not know which side he is on. There used to be a very smart man in the county in which I now live who was a great wag. He was summoned to serve on a jury and was examined on his voir dire. He swore that he had not formed or expressed an opinion about the case. Col. Thomas L. Anderson, a fine man and an ex-Member of Congress, took him in hand to cross-examine him. He said, "My friend, you say you have formed no opinion in this case?"

"No; I have formed no opinion."

"Have you talked with anybody who pretended to know the facts of this case?"

"Yes; both the plaintiff and the defendant told me all about it."

Col. Anderson asked, "How does it happen, then, that you have not formed an opinion?"

"They are both such infernal liars that I would not believe either of them on oath." [Laughter.]

I want to say this to the gentlemen who are running this thing, that you can make this law so stringent that you will hurt your own case. [Applause.] There is not any question about that.

The average citizen out in the country and a good many legislators have the idea that the severer you make the penalty the better law you get. That is not true at all. You can make the penalties so stiff and severe that men will get out of convicting a man if they can without committing perjury. All these things that irritate the people without contributing to the main cause of reasonable enforcement of the prohibition amendment are simply holding up, militating against, the enforcement of the law.

The idea that a man shall not have a particle of whisky or anything of that kind that will make a man drunk in his own house will prove to be a hindrance to the enforcement of this law. I do not want any whisky in my house; I have not got any either. I do not need it. I can not drink it without the risk of getting drunk, so I quit it. [Laughter.] I do not keep it around. I never did keep it around. [Laughter] I repeat that every man in this House that is honest is in favor of the reasonable enforcement of this law.

They had up a great hullabaloo the other day—the question of whether one-half of 1 per cent or 2.75 per cent was intoxicating. I do not believe there is any sense in Congress fixing the amount of alcohol in intoxicating liquor. The question, in my judgment, is for the courts to decide. I will tell you how to find out exactly whether 2.75 per cent beer is intoxicating. If these fellows will send every Member of the House a quart of 2.75 per cent beer and require him to drink it in 30 minutes, then he can tell whether it is intoxicating or not. [Laughter and applause.]

When I was a prosecuting attorney they adopted a local-option law, and all the druggists in the county joined in a letter to me to find out what they could do and what they could not. After a week's study I decided that they could not sell any intoxicating liquor except the alcohol of commerce for medicinal, art, and mechanical purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I studied the question conscientiously and read every decision rendered that I could find, and I put a tailpiece to it, that if these proprietary or patent medicines contained more than 3 per cent of alcohol they were barred. It got so that the druggists would not buy from the drummers until the drummers came to me and submitted their formulas, and the result was that I knew more about proprietary medicines at the end of my term of office than any other man in the county.

One fellow sent me a bottle of malt extract. I did not have any chemical apparatus to analyze it, and so I drank it to observe the symptoms. [Laughter.] I wrote him and told him it was barred. [Great laughter.] It had about as much alcohol in it as bock beer. At that time keg beer had 3 per cent alcohol and bock beer had 5 and whisky had 21½.

One day I had been at the extreme end of the county trying a case, and came back in the afternoon, got my mail and started home. An old druggist named Clark—no kin of mine—came out and said: "Hey, you were not here to-day. There was a drummer here, and I ordered three cases of rock and rye; what about it?" I said, "Doctor, you have drunk a great deal of whisky, and I have drunk more than was good for me. Suppose that you were put on the witness stand as an expert and was asked what kind of tipple is rock and rye?" He said he would swear it was a pretty damn good tipple. [Laughter.]

We should take out of this bill everything that is calculated to be unnecessarily irritating and pass a good enforcement law and enforce it. The United States Government has plenty of men roaming around over the country to catch fellows who violate the law.

They tried it in Iowa once when they passed a search-and-seizure law, and it created such an upheaval that at the next election—they went around and searched people's houses, dragging women out of bed and examining the bed to see if they had intoxicating liquors in the bedtick—that at the next election, for the first time after the Republican Party was organized they elected Gov. Boies, a Democrat, and reelected him governor two years later.

Neither the Democrats nor the Republicans want to put oppressive features in the bill—features so irritating and obnoxious as to create open revolt against its enforcement.

Where there is an item that I think is oppressive I am going to vote against it, and wherever I think it is not oppressive I am going to vote for it, because we want to enforce this law; but I insist on the right of trial by jury. [Applause.]

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been listening to arguments upon this prohibition bill more or less for the last 30 or 40 days. I have heard it stated a great many times by gentlemen that they are in favor of a law that would enforce the constitutional amendment, but they immediately follow up that statement with an argument or a suggestion to weaken the law. I have heard gentlemen on this floor make the argument, when it seemed to suit them, in striking out a minimum fine that certainly we could trust the judges, and thus weaken the law. When that is passed and it comes to the question of an injunction, as, for instance, against a black drunken devil who will rape a white woman in the city of Washington, they want a jury trial and can not trust the judge. That is the attitude of the gentlemen who are not in favor of a strict enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

From my experience upon the bench in Iowa, where we have a drastic law governing the sale of intoxicating liquor, we have the enforcement of that law by injunction, and we are pretty well able to enforce it. Yet it is the hardest kind of a law to enforce that was ever written upon the statute books, because the men who are violating it are without principle whatsoever. They do not care for humanity. They care for the dollar that it will bring, and the courts have recognized the fact that they have to take hold of the enforcement of this law with a firmer grip, in behalf of the people and in behalf of sobriety and decency, than is usual in the execution of the ordinary criminal statutes. [Applause.] While it is true they did elect a Democratic governor in the State of Iowa, as ex-Speaker CLARK says, it was at a time when the Republican Party in the State became a band of cowards politically. But after the election of a Democratic governor for two terms the Republican Party went back into power and it enacted the most stringent law governing the sale of intoxicating liquors that Iowa or any other State ever had, and it has been enforced to the letter so far as it is possible to enforce it. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not desire to take very much of the time of the committee in the discussion of this bill, because I believe that no argument or discussion here will change a single vote on this question. It is a question that has been debated and argued for several decades. The country at large has spoken in no uncertain tones, and no doubt Congress, as well as the country, is now ready to accept the situation of the abolishment of the saloon and the liquor traffic.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, if the country has spoken in such absolute and uncertain terms——

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. We are ready for a saloonless Nation. Forty-five out of the 48 States have ratified the prohibition amendment, and I understand that 15 States have already passed prohibitory laws in which they prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor or beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, and that 13 other States have passed prohibitory laws in which they prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor or beverages containing any quantity of alcohol. Thus it is seen that a big majority of the legislatures of the United States have gone on record for prohibitory legislation that is fully as drastic, if not more drastic, than the legislation which is contemplated in the bill under consideration.

I am, therefore, in favor of the bill as it now stands. We can not make the enforcement code too drastic if we are to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcohol. The only way to prohibit is to make a law that will prohibit it from being manufactured and sold. [Applause.]

But what I particularly arose to address myself to at this time is to the statement that was made the other day on the floor of the House by the very distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and reiterated to-day, who attempted to draw the conclusion in his speech that crime has increased rather than decreased during the dry régime in Washington, D. C., and that this is indicative of what would be expected to happen all over the United States if the dry bill as proposed should be enacted. I am very sorry that it becomes necessary for me to contradict my distinguished friend and gentleman from California, for whom I have the very highest respect, but I believe that he has been very much misled in his information as to the applications of the facts and figures which he gives. This is a direct reflection on the District of Columbia. I think that we should be very careful to be fair and square in all our arguments. I feel that in this debate too much of insincere propaganda and insincere hypocritical statements have been proposed by the advocates of John Barleycorn. It is to be expected that the representatives of the brewers and distillers would, in a most vigorous manner possible, defend their business, but I do not believe that as Representatives in Congress we should allow ourselves to make statements that are not warranted by the facts merely for the sake of making them in the interest of the liquor traffic.

I believe that as Members of Congress we should be careful to ascertain the truth and make the truth known, no matter where it hits. Now, it is very evident that the overwhelming evidence by courts and medical authorities and police records all over the country show conclusively that crime is increased where alcoholic liquors or beverages are allowed to be sold, and that crime, insanity, and disease are always resultant of the liquor traffic, and that a decrease in crime, insanity, and disease is a direct result from prohibition wherever it is in effect and enforced.

As a direct refutation of the statement of the gentleman from California concerning the ill effects of prohibition in the District of Columbia I wish to read a statement on page 13 of the report of Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, in which he says:

BENEFITS OF PROHIBITION.

When the Sheppard prohibition bill for the District of Columbia passed there was in the minds of many the belief that there would be no appreciable decrease in drunkenness because of the operation of the new law. Even the enemies of prohibition soon learned, however, that not only was there a great decrease of drunkenness, ranging from 50 to 76 per cent, under the amount of drunkenness during the same periods under license, but also that there was a great falling off in cases of disorderly conduct, assault, housebreaking, carrying of concealed weapons, cruelty to animals, and other offenses often growing out of intoxication. In actual figures, from November 1 to July 1, under license, there were 6,771 arrests in the eight months' period. In the same period under prohibition there were only 2,863 arrests, a decrease of 3,908 cases, or nearly 58 per cent decrease for the eight months. Persons who are open minded and who have given a reasonable amount of time to observing the operation of the law, even many of those who at first opposed the enactment of the Sheppard law, will now agree that the prohibition legislation has been a blessing and is perhaps the principal factor which has contributed to the lack of serious disorder or riots of any kind in the National Capital during the entire period of the war. In spite of the fact that through the interpretation of the law in the courts it is possible for persons to bring in as much liquor as they desire, providing they say it is for their own personal use, there has been a great improvement of conditions as a result of the operation of the law. While there naturally has been bootlegging with the liquor brought into the District of Columbia under the cover of the law, yet conditions are so greatly improved that there has been absolutely no trouble in handling the vast crowds which have swarmed the streets of the city during the war period. Hundreds violating the law have been arrested by the Metropolitan police.

I also wish to protest against the slander that has been attached to labor by the statements that have been made on this floor by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that the laboring men are overwhelmingly in favor of the liquor traffic. I do not believe that this is true. I believe that the labor element of our country is in favor of law enforcement, and in favor of removing the breeder of poverty, disease, and evil which King Alcohol has proven to be in our country. I also wish to protest against the slanderous statement that has been attached to our brave soldiers. The statement has been made in the progress of this debate that our returning soldiers are in favor of the saloon and the liquor traffic. I believe this is a base slander upon our brave soldiers who have offered their lives upon the altar of our country for its freedom and liberty. It is my judgment that the returning soldier is in favor of the removal of the liquor traffic. He is in favor of the highest and best ideals of our country, and that he will be against the greatest evil to-day that is sapping the very vitals and fundamentals of our Government, its happiness, and prosperity. I also rise to protest against the statement made by Mr. GALLIVAN, in which he accuses the drys of Congress as having their cellars and offices filled with booze enough to last for 20 years. Statements of this kind can not be regarded as arguments, and can bring about no good, and anyone knows that they are not in harmony with the facts.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill as it is drawn. I do not believe that we can make it too drastic. We must be sure that the liquor seller and bootlegger shall be dealt with in the most drastic manner possible, because if you do not, it is my experience of 22 years of fighting for the enforcement of the liquor laws in our own State that you open the way for lawlessness and the breaking of our prohibitory statutes wherever you make it possible to handle liquor at all, and that if you would change from one-half of 1 per cent to 2¾ per cent, you immediately open the door to all sorts of evasions of the law, and there is absolutely no way to get at the truth of the situation and bring conviction to the violator of the statutes.

John Barleycorn is dead. He has been convicted at the bar of justice of an awakened American citizenship. He has been consigned to the gallows and hung for his unspeakable crimes of the past. He is legally buried—forever buried—and there is very little use for the advocates of the liquor interests to try to resurrect him now. He can not be resurrected.

I therefore plead for an enforcement code that will make it possible to enforce our laws as they should be enforced—a code that will lead to a better citizenship, to better homes, to a happier condition of labor, and a nobler and better understanding of liberty and freedom. We must never forget that license is never liberty, and that the greater the liberty the more restricted it is. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line. I dislike very much to find myself in disagreement with the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, the ex-Speaker of this House, upon the question of the propriety of this provision and of certain other provisions of this bill, but I do find myself in disagreement with him, and therefore I am compelled to state the reasons why I believe the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Ohio and championed by the gentleman from Missouri ought not to be adopted. We must not lose sight of the fact that we are providing here for the punishment of men who violate an injunction which has been issued by a court. This does not provide for the original trial of men who are charged with a violation of this law. I take it for granted that there would be very few injunctions ever issued except against habitual criminals. If a man is once tried for selling liquor against the law and is fined or imprisoned, and thereafter ceases to violate the law, there would be no occasion to have an injunction issued against him or against his place of business; but the object of this bill is not only to make it possible to enforce the law but to put teeth in it that will enable the officers to enforce it, and one of the sharpest teeth that can be put in a statute of this kind for the enforcement of prohibition is to provide for an injunction law by which men may be enjoined from the commission of crimes habitually.

Now, some man might be tried and convicted by a jury for violating this law. He might a second time be tried and convicted by a jury, and thereafter being a habitual criminal or habitually using his business place or some other place for the illegal sale of liquor, then being a habitual criminal, the court issues an injunction against him against the further commission of the crime, and then he, under this amendment, either by summoning bystanders who are in the courtroom at the time or going out on the streets and dragging in other men, his case is entitled to a trial by jury, and that one man on that jury could nullify the act of a half a dozen other juries which have convicted him upon the evidence submitted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that some of the States, at least, have a statute which fixes a penalty for one offense and a higher penalty for another offense, and after the second conviction under the law he would be considered as a habitual criminal and have the butt end of the statute?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I understand if a man is convicted of a felony once and is convicted a second time he might be sent to the penitentiary for life upon conviction for the third offense, providing the previous convictions are set out in the indictment and are proved. But that does not meet the situation here. Some of these offenses will not be felonies; they may be misdemeanors, and they are misdemeanors. The mere selling of liquor in violation of the law is not necessarily made a felony.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. And a man can not be sent to the penitentiary for life or get the butt end, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, merely for the repetition of a misdemeanor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that I may have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that he have three additional minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to refer to another suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri, not because it is important with respect to this amendment but because it does come up a little later in Title II, which is intended to enforce national prohibition. The gentleman said he does not think we ought to fix the alcoholic limit or any alcoholic content as being intoxicating, but it should be left to the courts or juries of the various States. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his own State has a statute which fixes one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol as making liquor intoxicating. [Applause.] If we did not fix the alcoholic content either at one-half of 1 per cent or some other per cent, under the practice that is in vogue in the Federal courts it will be left to the laws of the various States, and we might have a jury in Kansas say that one-half of 1 per cent is intoxicating, and we might have a jury in New York say that 5 per cent is not intoxicating, and the Supreme Court might be compelled to hold both decisions to be legal, and we would have no standard applying to the whole country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But when these various decisions go to the Supreme Court of the United States, would not the decision of the Supreme Court settle it for all time?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all, because the decision of the Supreme Court will be based upon the law of the States in the case where tried unless Congress itself fixes the standard.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. And also upon the evidence which would be offered in each case?

Mr. BARKLEY. And also upon the evidence offered in each case. What I am very anxious about at this time is the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio which gives a man the right to bring in a jury in cases of injunction where the court has based its injunction upon evidence either adduced before it or upon numerous trials already had in court where men have been convicted of crime. And if you give them the right to trial by jury in such cases you thereby take away from this law one of the provisions that will enable the Federal officers to enforce it, and therefore I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to know if there is any way by which we can reach an agreement as to time for debate on this section?

Mr. GARD. We can not hear what the gentleman says over here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would like to know if there is some way of reaching an agreement as to the length of time to be devoted to this section. We have been discussing it now for quite a long time. Would 10 minutes more be satisfactory?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to this section which I desire to offer, and I believe is in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia and ought to have discussion on the floor.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that in 30 minutes all debate upon this section and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time be equally divided between those in favor and those opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is to me a very remarkable exhibition. The last two gentlemen who rose, opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], based their opposition on some strange grounds. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be unfair to the arguments of either of the gentlemen, but, as I recall it and understood it, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES] based his opposition to this amendment on the ground that violators of this law, those to whom it was intended to apply, were such natural liars and criminals that they were not entitled to the essence of justice or a trial by jury. And the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARCLAY] based his argument on the ground that parties to be charged with violation of this law being habitual offenders ought not to be entitled to drag a jury in in order to have a jury trial.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No; I have not the time.

Three or four or five years ago we came into power in this Congress largely because we denounced the tyranny of government by injunction, and we demanded for all persons who were charged with contempt of court, when committed outside of the court, that they be given the right of a trial by jury. When we came into power we passed this law, applying to all contempt proceedings (Stat. L., vol. 38, p. 739):

> In all cases within the purview of this act such trial may be by the court, or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury; in which latter event the court may impanel a jury from the jurors then in attendance, or the court or judge thereof in chambers may cause a sufficient number of jurors to be selected and summoned, as provided by law, to attend at the time and place of trial, at which time a jury shall be selected and impaneled as upon a trial for misdemeanor; and such trial shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice in criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or upon information.

When I campaigned the country and when I helped pass that law I said that as I believed in justice and equality before the law I believed that every citizen had the right to a trial by jury when his life or liberty was involved. [Applause.] We all then believed it. And yet gentlemen tell me to-day that if a man is a habitual criminal, or is charged with a violation of prohibition laws, he has not the right to a trial by jury on a question of fact involving his guilt or innocence. It is a strange thing when those who claim the heritage of law procedure handed down to Anglo-Saxon peoples from Alfred the Great get into a legislative body and denounce the proposed provision for a trial by jury as being a weakening of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have prosecuted criminals, those who had violated local-option statutes, and I have spent days and nights in the prosecution of them, but I have never asked more than an honest jury to determine whether or not they were guilty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will be glad to do so if the gentleman will give me two and one-half minutes.

Mr. SABATH. How much time did the gentleman have, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. I do not think he could have had five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the Chair, I do not think the gentleman from Texas occupied five minutes. I know the Chair is sincere, but the gentleman talked only a little over two minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, he has not talked for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed five minutes by the clock.

Mr. GARD. Then the hands must have been rather elastic.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more, not to be taken out of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] be given two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that in addition to the 30 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. To be taken out of the 30 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think under the circumstances I would be justified in asking that, because there is a serious difference of opinion among the members of the committee whether he talked five minutes or not, and I think the gentleman from Texas should be given the benefit of the doubt. And I therefore ask unanimous consent that he be given an additional two minutes, not to be taken from the 30 minutes of time allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed two additional minutes, not to be taken from the 30 minutes for debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which asks that a man charged with violating even a temporary order of a court, issued upon an ex parte affidavit, may have a jury trial is a simple appeal to the old love of freedom that once spread all over this land, and that ought to be able to stand in the heart of an American Congress, no matter how hard the wind blows, how fierce the tide rolls, in any particular direction. [Applause.] And if there be a sentiment in this country that demands that liberty perish in order that some law may be strenuously, if not justly, enforced, for God's sake let the American Congress stand against it and say that the trial by jury of any citizen accused of crime for which he may forfeit his life, his liberty, or his property shall remain sacred. [Applause.] That is, as it always has been, the bulwark of human liberty. We owe to all our people high duties—none higher than the duty to hold sacred the right to a trial by jury for any man, high or low, rich or poor, who is accused of crime. That is all I am asking you to do now.

I return the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I just want to take about two minutes. I happen to have been prosecuting attorney for eight years in Ohio under some liquor laws very similar to the law we are trying to enact here. I defended—and I am not bragging about it—about 150 men charged with bootlegging. The first acquittal I got happened to be in a case where the prosecution was conducted by Wayne B. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, and I was elected prosecuting attorney for both my second term and third term with the opposition of the officials of the Anti-Saloon League. But I want to state to you gentlemen, and particularly to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], that if you give a fairly good lawyer a bootlegging case, and if he can not hang a jury or acquit his client, he is not much of an attorney. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; gladly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I had a case before a jury and sent a man to jail for 12 months and fined him $300 for bootlegging, and hung on to him in the Supreme Court. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. During the eight years that I was prosecuting attorney I convicted 104 men that were sent to the penitentiary, and 98 of those men would never have been sent to the penitentiary if it had not been for intoxicating liquor. That is the reason why I am on this side of this question to-day.

I want to say this, that in those liquor cases in which I defended—and I am not bragging of it—I reached the conclusion that any man who wants, honestly, to stand for the strict enforcement of the liquor law does not want to turn around and give a jury trial to a man charged with violating the liquor laws of the State or Nation, either one. If you do that you will make a farce of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that under this amendment a man may be convicted 12 times for the violation of this law?

Mr. FOSTER. I am addressing myself to the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. What he said was true, but my experience of eight years in that office and eight years out of it has convinced me that in liquor cases we can more safely trust a court on questions of fact than a jury. I venture to say, with all due respect to the membership of this House, that if we would go over both sides of this House and pick out 12 men generally from it who would serve as a jury, you could not either acquit or convict in a "bootlegging" case. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that a man may be convicted originally 12 times for the violation of this law?

Mr. FOSTER. With a jury?

Mr. BARKLEY. With a jury; and then some court might issue an injunction against him to try to get him to stop, and then if they can get one man hung on that jury you would lose the case?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. That applies also when men are charged with murder.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not a lawyer in Chicago who could act as prosecuting attorney or district attorney with a jury in cases of this kind and secure conviction, and the liquid gentleman from Illinois knows it. I am a new man here who does not know all the ins and outs of the workings of this House, but I know that a Chicago jury would not convict such a man in such cases.

Mr. SABATH. Have you ever heard of a jury acquitting a man of murder? Is it not understood that a jury enforces criminal statutes?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; but it is known that every man who wants a jury trial wants it for the purpose of hanging the jury. That is true, and nobody knows that better than the gentleman himself.

The only reason why I appear to take so decided a stand on this question is that I had some knowledge of the facts as prosecuting attorney for eight years where dozens of fine young men were sent to the penitentiary who never would have gone but for this damnable thing of rum. Those who are in favor of the enforcement of national prohibition ought not to shut their eyes to the fact that the moment you adopt this amendment, or any amendment giving general jury trials to men accused of the violation of these proposed laws, thereby you are weakening the enforcement of this national prohibition law.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. I should like to hear an argument on that side.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is it not a fact that the lawyers in criminal cases always ask for a jury trial rather than for trial by the court?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and you get a jury trial. Is it not a fact that every attorney, including the gentleman who now addresses me, who wants to acquit a criminal being tried for a violation of criminal laws, wants a jury trial every time, and does not want to leave it to the courts?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes. If I was trying to get convictions, I would always want to leave it to the court; but if I wanted justice in the administration of the law, under the system which we have inherited from England, I would appeal to a jury for the trial of a man accused of crime. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. I will reply in this way—waiving you to one side and putting you in a class by yourself——

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No; I am in the same class with the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. Taking the average man, who gets in the habit of wishing for an acquittal when he, as an attorney, is representing a client, looks to a jury, does he not?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Why does your side grant a jury?

Mr. FOSTER. Not having answered my inquiry, I will put the gentleman back in the class with the rest of us, who, when defending criminals, seek jury trials rather than courts.

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I heard the chairman of this committee ask that the time be allotted to those opposed to the bill and those for the bill. I assume that a Member can suggest some amendments to this bill even if he is not for or against every provision of it. There are certain technical provisions of this proposed law that we all ought to follow, and give to them, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says, some thought and consideration. It is all right to have 12 hours' general debate, but when you come to a section to confine the debate to 20 minutes is positively ridiculous. For instance, on page 3 of this bill you provide for liens, but at no place within the first title do you provide any method whereby a lien can be lifted. I want to suggest, at the end of line 15, on page 5, the words "except as hereinafter provided," and then make a proviso, that whenever an action is brought to enforce the lien a bond may be given to the amount of $1,000, and thereupon the lien shall be discharged. The maximum lien is $1,000 and costs. Why should property, during the pendency of your foreclosure action, be tied up immediately after the issuance of the summons and the filing of your lis pendens, as provided by the amendment which you have adopted? Why should not the bill provide some method whereby you can cancel the lien pending the action, and whereby the property may be made salable?

And then, in reference to the general proposition, if war prohibition is now to be enforced, why should not Title I be enacted and some attempt made to see how it operates before you start in to legislate permanently to enforce the constitutional amendment? Surely some evidence of how this law works would aid you to enact the permanent legislation for the enforcement of the constitutional amendment.

I could suggest something that might make the law more drastice. Just 200 years ago this year the Sultan Amurath, of Turkey, issued an edict which provided that the nose of any person who smoked tobacco should be cut off. If you want to enact these provisions, go ahead, but in all fairness and with the desire to perfect the legislation I make the suggestion that provision be made for the cancellation of the lien which you have created, and I submit that that provision ought to receive fair and reasonable consideration. I am not going to submit an amendment at this time, because I have not perfected one, but I leave it to the fairness of the committee for them to determine whether or not this law should contain a provision for the cancellation and discharge of the lien by the filing of a bond. [Applause.]

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the chairman of the committee for the privilege of offering an amendment, and, if I am in order, I would like to offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending.

Mr. JUUL. May I offer my amendment and have it pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may have his amendment read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 1, after the word "value," insert "of the financial interest of such owner."

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, if I may take the time, with the permission of gentlemen, I want to say that the bill provides that the accused shall come in and file a bond with sureties to be approved by the clerk of the court in which the action is brought "in the full value of the property." I want to say to you gentlemen that if you insist on that language in the bill nine-tenths of all the men accused will languish in jail until the cases are tried, which in my county may mean from one to two years.

My amendment provides that the bond shall be given for the full value of the financial interest in the property of the party accused of committing the act. I want to say that any man being a nominal and equitable owner of a piece of property, valued perhaps at $100,000 or $150,000, whose equity may amount to $20,000 or $25,000, there is absolutely no way that such a man could stay out of jail if this language is enforced. It provides that he shall give bond to the full value of the property. He does not own the full value of the property, and in many instances the full value of the property is so gigantic and out of proportion to the offense that you are condemning the man to perpetual incarceration in jail until the case is tried. I doubt if you gentlemen want to do anything of that sort.

Now, the attention of the Chairman seems to have been diverted while I have been talking. I want his attention. You are providing in the bill, Mr. Chairman, in line 5, that the owner of the property shall come in when accused and file a bond to the full value of the property. I am trying to tell you that he may not own the full value of the property, and if you insist on that language as now contained in the bill, nearly every one accused, at least in my county, by virtue of this bill, will have to languish in jail until there is some method found to get him out.

A great flat or apartment building in Chicago may be valued at $150,000 to $200,000 and up. Some tenant may go astray and do something that he ought not to do, and then you compel the owner to come in and furnish bond to such an enormous amount that he will not be able to do it. He can come in and give bond to the extent of his holding in the building.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How would it work out? Suppose a tenant who is holding from month to month—I am interested in the point the gentleman is making, and I think there is merit in it——

Mr. JUUL. Let me say that in many cases it will be the tenant that commits the offense. Violations will be for having liquor on the premises or selling same. The owner is called in to furnish bond and is accused of having knowledge of the action of this tenant. The bill provides that he is to give bond to the full value of the building. I maintain that he is unable to do it, and if the language is insisted on it will simply result, in every case where the man is the nominal owner of the apartment building, that he will have to languish in jail because he is unable to comply with the provisions of the law, and be unable to furnish a bond in the amount that this bill provides.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains of the time allotted?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the purpose of the measure before us is to secure the enforcement of national prohibition of the liquor traffic. I take it that it is our desire to pass a bill that will accomplish that purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield in five minutes. The gentleman will have his own time. Section 3 provides that "a place of any kind where intoxicating liquor is sold * * * in violation of the war-prohibition act" shall be deemed a nuisance. Section 4 provides that such a nuisance may be proceeded against in equity and an injunction may be secured in a proceeding prosecuted by the district attorney to the court.

After the preliminary hearing, and after the full hearing if the injunction is made permanent, then if the owner of that place continues to sell in violation of law he may be brought in for contempt of court. The trial of the contempt proceeding will be before the judge. Now, it is desired by some gentlemen here—and they protest their friendliness to this law—to have a jury. We all know, and we might as well be frank about it, that the object of having a jury in such a case is to make it more difficult to enforce the law to stamp out the sale of liquor. [Applause.]

Gentlemen remind me, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in his interesting remarks reminded me, of a friend of mine at home, a member of the supreme court, one of the finest gentlemen and best lawyers in the State. He has often told me of his experiences when Michigan had State-wide prohibition before, in the late seventies and the early eighties. Then the trial of offenders against the law was before a jury in a justice court. I think that would suit some of these gentlemen even better than what they suggest now. Mr. Justice Moore was then the prosecuting attorney of our county, then a lumber woods county. He said that he brought case after case before a jury in the justice court with 20 to 30 open saloons upon the streets of the little town of Lapeer, and he could not get a conviction in any of them.

The failure to enforce prohibition, not its actual operation, was the reason that State-wide prohibition was repealed in Michigan, and it was 40 years before we got it back again. Now, my friends, you might as well understand that people who have been through that kind of experience, having had that kind of an example before them, have reached the stage where in enforcing this law they want a law with teeth in it, a law that will secure results, a law that will stop the sale of liquor. A few months ago there came to this Chamber from the other body a bill known as the Reed amendment, a drastic bill, some of us thought at that time. Even the drys were alarmed that we were getting too drastic. We were afraid to pass that, afraid of the effect it would have on the sentiment in Michigan that was about to vote on the question, but the drys accepted the challenge of the wets and they passed a real measure, the Reed amendment, as to interstate shipment of liquors. In the State of Michigan, following that act of Congress, in a State where any percentage of alcohol is forbidden, in a State where the law has teeth in it, they adopted State-wide prohibition by a majority of about 70,000, and after it had been in effect a year they rejected even a proposition to sell beer and wine by a majority of 207,000. That is the result where you have an actual enforcement of prohibition, because it is only with actual enforcement that the sale of liquor is really stopped, and it is the use and sale of liquor that must be stopped in order to secure the results desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make an announcement. A few moments ago he stated that there were five minutes remaining. The Chair overlooked the fact that the gentleman from New York failed to use about two minutes of his time. There are seven minutes remaining, and the Chair will now recognize the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the specific proposition now under discussion is as to whether an infraction of an injunction order in a liquor case should be triable by jury. The General Assembly of Virginia a few years ago enacted into law provisions to the effect that a man charged with contempt of court, alleged to have been committed beyond the view of the court, should be triable by jury. The court of appeals of that State held that a legislative enactment of the character mentioned was not binding upon the court; that the court had an inherent right and full power to enforce its judgments and decrees, and could not be restrained in relation thereto by any legislative enactment. To that view I heartily subscribe.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. PELL. Would the gentleman subscribe to that view speaking to a group of men who had been enjoined for strikes?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I hold to the opinion, absolutely, that the courts of this country are entitled to command respect for their judgments and enforce them, and whenever the time comes when the people lose confidence in the courts and will not observe the mandate of the law, or by legislative enactment undertake to circumvent judicial determination, then this country is in a fair way toward anarchy, and I insist that any man who teaches a contrary view is advocating a heresy and is contributing his mind and effort to the undoing of enlightened civilization.

Now, replying directly to the respectful inquiry of the distinguished gentleman from New York, I will say that the question we are discussing is limited to injunction to restrain the use of a building for "speakeasy" purposes—to restrain a common nuisance. The proposition does not include the question, Should the writ of injunction issue to restrain the liquor nuisance? That much is granted. I am only contending that where the injunction right exists that enforcement ought to take place. If the remedy exists, it should be enforced. Every right should be vindicated.

Furthermore, I know it to be true that judges have assumed jurisdiction in cases where jurisdiction was wanting—in labor disputes—and in such case judges have, by force of the power of their judicial position, arbitrarily and autocratically done injury to the men and also to society in general. It is unnecessary for me to say that a judge guilty of this kind of oppression should be removed from the bench.

The gentleman's inquiry has caused me to diverge, but before returning to the main subject I desire to notice a remark made by the erudite and polished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES], who in debate, just a few minutes ago, said:

> When that is passed and it comes to the question of a black drunken devil who will rape a white woman in the city of Washington, they want a jury trial and can not trust the judge. That is the attitude of the gentlemen who are not in favor of a strict enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I want to say that I do not subscribe to the doctrine of the gentleman from Iowa. I hold that every man, black or white, charged with crime, it matters not how fiendish or monstrous that crime may be, has a right to challenge at the hands of the authorities administering the law a fair and just trial by jury under the Constitution and laws of the country. I am informed that the gentleman was formerly a judge upon the supreme bench of the great State of Iowa, and while his remarks—which I have quoted—are not now ex cathedra, and were uttered in the heat of debate, yet I would be grossly derelict to the cause of law and order did I not challenge an utterance of that character. And, furthermore, I would be unworthy of the respect and friendship of the thousands of colored constituents in the fifth congressional district of West Virginia, who have trusted me, did I not resent what I interpret as an aspersion doubtless inadvertently made—not as against a criminal individual but as against the black race. In my district there is to be found no greater percentage of crime among the colored people than among the white people. Our colored citizens are industrious, honorable, and patriotic. Cheerfully have they given of their means to every war cause, and they have bought freely of the war bonds and other Government securities. By personal effort in household economies, by increased labor in the coal mines and on the railroads, by the planting and cultivation of war gardens, by activities of their section of the Red Cross, by the efforts of their professional men—lawyers, doctors, dentists, and their ministers and teachers—and by their printing presses, and, last but not least, by their blood on the battle field, have they demonstrated their loyalty to their Government and their right to command the respect and confidence of the American people and of the world. Three thousand young colored men left their work on the three great railroads that traverse my district, and in the more than 400 mines—in the Pocahontas, Thacker, Wayne, Logan, and Wyoming coal fields, among the most celebrated in the world—to answer their country's call, and with thousands of their white comrades fought for the land of their birth under the starry flag, obediently to their country's call.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to resume discussion of the main subject, from which I have diverged—prohibition.

Although a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, but being a new Member I have been reluctant to intrude myself into these deliberations, for I realize that a new Member is not familiar with the rules and regulations governing debate and parliamentary procedure, but I have been trying to learn. At the committee hearings I sat and patiently listened to all that was said and done. Concerning the form of the prohibition bill, I found there were about three groups of people, each group representing a different school of thought. One group wanted the bill so carelessly drawn as that, if it were enacted into law, it would carry no force nor effect, would be innocuous and a dead letter. Another group were on the other extreme. With them everything must be subordinated to prohibition. The bill must be drastic, the penalties inflexible, men and business must be put in a strait-jacket, and all this without regard to public sentiment. The bill as brought to us carried provisions to the effect that it was unlawful to manufacture or sell grape juice or to manufacture or sell nonintoxicating malt drinks, of which there are dozens of kinds sold under various trade names, and also practically forbidding the manufacture, sale, and use of flavoring extracts, such as our mothers have used from the day we were born. The possession of the old cook book because, forsooth, it contained a recipe for making dandelion wine was a crime. It was even thought advisable to put the preachers under bond for the proper use of sacramental wine.

These were the views of the men obsessed with one idea. They would destroy legitimate business just because a drunken degenerate would take a dangerous chance in drinking a bottle of lemon extract for the intoxicating effect of the alcohol therein, necessary in the manufacture in order to hold the oil in solution. Such men as these would burn down the house in order to kill the rats.

Then, there was the third group—those who really had prohibition at heart. Men who had the sense to know that a law can only be enforced when it is supported by public opinion; that to make the law too vicious would render it obnoxious and militate against its enforcement; that in certain communities—hitherto wet and now forced to surrender to the binding force of national decision—a drastic law would meet with strong resistance. I say that the men who took this view, in my opinion, were the true friends of prohibition. I am frank to say that, according to my view, the bill—although vitally reformed in many particulars—is yet a little too strong, and I am willing to vote for such amendments as do not adversely affect the principle of prohibition.

In an address before the West Virginia Bar Association, delivered at Parkersburg in December, 1914, I incidentally mentioned that—> Since our last meeting our friend (?) John Barleycorn has removed his domicile beyond the confines of this State. His principal habitat is now in the old Buckeye State. John is an outlaw, not only in this State but in other States of the Union, more recently the State of Virginia. Public opinion is against him, and in the not distant future he will be run down and annihilated. John has, hitherto, been much in evidence at our banquets. This year he will be conspicuously absent.

> While professing to be our friend, John was, in truth, a most subtle enemy. I think that I can with reasonable safety prophesy that in the future our banquets will be dry, even dusty. Rum has left us, we confidently hope, never to return. In its place may be found sobriety, industry, and good fellowship. The genial souls who gather at the board will depart therefrom with clearer minds, purer thoughts, and happier hearts than ever before. Time was that a lawyer might get on a spree, especially in term time, and add merriment to the proceedings. In the future, as now, conditions of this sort will not be tolerated. Although never a tetotaler, as I must confess, I was willing to forego what little pleasure I should get from an occasional drink, in order that temptation be removed from others. A majority of you gave voice to this sentiment at our Webster Springs meeting some four or five years ago, when you voted in support of a resolution to exclude wine from the banquet. This resolution was adopted, but did not prove effective, for the supply had already been laid in and it was deemed best to consume it in order to prevent others from doing so. I think that most of us, weak and erring, were particeps criminis. All this tends to show the fallibility of human nature, but men must be judged by their good points, not by their bad ones. It were needless to say, the resolution was expunged in order that the members be not stultified.

In a political address made at Hamlin, W. Va., September 3, 1918, in stating my position on the question of enforcement, I said:

> Having voted for the prohibition amendment, it was my pleasure, as a State senator, to support and vote for the administrative acts, original and as amended, carrying the will of the people into effect. The wisdom of this legislation is now apparent to all, in view of the greatly diminished number of inmates in our jails and penitentiary, of the greatly increased bank deposits, and of the domestic peace and tranquillity now abounding within our borders. What is good for a State is good for a nation and, therefore, I shall, in event I am elected, and the legislatures of the required number of States shall adopt the amendment as proposed during my term, be pleased again to assist in carrying the verdict of the people into judgment and execution by voting for the passage of such administrative acts as may be essential.

In my district there are many men who would enjoy the pleasure of taking a drink—and to be perfectly frank, I am of that number—but these, almost without exception, would never consent to return to old conditions. On my trips through that great region I am constantly reminded of the great transformation that has taken place since State prohibition went into effect. In former days almost every village and mining camp had its saloon. Surrounding these, at morning and at evening, were to be found men drunk and disorderly. Now, all is changed. The people are orderly and go to church—men provide for their homes and educate their children, and have money in the bank. Crime has been lessened, public expense of enforcing the criminal law reduced, all the people happier.

In November, 1914, West Virginia, by a majority of 90,000, voted an amendment of her constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. In January, 1919, West Virginia, by the unanimous voice of the membership of her legislature, ratified the proposed eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors.

The Federal amendment, proposed as aforesaid, having been adopted by reason of the ratification thereof by legislative action of more than the required number of the 48 States of the Union, therefore, in view of these and other considerations, I voted with the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary to report the bill to the House with favorable recommendation, and, in harmony therewith, I shall vote for the passage of the bill.

National prohibition in the United States of America marks a new epoch in the history of the world. Under the old régime, for 4,000 years the right to buy and use liquor has been without appreciable limitation. Now all is changed. We are entering a new era. What the physiological, metaphysical, sociological, and economical effect upon mankind will be remains for experience to determine. My opinion, for whatever it may be worth, is that never again in this country shall we see a lawful sale of liquors for beverage purposes. With the advent of national prohibition this country will be expected to develop a race of men strong physically and, therefore, of great longevity, powerful in their intellectual qualifications, supreme in their moral conceptions, and who, with dynamic power, will force America upon an economic plane high above and far ahead of any other nation of the earth. If we shall live to see the fulfilment of the prophecy, then, in justice, we shall be bound to admit that the pioneers, who led the crusade and won the battle, are entitled to the honor, although belated, that history inevitably accords to the world's great reformers.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it would be well to understand the purpose of the amendment. There can be no proper legislation taking away from a man for any sort of crime, if it be a felony, the right to trial by jury. That is not the question here. Cases under this law which provides for the imprisonment as for a felony necessarily will give to every defendant the right to a trial by jury. Why should they not have it when the law of the land guarantees to even the wretch who goes about the streets of Washington assaulting women the right to a trial by jury? It is not an individual case, but it is the practice that every man in this land is entitled, before he is adjudged guilty of any crime, to be tried by a jury of his peers. That is the law, and all that you can do or all that you can write will not nullify it. What we are endeavoring is to try to see that that right shall not be nullified by the right which gives the enforcement of this law or any other law to a court under the guise of punishment for contempt. Why, everybody went to the country, we paid tribute to the liberties of the people of the United States in every branch of honest work when we said, as we did in 1914, that in the event a man is called upon to face a charge of contempt, preferred by a court for the violation of a labor injunction or anything of that kind, that he is entitled to a trial by jury. It was then stated that you could not enforce the law if you have that, but it is the law, and we are enforcing the law, and it is the policy of the United States of America to give every man a fair trial. It was only the thought that in these matters where prejudice and bigotry might appear, as they may appear in this or other matters, instead of vesting arbitrary power in one man it was best for the consideration of the common good to give that power to a jury should he demand it. That is the only proposition here—not to abridge the right of trial by jury, but give to whoever may be charged by a contempt here the same right as any man who may be charged by a contempt in the splendid law referred to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that illustrates what a fine time a criminal would have with a judge like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Or with a jury made up of gentlemen like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 70, noes 66.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion can not be made while the committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. A motion for the committee to rise is in order at any time.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 10, noes 101.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I make the point that that is dilatory, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARD. It is not only dilatory but it is out of order. We are in the process of a vote by tellers on another question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to demand tellers. Those in favor of tellers will rise and be counted. [After counting.] One gentleman has risen, and tellers are refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the other side.

The demand for the other side was refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Ohio will take their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] has offered an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JUUL: Page 5, line 1, after the word "value," insert the words "of the financial interest of such owner."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Is not the gentleman entitled to recognition on his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JUUL. I rise for the purpose of having the gentlemen on the floor know what is pending. I doubt very much if anyone knows what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the section and all amendments thereto has been closed by order of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Strike out all after the word "punished," on line 3, page 6, and insert "by imprisonment of not less than 20 years," so as to read: "Any person found guilty of contempt under the provisions of this section shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 20 years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARD. For the purpose of speaking against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time was limited by the action of the committee, and it has been exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That if any section or provision of this act shall be held to be invalid, it is hereby provided that all other provisions of this act which are not expressly held to be invalid shall continue in full force and effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section for the reason that it is repeated in section 38, on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 6, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, the provision to which the gentleman refers will not be applicable to this title at all. Certainly this section ought to be retained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Both of them say, "the provision of this act." Neither uses the expression of "title."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But we have an express provision at the end of Title II that only puts into effect before the 16th of next January certain sections of Title II.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Section 6, which we are now considering, says:

That if any section or provision of this act shall be held to be invalid, it is hereby provided that all other provisions of this act which are not expressly held to be invalid shall continue in full force and effect.

Now, on page 32, section 38, is this language:

That if any provision of this act shall be held invalid, it shall not be construed to invalidate other provisions of the act.

So it seems to be a repetition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would it meet the views of both gentlemen if the word "act" was stricken out and the word "title" inserted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That would meet with my approval.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think it would make any difference if it was stricken out in both cases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not prepared to say as to that.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Supreme Court will find it absolutely unnecessary legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But there is no reason for it to be used twice.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is, if the gentleman will look at the section on page 32. It does not go into effect until the 16th of January next.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; if you strike it out here, there will be no provision applicable to Title I.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, yes. In both cases the limitation refers to the word "act" and not to the word "title." In both places it relates to the entire bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman misunderstands me. Turn to the last section of the bill, and there you will find that Titles I and III and sections 1 and 40 of Title II of the act shall be in force from and after the approval of this act. The other sections of Title II shall take effect on or after January 16, 1920. Consequently, the provision on page 32 does not go into effect until January next. Hence, if you are going to leave anything that relates to war-time prohibition, you must leave in place section 6 on page 6.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. The gentleman is mistaken. Only one of these is necessary, because it relates to the question as to whether or not the bill is constitutional.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman cares to amend it by putting in the word "title" instead of "act" I will have no objection, and in that way we can get rid of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In order that the chairman of the committee may have further time to consider the matter, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, and then when we get to section 38, on page 52, I will move to strike that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That none of the provisions of this act shall be construed to limit or annul any order or regulation prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or disposition of intoxicating liquors within certain prescribed zones or districts, nor shall the provisions of this act be construed to prohibit the use of the power of the military or naval authorities to enforce the regulations of the President or Secretary of War or Navy issued in pursuance to law prohibiting the manufacture, use, possession, sale, or other disposition of intoxicating liquors during the period of the war and demobilization thereafter.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how long it is his purpose to continue in session to-night?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Until 9 o'clock, if the committee will stay. We have not been able to make much progress on the bill. We have had it under consideration now for two weeks.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman inform us what is to be done to-morrow?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My understanding is that the Agricultural bill is likely to take considerable time, and I think we are all anxious to get through with this bill.

Mr. GARD. This is a matter of convenience to the Members of the House to know what the gentleman intends to do. I think there should be a fair representation of Members of the House present when we take up this important matter. Here we are with possibly 45 or 50 people present now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, I think there is a quorum in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. GARD. If we are going ahead to-morrow I can see no necessity for prolonging this to-night.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We will not be able to get much of to-morrow, as I understand it, because if we bring in the Agricultural bill that will occupy much of the time. I am in hopes that the committee will agree to go on until about 9 o'clock. I know many Members would like very much to finish this matter this week, and there is no possibility of that unless we do something of the kind I suggest.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to appear in the rôle of an obstructionist. I simply want to know for the information of the gentlemen about me who desire to know for their own convenience.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question. I would like to ask the chairman whether or not if the committee stays here and works until 9 o'clock the Chair is going to require the Member having the floor from now on to speak in order on the bill? If all the committee is going to do is to talk on matters outside of the bill, we will not save much time by working here until 9 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ANDERSON). The Chair would state that so far as he is concerned debate has proceeded in order, and if it does not proceed in order the gentleman from Texas, or any other gentleman exercising his right, can call the gentleman on the floor to order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II.

PROHIBITION OF INTOXICATING BEVERAGES.

That when used in Title 2 and Title 3 of this act (1) the word "liquor" or the phrase "intoxicating liquor" shall be construed to include alcohol, brandy, whisky, rum, gin, beer, ale, porter, and wine, and in addition thereto any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids, and compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented, or not, and by whatever name called, containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume which are potable or capable of being used as a beverage.

(2) The word "person" shall mean and include natural persons, associations, copartnerships, and corporations.

(3) The word "commissioner" shall mean Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(4) The term "application" means a formal written request supported by a verified statement of fact showing that the commissioner may grant the request.

(5) The term "permit" means a formal written authorization by the commissioner setting forth specifically the things that are authorized.

(6) The term "bond" means an obligation authorized or required by or under this act or any regulation, issued in such form and for such a penal sum as may be required by a court, the commissioner, or prescribed by regulation.

(7) The term "regulation" shall include all regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury for carrying out the provisions of this act so as to afford safety to the revenues and adequate protection against diversion of liquor for illegal uses, and the commissioner is authorized to make such regulations.

Any act authorized to be done by the commissioner may be performed by any assistant or agent designated by him for that purpose. Records required to be filed with the commissioner shall be filed with an assistant commissioner or other person designated by the commissioner to receive such records.

Mr. HASKELL (interrupting the reading). Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is to be read by sections or by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. By sections.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that, in reply to a question I asked of the regular occupant of the chair, he answered that it would be read by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. All bills except appropriation bills are customarily read by sections.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are reading the bill by sections.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My recollection is that Chairman GOOD ruled specifically in reply to a question I asked that it was to be read by paragraphs.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall look it up.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IGOE: Page 7, strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' shall be construed to include any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids, and compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented or not, and by whatever name called, which are intoxicating and which are potable or capable of being used for beverage purposes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members present, a quorum.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I think this is perhaps the most important point in the bill. In this section is presented for the first time, as far as the enforcement of national prohibition is concerned, the question of the power of Congress under the constitutional amendment. There are other sections of the bill which follow where this same question will be presented. There is a very marked difference of opinion between those who advocate this bill and those who oppose it as to the power of Congress under the eighteenth amendment. The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution provides:

SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, is hereby prohibited.

My contention is that the Congress is limited to the provisions of that first section of the eighteenth amendment.

It is contended by the majority in the report on this bill that under the power given under the second section to enforce this article by appropriate legislation that Congress may go to the extent of prohibiting, if it deems it wise, the manufacture and sale of beverages that are in fact not intoxicating. Now, the amendment is not only limited to the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating beverages, but it is limited to the business in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. If the Congress can go as far as these gentlemen say it can go and deal with nonintoxicants, then there is no reason why we should be limited to prohibiting merely the manufacture, sale, or transportation, nor is there any reason why we should be limited to the prohibition of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The amendment which I have offered provides, in the language of the Constitution, that intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes shall be prohibited. Now, the majority in the report filed on this bill claims that because several States under their various constitutions and State laws have passed acts in which intoxicating liquors are defined to include nonintoxicants, that the Congress may go to the same extent, and I wish to impress here again that in the first section of this article is contained the whole power of Congress, and that section of the article is a complete prohibition in itself. If the words selected there were not intended to give Congress authority, then it was useless to select the words "manufacture, sale, transportation, and exportation." Now, under State laws it is true that the State legislatures have included many beverages which are not intoxicating, but an examination of those cases and an examination of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, where those cases have come up to the court for decision, will show that the constitutions of the States either permitted them to do what the legislatures did or that under the broad police powers of the State that legislation was sustained. Attention has been called particularly to some of those cases where beverages admittedly nonintoxicating were prohibited, but the Federal Government has no general police power. I think that is conceded by all who have discussed this bill or who have considered the question of the power of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. May I have five minutes additional?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the request of the gentleman from Missouri, that instead of having 5 minutes he shall have 10 minutes, because he intends to present a legal argument.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Sixty-eight gentlemen are present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries, finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, that 224 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and that he presented therewith the names of the absentees for insertion in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6810, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that interruption came, because I could have finished what I had to say a long time ago. I do not know whether it would have enlightened the House very much, but I have been deeply interested in this particular question, because I think it is one of the most important in the bill. The gentlemen in charge of the bill or the majority of the committee, I think, will concede that Congress has no power to legislate upon this question within the States except under this amendment. Of course, it has been suggested that under the power of taxation we might enact certain legislation, and how far we might go in that respect I am not prepared now to discuss.

As to interstate matters, of course, our power is unlimited, and under the war power we may go a long ways. The amendment, however, gives Congress whatever power it has. The contention of the majority that the power is full and complete is one that I deny, because it is not the same as that which was given under the power to regulate interstate commerce or establish post offices and post roads.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE and Mr. GARD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 71.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. There is an amendment pending, I believe, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in opposition to the amendment.

This is not a new question. It is a question that we decided a few days ago, and it seems to me we ought not to waste any more time on it unnecessarily. The Attorney General but yesterday called attention to the fact that it was absolutely necessary to have a definition in this war prohibition act to make it effective. It is equally necessary to put a definition of intoxicating liquor into this title, which is the one to enforce constitutional prohibition. There can be no doubt about that. Not only has it been illustrated in the enforcement of war-time prohibition, but it has been illustrated in every State where they have tried it, and, so far as I am advised, not a single State has attempted to enforce anything like a prohibition law or liquor laws of any kind without placing in their statutes a definition. There must be a definition; otherwise the law will be absolutely ineffective.

Let me say this now, and make it plain, that everyone who is in favor of this proposition is opposed to effective enforcement of prohibition. Knowing that the country will not stand for open opposition, they aim to make the law ineffective by providing for a jury trial and by striking out the definition of intoxicating liquor. Let us be honest. You who are for an effective law should stand up for the bill, and those who are opposed to it should come out flat-footed and say, "We are trying to defeat it."

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section be now closed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, because I have an amendment I know he will accept.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. On this amendment, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASKELL: Amend subdivision (1) of section (1) of title 2 as follows: In lines 12 and 13, page 7, strike out the words "one-half of 1 per cent or more of." In line 13, page 7, after the word "volume," insert "in excess of the maximum per cent fixed for nonintoxicating beverages by proclamation of the President of the United States to be made as hereinafter set forth: That the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of five members to serve without pay, with power to meet at such places as said commission deems advisable, and compel the attendance of witnesses, send for persons and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses. It shall be the duty of this commission to investigate and report to the President of the United States, and to this Congress, at the earliest practicable moment, what maximum per cent of alcohol in the beverages and preparations described in the first paragraph hereof which are potable or capable of being used as a beverage, in its opinion, constitute nonintoxicating liquors. The President of the United States shall, by proclamation, fix the maximum per cent of alcohol for nonintoxicating beverages as reported by said commission."

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated on the floor of this House——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I presume that that is not germane to the purpose of this bill. The purpose of the bill is not to have prohibition by presidential proclamation. The purpose of the bill is to provide adequate legislation in support of the constitutional provision, as provided by the Constitution. The Constitution does not say that the President shall proclaim laws that would carry into effect the constitutional provision. The Constitution says that the Congress may prescribe rules and regulations that will put this law into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the proposition.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, will not the Chair hear me on the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, this section refers to the percentage of alcohol by volume to be permitted in these beverages, and I submit that resolution after resolution has been introduced here in one form or another upon this subject.

That being true, my amendment prescribes a definite and precise way of fixing the alcoholic-volume content. It certainly is proper to have some investigation of the percentage of alcohol which makes these drinks intoxicating, and, on the other hand, the percentage which renders them nonintoxicating. We have had no adequate investigation of that proposition. In fact, no investigation at all. The Committee on the Judiciary, reporting this bill, will not say upon the floor of this House that they have investigated what percentage of alcoholic volume in these drinks constitutes them intoxicating, and, on the other hand, constitutes them nonintoxicating. My amendment proposes a sane way of finding out, in order to comply with the provisions of the eighteenth amendment, which only prohibits intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

That is the proposition under consideration. My amendment covers that situation. I would like to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it has been held many times by the House that where a provision fixes a standard it is not germane to offer an amendment providing for a commission or any other method of fixing a standard; and the gentleman's amendment providing for a commission is not germane to the provision fixing the percentage of alcohol in the beverage. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, it is too late. The decision was announced.

Mr. HASKELL. I could not appeal until it was announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Those in favor of sustaining the ruling of the Chair will say "aye"; those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 14.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-two Members present, a quorum.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken (on a division demanded by Mr. HASKELL) there were—ayes 7, noes 86.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chariman, I offer an amendment. On page 7, at the end of line 17, I move to strike out the period after the word "corporation" and insert a comma and then add the following words:

Also the principal officer of every corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 7, line 17, after the word "corporation," strike out the period and insert a comma and add the words "also the principal officer of every corporation."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What would "the principal officer of every corporation" be under this definition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Under the definition of "persons," an individual can be both fined and imprisoned; but a corporation can not be imprisoned and can only be fined.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A common carrier corporation may violate the law and nobody can be imprisoned. The corporation may pay a fine and get off. A hotel corporation could violate the law and get off with a fine and nobody would be imprisoned. But if the language that I have just offered is added to the definition, the principal officer of the corporation can be both fined and imprisoned.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman will notice that this is only a definition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now, what would "the principal officer of a corporation" be if that amendment were adopted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That would depend on the articles of incorporation and by-laws of the corporation.

Mr. WALSH. He would be a natural person?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but he himself would not violate the law if a railroad took an illegal shipment.

Mr. WALSH. This definition would not make him a violator of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The definition I have added would bring him in all right.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If I am mistaken, it is a mistake in the right direction; and this language had better be put in.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Any individual acting as an officer would be liable anyway without this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; if the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, for instance, or the American Railways Express Co., should be indicted for an illegal transportation of whisky, the president of the company could not be imprisoned under this bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You would not want to imprison him unless he had some knowledge and had participated in the offense, and if he had he would be liable as a natural person.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the principal officer of the corporation were liable to imprisonment, he would see that the law was carried out by his corporation. Any two or three persons in a community who are bootleggers may resolve themselves into a corporation. Every hotel, every soft-drink establishment, could go to the proper place in the State and become incorporated, and then they could not be imprisoned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman object to striking out the word "principal" and inserting the word "managing"? The president might not have anything to do with the violation of the law. It might be an underling who was the manager of the corporation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If this becomes the law, we will have a live man as the principal officer.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. As I understand, anyone who participates in the commission of a misdemeanor is liable. Now, how could a corporation commit a misdemeanor through an agent without the agent being equally guilty with the corporation? And if that be true, why is it necessary to make the agents of the corporation liable by name?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, I think it is quite clear that there is no way to impose imprisonment upon anybody connected with a corporation unless he be included in this definition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the purpose of the gentleman from Kentucky is not carried out by the amendment he proposes. As has been suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Massachusetts, subdivision 2 provides a definition of the word "person," and it is supposed that they shall include natural persons, corporations, associations, and copartnerships.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say that the corporation would be fined, but nobody could be imprisoned.

Mr. GARD. The same rule would apply to associations or copartnerships or any officer thereof. The gentleman seeks to have somebody designated who might be made criminally responsible on behalf of the corporation, but he does not accomplish that, because it simply provides a definition of the word "partnership." No matter what amendment is put in after the word "corporation," it still means that "corporation" is a person under this definition of the law. That is all there is to it. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is not only not necessary but defeats its own end.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, if the purpose be to so arrange that if the corporation is engaged in the sale of liquor some individual who would act for the corporation can be punished, I do not think the amendment is necessary. A corporation can only act through certain individuals named, and everyone who participates in the commission of a misdemeanor is guilty of the misdemeanor. There are no accessories to misdemeanors. Everyone who aids and abets and helps in the perpetration of a misdemeanor is guilty as principal, and so if you had the agent of a corporation, when the corporation was engaged in the sale of liquor, that individual would be punished on the basis of his own personal guilt.

Now, however, if the purpose of the amendment be to choose some agent of the corporation to punish as a vicarious sacrifice, whether he had anything to do with the actual sale or not, it ought to be defeated, because it is unjust to punish a man for an act that he knew nothing about and had no part in the performance.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, on page 7, line 6, before the word "that" the words "section 1," and strike out the figures 2 and 3 and insert the Roman numerals II and III in place thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 6, before the word "that" insert the words "section 1." In the same line add an "s" to the first word "title," strike out the figure 2, and strike out the word "title" and the figure 3, and insert in place of figure 2 the Roman numeral II and in place of title 3 insert the Roman numeral III.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in line 7, after the figure 1 in parentheses, the word "the" may be spelled with a capital "T."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that in line 7 the word "the" shall commence with a capital. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he would have any objection, in lines 20 and 23, page 7, and in line 1, on page 8, to striking out the word "means" and insert the words "shall mean," making it conform to the provisions in subparagraphs 2 and 3?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is all right, except in line 5, on page 8. You will have to strike out the word "include" there.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and insert the words "shall mean."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 7, line 20, strike out the word "means" and insert the words "shall mean." Page 7, line 23, strike out the word "means" and insert the words "shall mean." Page 8, line 1, strike out the word "means" and insert the words "shall mean." Page 8, line 5, strike out the word "include" and insert the word "mean."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which has been authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary, but which so far has not been reported by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 7, line 14, strike out the words "as a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for." Strike out the period and after the word "beverage" insert the word "purposes."

Mr. GARD. As I say, that was authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 8, line 2, by striking out the word "issued" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "executed." Mortgaged bonds are issued, but appearance bonds are executed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Page 8, line 2, strike out the word "issued" and insert in lieu thereof the word "executed."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Also on the same page at the end of line 10, after the word "regulations," strike out the period and insert the words "as are not inconsistent with law." Subsection (8) there gives a blanket commission to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury to issue all sorts of regulations. I think it should be limited to make the regulations consistent with law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 8, line 10, after the word "regulations," strike out the period and insert the words "as are not inconsistent with law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to add the word "cider" after the word "wine," in line 9, page 7, striking out the word "and" which precedes the word "wines."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman should put his amendment in writing in accordance with the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well. Here it is. I send it to the desk and ask that the Clerk report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FITZGERAID: Page 7, line 9, after the word "porter," strike out the word "and," and after the word "wine" insert the words "and cider."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 16, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether in line 21, page 7, the words "showing that the commissioner may grant the request," should not be stricken out of the definition of the term "application"? It seems to me a clumsy addition to the definition already there.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think not. I think it is as it ought to be set forth.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If it is supported by the committee, that seems to be sufficient.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors shall investigate and report violations of this act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who shall be charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as in the case of other offenses against the laws of the United States; and such Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors may swear out warrants before United States commissioners or other officers or courts authorized to issue the same for the apprehension of such offenders, and may, subject to the control of the said United States attorney, conduct the committing trial for the purpose of having the offenders held for the action of a grand jury. Section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby made applicable in the enforcement of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 8, line 20, I move to strike out the words "shall be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 20, strike out the words "shall be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 9, in line 5, after the word "conduct" I move to insert the words "the prosecution at."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 5, after the word "conduct" insert the words "the prosecution at."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the comma as it appears in line 3, page 9, and insert a period, and strike out the balance of the language down to and including the word "jury" in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are two commas in line 3; after which word?

Mr. GARD. After the word "offenders." I said to strike out the comma after the word "offenders" and insert a period, and strike out the balance of the language of that line and lines 4, 5, and 6 down to and including the word "jury."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 3, after the word "offenders" strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of line 3, all of lines 4, 5, and 6 down to and including the word "jury" in line 6.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no person shall on or after the date when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, give away, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish, receive, or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act, and all the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prohibited. Liquor for nonbeverage purposes and wine for sacramental purposes may be purchased, sold, transported, and used as herein provided.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 17 and 18, after the word "be," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert the words "manufactured, sold, bartered, given away, transported, imported, exported, delivered, furnished, and used, but only as herein provided and permits may be issued therefor."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The words "received, possessed," should come after the word "furnished," and I desire to modify the amendment to that effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Before that is done I desire to offer a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Minnesota to state again in what respect he desires to modify his amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. After the word "furnished" insert the words "received, possessed."

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 17 and 18, after the word "be," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert "manufactured, sold, bartered, given away, transported, imported, exported, delivered, furnished, received, possessed, and used, but only as herein provided and permits may be issued therefor."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by including the word "purchased."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I desire to offer a perfecting amendment.

Mr. GARD. After the word "manufactured," in what came from the chairman of the committee—I ask for the attention of the chairman of the committee—is it not the purpose of the gentleman also to include the word "purchased"? The gentleman struck out the language after "may be" and inserted the word "manufactured" and other words. Did not the gentleman also intend to include the word "purchased"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no prohibition expressly against purchase in the first part of the section, and it is not necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "manufactured" insert the word "purchased."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, and Mr. WHITE of Maine rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 9, line 14, after the word "be," strike out the balance of the line and all of line 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Construed according to the plain import of the language used, without regard to the distinction made between construction of penal laws and laws upon other subjects; and no person shall be punished for an offense which is not made penal by the plain import of the words of this act."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in the section which we now have under consideration is written the following language, on lines 14 and 15:

All the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prohibited.

I think I am as strong an advocate of a firm and effective enforcement measure as any man in this House, but, gentlemen, this is a highly penal statute, and it occurs to me that the language which I have just read is very unusual. What is meant by the language "shall be liberally construed to the end that intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prohibited"? What is the meaning of the words "liberal construction"? Does it mean that enlarged construction which would extend words beyond their natural and obvious meaning? If it does, I am sure that Congress would not want to adopt language of that sort in a statute that is as highly penal as this one. We all understand that the common-law construction was that laws are strictly construed when they are highly penal in favor of the person accused. That is to say, if the language used was ambiguous and not clear, the party accused under it was given benefit of doubts.

Now, I take it that it was the purpose of the committee who framed this bill to get away from the common-law rule of construction, and, therefore, they have used these words, "shall be liberally construed."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment.

An interpretation of that language would seem to mean that when you bring a defendant into court and charge by indictment that he has violated the provision of this law, if the judge in construing that language shall be doubtful as to whether he is guilty or not, he shall give it a "liberal construction," and instruct the jury, in effect, to find him guilty. If that is not the meaning of the words "shall be liberally construed," then I would like to inquire, What do they mean?

I have not the slightest desire to help write a lame and ineffective prohibition law. On the contrary, I wish to aid in passing one which will carry out the mandate of the eighteenth constitutional amendment. I think my record on the prohibition question will bear any test my constituents care to give it. But my advocacy of prohibition does not prevent me from advocating such an amendment as the one which I have proposed, and which, if adopted, I think will improve the bill and make it more harmonious with our code of laws and system of criminal jurisprudence.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know any two ways to construe a statute, except to construe it liberally or strictly, and the courts have so recognized it from time immemorial in their decisions, and your amendment injects confusion into the law.

Mr. BLACK. It does not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. To a lawyer it does. It may not to a layman.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to say that the language contained in my amendment is not chosen hurriedly and without consideration. I have adopted the language which has been embodied in our penal code in Texas for years, and it was put in there, not to give any so-called liberal construction to penal statutes nor to permit any narrow construction, but to say that language used shall be construed according to the plain import of the words.

Now, let me read you the amendment I have offered—and I have followed exactly the language that has been used in the construction of the penal statutes in my own State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. May I be permitted to speak for five minutes more?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. Here is the language I have moved to substitute for the language of this section relating to construction, and if my amendment is adopted it would therefore read as follows:

And all the provisions of this act shall be construed according to the plain import of the language used without regard to the distinction made between construction of penal laws and laws upon other subjects; and no person shall be punished for an offense which is not made penal by the plain import of the words of this act.

Now, that provision was put in as article 9 of our penal code in Texas because of the fact that prior to it the courts had said that in the construction of a penal statute they would have to follow the common law; and in many cases the common-law construction was highly technical.

And, therefore, in order to obviate those technicalities we put in our penal code the provision which I have just read.

Now, I am not advocating any narrow and technical method of construction. But if I have got to choose between a strict construction and a liberal construction in a penal law, I would choose the strict construction, because, if I understand it aright, it has always been the doctrine of the Democratic Party and the theory of this Government and one of its most cherished principles that the protection of the individual in his rights is the highest aim and purpose of government. In fact, the very essence of our Federal Constitution is found in that provision, in it which guarantees to every citizen that he shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Of course, if all men who are accused of crime were guilty, possibly we would not need to guard their rights so carefully, but in framing a law, no legislator has a right to assume that all men accused under it will be guilty and none innocent. Therefore it is our duty and our responsibility to see to it that in all penal laws proper safeguards are provided for the protection of the innocent.

The amendment which I have offered simply provides that the provisions of this act shall be construed according to the plain import of its language and that no man shall be convicted of a crime, unless it comes clearly within the plain import of the language used. If that is not the way any penal statute should be construed, then I would like to inquire, Why not? The intent of Congress is the thing to be sought, and what better evidence is there of that intent than the plain import of the words used in the act? With this explanation of my amendment I submit it to the consideration of the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to take up a great deal of time on this. This is not an unusual proposition at all. It is found in many statutes of this class. The purpose of it is to indicate to the court what the object of the legislation is, and to say to the court that it shall receive a construction that will carry out that purpose. We say the object of it is to prohibit intoxicating liquor as a beverage. That may be important in connection with the next section, and I think it ought to remain in there, and remain in substantially the form in which it is. I can see no harm.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this amendment be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Minnesota is going to try in that way to prevent us from being heard on this bill we will see if he can gain time by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is out of order. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty Members are present—a quorum. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate upon this amendment be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 24.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One person has risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum on the vote last taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is dilatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLACK. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 84.

Mr. BLACK. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. As many as favor the taking of the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty gentlemen have risen, a sufficient number.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. BLACK as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Maine: Page 9, line 15, after the word "that," insert "the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation, and importation of," and strike out the words "as a beverage" and insert in lieu thereof "for use for beverage purposes."

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this changes in any particular the real intent of the section; but we get our power to act from the constitutional amendment, and when we undertake in the act itself to express its real purpose and intent it seems to me we may well make it conform to the constitutional language. That is what my amendment does, and nothing more. If my amendment is adopted, the language will read in this fashion in line 15:

To the end that the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation, and importation of intoxicating liquors for use for beverage purposes may be prohibited.

And that is just what the constitutional amendment authorizes us to do, and that is the limit of our power. It seems to me the amendment is proper.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do no believe this amendment ought to be agreed to. Our various State courts in construing State constitutional amendments that are practically in the same language, and in construing statutes on this subject containing language substantially the same as this, have all held, so far as I am aware—I know a great many of them have held—that the object of those statutes is to prohibit the use of liquor, and it is perfectly evident to anyone who reads this constitutional amendment that the use of liquor as a beverage is what is prohibited. The manufacture is prohibited. The importation is prohibited. Without manufacture and without importation there can be no intoxicating liquor as a beverage in this country, and it seems to me we might as well express that purpose clearly in the act itself. That is the reason why I did not insert the language that has been offered now by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] as an amendment. It seems to me we ought to stand for the interpretation of the language of the amendment that has contantly been announced by the courts as the purpose of this class of legislation, and it seems to me we might as well write it into the statute and tell the courts that this is what we understand it to mean.

Mr. WALSH. Why was it not written into the statute?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think that is what the language in the bill means.

Mr. WALSH. It does not mean that. It does not say so. It is very cumbersome language, if the gentleman will note—

To the end that intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prohibited.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think that clearly expresses the idea.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The gentleman thinks that means then just exactly what my language says?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think you will have to spell it out from your language, while my language says so in so many words.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I should like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a question. In line 12 is the word "possess." What does that word mean, and what significance does it carry?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Possession is very important in connection with the prosecution of a great many of these offenses.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have this specific case in mind. Suppose a citizen has a case of wine that he purchased at a time when it was lawful to make the purchase, and the same is now in his possession. Does this act undertake to make that possession unlawful?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We make express provision for that in section 35, on page 30. There we expressly make it legal to have it in one's possession, and this does not interfere with that. When we reach that section probably some amendment will be offered.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I merely desired to ascertain the meaning that this word "possess" is intended to carry.

I wish to say a word in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. It seems to me that this is a very desirable amendment, and one that ought to be adopted by the committee. I do not think that the argument of the chairman of the committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD] in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] was by any means convincing. Whatever may be the declarations in State statutes with respect to the construction of State enactments, the analogy is by no means striking enough to justify the language of the present bill. We are enacting a statute in enforcement of a constitutional amendment, and our statute by construction can not give to the amendment a meaning in excess of that which it plainly carries.

The constitutional amendment says that exportation, importation, transportation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes are prohibited. Our statute of enforcement can only deal with the acts prohibited by the amendment. We can not go further in our legislation, than the limits of the amendment which does not, for instance, prohibit the consumption of intoxicating spirits provided they are in your possession.

Even when constitutional prohibition becomes effective, spirits lawfully in the possession of the citizen may be used in his home. Use is not inhibited by the amendment. When the gentleman from Maine proposes by his amendment that we shall construe a law in enforcement of the constitutional amendment to the end that the inhibitions of that amendment shall be effected, he is proposing something that is plainly right. The committee should be anxious to make effective the plain meaning of the Constitution. Thus far should we go, and no further.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am as strong a prohibitionist as there is in this House or in the United States, yet I am in favor heartily of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine. I think it should be adopted, for it is clearly the law, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], that we can not go beyond the power given to us by the eighteenth constitutional amendment.

I was not in favor of the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. BLACK, although in nine cases out of ten I would be willing to follow this distinguished gentleman from Texas, because his judgment is right nine times out of ten. But I remember the effect of the very statute which he had incorporated from the Texas code into his amendment. I remember that under that very statute a negro indicted for a cold-blooded murder was four different times by a jury found guilty of murder in the first degree and given the death penalty.

Four different times the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas under that very statute was forced to reverse the case on a technicality, and the fifth time the negro was tried the jury for the fifth time gave him the death penalty. But in their verdict they said, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder as charged in the indictment, and assess the punishment at death." And yet because the jury failed to say that they found him guilty of murder "in the first degree," under that statute which the gentleman from Texas quoted, which required a strict construction of the law, for the fifth time in Texas that verdict was reversed, notwithstanding the fact that the indictment charged murder in the first degree, and the jury found him guilty of murder as charged in the indictment. Some people say a negro can not get a fair trial in the South; yet for the fifth time the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals reversed the judgment and sent it back for another trial, and this negro's lawyer was appointed by the court and served throughout all trials without a single dollar of compensation.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will now confine myself to the question, but I was prevented from speaking against the Black amendment at the time it was offered.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman know that the court of appeals pointed out substantial errors in all those trials?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Texas knows that the fifth time the court of appeals sent it back they found only one error, and that a technical one, to wit, that the jury had failed to say that it was murder "in the first degree," although they assessed the death penalty as a punishment and said that he was guilty of murder as charged in the indictment, which charged murder in the first degree.

Mr. BEE. Was not that fundamental?

Mr. BLANTON. Under the said "strict-construction" statute, yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not confining himself to the question.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. What became of the negro?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that that negro got justice in Texas. [Laughter.] I think the amendment of the gentleman from Maine should be adopted and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept it. If he does not, I hope the House will adopt it, because clearly we can not go beyond the scope given us in the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution. We must not adopt provisions in this bill unwisely, that would force the Supreme Court to hold that it was unconstitutional. I want a severe, drastic measure, with sharp teeth in it, that will forever put intoxicating liquor out of business in our Nation, but, above all, I want a constitutional bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. GARD. I have another amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not use the word "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IGOE) there were 78 yeas and 46 noes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. GARD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 77 yeas and 51 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 9, line 13, I move to insert after the word "act" the words "and also except such as may be legally stored in a United States bonded warehouse."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think that ought to go in here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 13, after the word "act," insert the words "and also except such as may be legally stored in a United States bonded warehouse."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Page 9, line 18, add the following:

"Provided, however, That wine and cider may be made and possessed at his home by any person for use thereat for himself and his family."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed by action of the committee. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 50, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, in line with the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, I move to strike out, on page 9, line 11, the words "give away."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 9, line 11, strike out the words "give away."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 32, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. On page 9, line 12, I move to strike out the word "furnish."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 9, line 12, strike out the word "furnish."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, in the same line I move to strike out the word "receive."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 9, line 12, strike out the word "receive."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, on page 9, line 12, I move to amend by inserting the words "for sale" after the word "possess."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 9, line 12, after the word "possess," insert the words "for sale."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 35, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the purchase, sale, transportation, importation, exportation, and use of the articles enumerated in this section shall not, after having been manufactured and prepared for the market, be subject to the provisions of this act if they correspond with the following descriptions and limitations, namely:

(a) Denatured alcohol or denatured rum produced and used as provided by laws and regulations now or hereafter in force.

(b) Medical preparations manufactured in accordance with formulas prescribed by the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary of the American Institute of Homeopathy that are nonpotable and unfit for use for beverage purposes.

(c) Patented, patent, and proprietary medicines that are nonpotable and unfit for use for beverage purposes.

(d) Toilet, medical, and antiseptic preparations and solutions that are nonpotable and unfit for use for beverage purposes, contained in bottles or packages, upon which are printed conspicuously and legibly in English the quantity by volume of alcohol in such preparation.

(e) Flavoring extracts that are nonpotable and incapable of being used for intoxicating beverage purposes.

(f) Vinegar.

A person who manufactures any of the articles mentioned in this section may purchase and possess liquor for that purpose, but he shall secure permits to manufacture such articles and to purchase such liquor, give the bonds, keep the records, and make the reports specified in this act and as directed by the commissioner. No such manufacturer shall sell, use, or dispose of any liquor otherwise than as an ingredient of the articles authorized to be manufactured therefrom.

Any person who shall knowingly sell any of the articles mentioned in this section for beverage purposes, or who shall sell same under circumstances from which the seller might reasonably deduce the intention of the purchaser to use them for beverage purposes, shall be subject to the penalties provided in section 30 of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language to be found in line 21, on page 9, "after having been manufactured," and so forth. Does not the chairman think it would be better if he moved to strike out the word "having" in line 21 and inserted the words "they have," so that it will read "after they have been manufactured"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Then I offer that as an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 21, strike out the word "having" and insert the words "they have."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 10, line 16, after the word "extracts," insert the words "and sirups."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. For the purpose of asking a question. Does the gentleman from Minnesota understand that the amendment he offered is all he is going to offer to subdivision E?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 16 and 17, after the word "are," in line 16, strike out the words "nonpotable and incapable of being used" and insert the word "unfit."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, at the end of line 2, add "no more alcohol shall be used in the manufacture of any extract, sirup, or other article capable of being used for beverage purposes than the quantity necessary for extraction or solution of the elements contained therein and for the preservation of the article.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 7, after the word "purposes" insert "or shall sell any beverage containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume in which any extract, sirup, or other article is used as an ingredient."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I was unable to be present when this amendment was considered in the committee.

Mr. GARD. It never was considered in the committee.

Mr. WALSH. And I will ask the Chairman if he will just explain what those words are intended to cover.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no question but these sirups and extracts can be used for intoxicating beverage purposes by being mixed with a little water and sugar. When we had this matter under consideration and the attorneys and others appeared for the extract and sirup people they insisted it could not be done, but I thereupon drew an amendment which would have prohibited any of these sirups or extracts that would be fit for beverage purposes after being diluted. When that proposition was submitted to them they very promptly threw up their hands and confessed they could be used for intoxicating beverage purposes. Then this proposition that I have just submitted to the House was submitted to them.

Mr. GARD. Was this proposition ever submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My understanding was that it was.

Mr. GARD. I have no such understanding.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I had it there and tried to submit all of these propositions. It has been submitted to the extract and sirup people, and they agreed to have it inserted in substantially the language that I offer these amendments.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. This is the first time I have heard of it, and I just want to get the effect of the gentleman's amendment. Does it provide that any beverage that contains one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, which also contains any flavoring extract, shall be——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is made illegal to sell as a beverage any liquid made out of these extracts or sirups that contain one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume.

Mr. IGOE. Any beverage that contains one-half of 1 per cent by volume and which contains a flavoring extract——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. The claim is that the extracts and sirups are never used as a beverage, but they can be used to make a beverage, and to guard against that we insert this provision. I have another proposition that likewise was agreed to by the people——

Mr. IGOE. By whom?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That takes care of it.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? By whom does the gentleman say it was agreed to?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was agreed to by the men that represented the extract and sirup people.

Mr. GARD. Not agreed to by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know that all of these amendments were submitted to the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would like to ask the chairman of this committee if these amendments which are now being proposed meet the situation presented to us by the wholesale druggists and manufacturers of extracts, those people engaged in legitimate industries in which they use alcohol, and who are sending telegrams and letters to the Members of the House?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They have been consulted, and they have made no serious objection to this proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The question I ask the chairman of the committee is, if this series of amendments which are being proposed reach objections to this bill that have been raised by these people?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the purpose of them, and they are practically agreed to now by the various people.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It was the understanding of the chairman of this committee that this series of amendments do meet the objections that have been raised by those engaged in that business?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. Some of them will not agree, but there is a practical agreement between myself and those men in reference to these particular amendments. I am offering them with that understanding. There may be a slight change in the phraseology, because we did not distinctly agree on all of the phraseology, but this was the result of the conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the necessity for this amendment, particularly in view of the fact that in the definition under subparagraph 1 of section 1 of Title II, that says liquids containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume are included within the term "liquor" or "intoxicating liquor." Now, what is the advantage or necessity for this particular amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In paragraph (e) we do not use the expression "liquor." We use the word "beverage." Consequently flavoring extracts and sirups are not limited to the definition in the paragraph the gentleman refers to.

Mr. WALSH. They are liquids.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But the language is not used in the first paragraph. And we liberalize it by limiting sirups and extracts to liquids that are unfit for intoxicating-beverage purposes.

Mr. WALSH. That is, they might contain more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol and still not be considered as intoxicating?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They might contain 95 per cent of alcohol.

Mr. WALSH. And that is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the purpose of this amendment, because we are turning over to these people a large amount of alcohol and we are saying to them, "Make these articles; the public wants them." Now we try to put some limitation on them so that they shall not be used for beverage purposes. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly we would agree to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How can the druggist or proprietor tell for what purpose anybody is buying this stuff?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is intended to reach the wholesaler and retailer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but I am asking how the retailer is going to tell for what purpose a man is buying it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is true enough; but this is the only way I can see that we can reach the situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that extract of lemon is a very popular tipple in certain neighborhoods. Now, suppose some man's wife wants him to get a lot of this stuff in order to make cakes and pies or use for other culinary purposes, how does the druggist know that he is not going to drink it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If he does not know and sells in good faith, he is not liable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, for the purposes of information, may we have the last amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pending amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The debate has not been exhausted on this question, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands seven minutes have been exhausted and three minutes remain.

Mr. BENSON. Nobody has spoken on this side, Mr. Chairman. No time was fixed, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that two Members have already spoken on this amendment. The Chair recollects that the time was yielded by one man.

Mr. BENSON. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BENSON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that that amendment that is put in there now is simply giving to the extract people with one hand the privilege to manufacture and conduct their business, and with the other hand you are taking it away from them. [Laughter.]

It is impossible to manufacture extracts with less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in them, and the last provision that is put in there prevents the use or manufacture of extracts if they have one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. It is well known to everybody that you can not produce extract of lemon or of vanilla or any of these other essences without using alcohol to do it. That is conceded. It is also known that you could not have flavoring for food, you can not have flavoring for bread or cake or candy or soda water if you do not have extracts to take the place of it. You are going ahead and in this act providing it so that people who are accustomed to using sherry and brandy for baking purposes will not even have the opportunity of using lemon and vanilla for those things.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENSON. No; I can not yield. I will yield to the gentleman if I have time. As a matter of fact, we all know that when you cut out the use of alcohol it increases the use of sweets, and the people of this country and the soldiers found it out, that they needed candy and sweets. You will practically be putting these people on a flavorless diet if you cut out all flavoring extracts, and this last part of the amendment does exactly that thing and nothing else, because in the first case there it says that anyone who shall knowingly sell any of the articles mentioned for beverage purposes shall be guilty, and it ends up by saying that anybody who sells extracts with one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol shall be guilty. The first part of the amendment is nullified by the latter part.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to say that in providing these extracts you do not contend that it is necessary to have a preparation of alcohol to sell them and keep them?

Mr. BENSON. Of course you have to.

Mr. TINCHER. Does not the gentleman understand that in dry States now they are forced to sell the extracts, and do sell them?

Mr. BENSON. No. I understand that in the State of Montana they did have such a law, and the people there forced them to repeal it.

Mr. TINCHER. That is an argument on the part of the manufacturers the other way.

Mr. BENSON. I have a letter in my pocket from a manufacturer who manufactures, or tries to manufacture, five extracts, and he says that is all he can do, and he has no confidence in them himself. [Laughter.] The great society of flavoring extract people, which met at Atlantic City last week, went on record on that subject.

Mr. TINCHER. I have here a vanilla flavor prepared without alcohol.

Mr. BENSON. Yes, and it is a fake. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. No; it is not a fake. I can prove to you by the best cook in Washington that it is the best flavor going. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ELSTON. I have heard the amendment read, and I do not know whether I understand it perfectly or not. I would like to know if this is the interpretation of the amendment that the gentleman proposes: Do you mean that any extract manufactured in accordance with the terms of this act and strictly within the limitations in regard to the alcohol content in volume can not be injected into any beverage containing other liquid save water unless that extract itself, which might be in volume a drop only, contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. Here is the proposition: The flavoring extract itself may contain 50 per cent or 95 per cent, as some of it may. That does not cut any figure. But if you do that for the purpose of making a beverage out of it, then you must reduce it below one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. ELSTON. This is the proposition: If you take a container and fill that container with a nonalcoholic liquid, and then inject only sufficient of this 50 per cent of extract into it so that the whole shall contain less than one-half of 1 per cent in volume of alcohol, then it is permissible to drink it, is it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is permissible; yes. There is no difficulty about it when you stop to think.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BENSON), there were—ayes 74, noes 47.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer another amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 11, at the end of line 8, add: "If the commissioner shall find, after notice and hearing, as provided for in section 5 of this title, that any person has sold any flavoring extract, sirup, or beverage in violation of this paragraph, he shall notify such person, and the person for whom the sale was made, if any, to desist from selling such article, and it shall thereupon be lawful for a period of one year thereafter for any person so notified to sell any such extract, sirup, or beverage without making an application for, giving a bond, and obtaining a permit so to do, which permit may be issued upon such conditions as the commissioner may deem necessary to prevent such illegal sales, and shall require a record and report of sales. If the commissioner shall find that any article can be successfully and economically manufactured so as to contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume he shall by regulation forbid the manufacture and sale of any such article containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. Such regulation shall take effect six months after the date it is promulgated, and thereafter it shall be unlawful to manufacture and sell any article so forbidden. Any finding under this paragraph shall be subject to court review as in said section 5 provided.

Mr. GARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. In the course of this amendment as read by the Clerk, it seems that the commissioner orders somebody to desist, and after that time it is "lawful" for a year for him to do this thing.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Unlawful.

Mr. GARD. The Clerk read "lawful."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARD. It is a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to have it reread, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment provides that it shall be "unlawful."

Mr. GARD. The Clerk read "lawful."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment specifies that it shall be unlawful. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is agreed to by the extract people—those engaged in the industry.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think he ought to write a bill here because it is agreed to by the extract people or other people?

Mr. WALSH. That is the way this bill was written.

Mr. GARD. Does the chairman of the Judiciary Committee think that is the way it ought to be written?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Republicans have been accustomed to allow interested parties to write their bills for them, and they have never gotten away from that habit.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GARD. I have no further inquiry. I simply desired to know whether the chairman of the Judiciary Committee thought that was proper.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will just make an explanation in reference to this. Because of the change made in paragraph (e) of this section, it is necessary to harmonize the language.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman intend to continue longer in session this evening?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We would like it very much if we could finish this section.

Mr. GARD. I think the members of the committee are tired. We have been here since noon, nine hours and a half now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I want to call attention to this amendment. I think it is important that something of this kind should go into the bill.

When this matter first came up no one appeared, as far as the extract people were concerned. I think the committee—I know I was—was misled as to just what the situation is in regard to flavoring extracts. After the bill had been reported, a number of parties interested in extracts and sirups appeared in my office, and I received a large number of letters calling my attention to the language in paragraph (e). It was insisted that under that paragraph the makers of extracts and sirups could not continue business. So the question came up as to what sort of an amendment would have to be made. It was claimed that no extract could be made without alcohol. At first it was insisted that these sirups and extracts containing alcohol could not be used for beverage purposes at all. They finally abandoned that theory and made frank confession that a good deal could be made into drink for beverage purposes.

Then the question was presented of how to make it safe to permit their manufacture and sale. I examined the statutes of different States to determine what the States had done in reference to this matter. After considerable negotiation I submitted to the committee the proposition that is outlined in these amendments. There are extracts made without alcohol. The States of Kansas, Texas, and Georgia permit very few, if any, of these extracts to be sold.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman: Are not the extracts made without the alcohol synthetic or artificial flavor?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not able to answer that question. There have been sent to my office different kinds of extracts made without alcohol. I have received a large number of letters from various institutions insisting that all of this sort of extracts can be made without alcohol. Consequently we put the provision contained in this amendment that if they can be made successfully and economically without alcohol then, in the interest of prohibition, we ought to require it.

It is insisted that extracts made without alcohol are just as good. In fact, some contend that they are better and more economic than those made with alcohol. It seems to me that if they are going to sell large quantities after prohibition goes into effect that can be used for intoxicating beverages, we ought to find some way to reach the situation. Consequently I thought we might leave it to the commissioner to determine whether these articles need go on the market at all.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Does the gentleman or the manufacturers say that the extract of vanilla can be made from the vanilla bean without alcohol?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have a large number of packages of vanila extracts in my office.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is it artificial or synthetic flavor?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is insisted that they are just as good as the alcoholic extracts.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Just as good to the taste, does the gentleman mean?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; they are called extracts and are, no doubt, extracts of the vanilla bean. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words to get some information from the chairman of the committee. This is a very important provision in this bill and deals with a matter concerning which everybody in the country is interested. These amendments, which practically rewrite this section of the bill, we have never had an opportunity to examine. I will ask the chairman, in view of the lateness of the hour, if he would not be willing to offer the amendments to-night for the purpose of the RECORD and afford the Members of the House an opportunity to examine them and vote on them later.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the House is willing to do that, I will offer them and then move that the committee rise.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask that for the time being that the amendments be submitted now and voted on when we resume our sitting on this bill, but in the meantime I would like to suggest other amendments to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers certain amendments for the information of the House, and they will be read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman seems to be asking to have them printed in the RECORD, so that Members may see what they are. If they are going to be put into the RECORD, what is the sense of reading them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that they be read for the information of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, after the word "in," insert the words "paragraphs a, b, c, and d of."

Page 11, line 7, strike out "beverage" and insert "such."

Page 11, line 4, after the word "purposes," insert "or any extract or sirup for intoxicating-beverage purposes."

Page 11, lines 10 and 11, after the figure "4," strike out "is capable of being used as a beverage" and insert "does not correspond with the descriptions and limitations therein provided."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, we have not yet read section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. These are merely being read for the information of the House.

Mr. GARD. They are not offered for purposes of adoption?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

Page 11, lines 13 and 14, after the word "article," in line 13, strike out "is capable of being used for beverage purposes" and insert "does not so correspond."

Page 11, lines 23 and 24, after the word "article," in line 23, strike out "is not capable of being used for beverage purposes" and insert "corresponds to the descriptions and limitations provided in section 4 of this title."

Page 9, lines 19 and 20, after the word "the," in line 19, strike out the words "purchase, sale, transportation, importation, exportation, and use of."

Mr. GARD. Should not the word "act" be stricken out in line 22, page 9, and the word "title" inserted?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That has been done. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6810, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Nolan-Kenyon bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Nolan-Kenyon bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein a letter from Judge Pollock, a noted authority on prohibition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BAER. Then I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. If it is to contain any letter written by anyone else, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 18, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Bureau of Standards for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 151); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Commerce for salaries, office of the Secretary of Commerce (H. Doc. No. 152); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DENISON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6222) to remove a certain tract or lots of land in Cristobal, Canal Zone, from the operation and effect of the Executive order of the President of December 5, 1912, pursuant to the act of Congress of August 24, 1912 (37 Stats., ch. 390, p. 565), reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 123), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4718) granting a pension to Winfield H. Handley, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Schneider & Metzger, Peoria, Ill., urging repeal of luxury tax, and also urging that Congress put an end to inefficient administration of our railroad and express systems which are unendurable; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Keith Swartz, Anti-Saloon League, Dixon, Ill.; Joseph J. Edwards, Forrest, Ill.; and Edward F. Rittenhouse, Pontiac, Ill., all urging enforcement of prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 18, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we present ourselves to Thee and open our hearts for the reception of Thy truth. Thou hast promised that Thou wilt write Thy laws in our hearts, and in our minds Thou wilt establish them. So we pray as we journey on to the duties of this day that we may have the guidance of the inward monitor—the law that is written deep in our own hearts, that is in conformity to the will of God. May we feel that our highest obligation is to do that which is pleasing in Thy sight. So do Thou bless us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CABLEGRAM FROM THE ARGENTINE SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a cablegram from the President of the Senate of the Argentine Nation, expressing its intense satisfaction for the signing of the treaty of peace, which will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PERMANENT RANK OF SUPERIOR OFFICERS (H. DOC. NO. 153).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I take the liberty of calling your attention to a matter which I am sure is at the heart of the whole country, and which I have had very much in mind throughout all these months when we were trying to arrange a peace that would be worthy of the spirit and achievements of the men who won the victory in the field and on the sea. After mature reflection, I earnestly recommend that you give the permanent rank of general to John J. Pershing and Peyton C. March, expressing the law in such a way as to give precedence to Gen. Pershing; and that you give the permanent rank of admiral to William S. Benson and William S. Sims. I take it for granted that I am only anticipating your own thoughts in proposing these honors for the men upon whom the principal responsibilities devolved for achieving the great results which our incomparable Navy and Army accomplished.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 18 July, 1919.

PROPAGANDA FOR LEGISLATION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, during the last two or three days my mail has been largely burdened with letters, some of which are written, some in printed form, but practically identical in language, of which this is a sample:

> The writer wishes to protest against the passage of Senate bill 2202, the Kenyon bill, on account of it being unjust, un-American, and socialistic.

The bill referred to is that introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to regulate the packing industry. My purpose in reading this communication into the RECORD is to emphasize the fact that a very obvious and a very common system of propaganda has been inaugurated against the bill.

I am not familiar with the merits of the bill; it may be subject to all the epithets which are made against it in this correspondence; but it would seem to me that those who are initiating it either have a very low opinion of the intelligence of the average Senator or else they go upon the theory that by demonstrating considerable political strength they can influence Senators in their ultimate determination of this bill. As a Member of this body I want to protest against the constant tendency to either oppose or commend to our attention bills and business before it by that method of appeal. It is becoming a nuisance and particularly to those of us who have other correspondence that is of substantial value to attend to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7343) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7343, an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. WARREN, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY AIR SERVICE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, while I have the floor I want to refer to another subject briefly, and I will preface what I have to say by reading a very brief clipping from this morning's Washington Post. It is entitled "Air Service drops plans":

> SQUADRONS ABANDONED, AS OFFICERS WILL BE ONLY 222 ON SEPTEMBER 30.
> Plans for the establishment of four observation air squadrons in the Philippines as part of the basic defense of the islands will have to be abandoned, Army officials said yesterday, unless some remedy is found for the present situation of the Air Service. Each of these squadrons requires 41 flying officers, and the entire commissioned personnel of the service will number only 222 by September 30.
> Other important projects to be abandoned include 3 squadrons for Hawaii, 3 squadrons for Panama and 2 for the border patrol, and 40 balloon companies for the United States.

This announcement is doubtless due to the fact that the committee of conference on the Army supply bill were unable to agree upon a greater amount than $25,000,000 for the Army Air Service, a sum which would be as well expended if it were taken out into midocean and sunk to the bottom of the sea, so far as any permanent benefit that it will confer upon our air service is concerned. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, with practical unanimity, recommended and reported, and the Senate adopted, an appropriation of twice that amount, which was the lowest limit under the hearings that was commensurate with the adequacy and the needs of this service.

Now, I believe in economy as earnestly as any man, but I protest against that false economy which consigns this great arm of the service, both for offense and defense, into what is virtual abandonment.

Mr. President, the Air Service is the coming arm for defensive and for offensive purposes. It is so fully appreciated and recognized by our late allies in the war that they, notwithstanding their depleted finances and burden of taxation, are bending their energies and devoting large appropriations to the development of this service. We, with whom the airship originated—for it is an American invention—and who found ourselves so handicapped because of our neglect of it at the time we entered into the war, now propose to give little, if any, attention to it, in consequence of which, if trouble again arises, we shall be in the same situation in which we were when war was declared against Germany.

Mr. President, if the information which the public receive from the administration is reliable—and I hope it is—to the effect that the policy of "watchful waiting" with regard to Mexico is to be abandoned, and if we are to assume a firm attitude toward that country, we may happen to be precipitated into serious differences almost without warning. It will then be a melancholy spectacle to the Nation, and doubtless one of great pleasure to any of our competitors, that we shall not possess a single air squadron—we, this mighty Nation, with its 100,000,000 people and with its recent experiences, notwithstanding its expenditures of $100,000,000, will be bereft of the advantage this service affords. I want the country to understand that the Senate of the United States is not to be held responsible for this humiliating condition.

PROPAGANDA FOR LEGISLATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, with regard to the propaganda referred to by the Senator from Colorado, I wish to say that it is not all on the bill referred to by him; it is on nearly every bill that comes before Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. I stated that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as that particular bill is concerned, I will say that I have received 10 petitions to support it against 1 in opposition to the bill.

Last Monday and Tuesday the Joint Committee on Printing held hearings on the question of what department publications should be discontinued after August 1. The representatives of the departments wherever they received an impression that any of the publications issued from their departments were to be discontinued or thought that the committee was inclined to discontinue them immediately began a propaganda by sending telegrams into nearly every State of the Union, requesting that individuals interested or subscribers immediately telegraph to the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing protesting against the discontinuance of the publications.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I want to emphasize the fact that the practice is becoming so common that it is not only ineffective but it is a nuisance. My impression is that the basis of it is on the assumption that a development of strength of a political character and a combination of voters will have its effect upon the action of the Senate. Congress is not in favor of prohibition; but Congress to-day is doing the will of the prohibitionists because Members of both Houses believe that the prohibition sentiment is better organized and stronger than any other; and people are carrying on the same propaganda in different ways.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator excuse just a suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think what the Senator from Colorado just said confirms what Tom Carlyle said, that public sentiment is not what everybody thinks, but what the people charged with public duty think that everybody thinks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have wondered who paid for these telegrams. I happen to be chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, and as to the telegrams that I have received—floods of them—protesting against the discontinuance of certain publications, I know the parties who sent the telegrams do not pay the expenses of sending them; and I know that in the case of the telegrams sent from the department the Government of the United States will have to pay for them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In many cases, if the Senator will permit me, the parties sending the telegrams know nothing at all about the purpose for which they are sent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is absolutely correct. I have received telegrams calling attention, for instance, to House resolution, say, 487, and the party sending the telegram knew no more about House joint resolution 487 than a baby knows. I have written such persons many times and asked them "what particular part of the resolution do you object to?" They have answered, and said they have not even seen the resolution, know nothing about it; and yet they are paying—or some one is paying—the expense of sending telegrams. Against this propaganda that is on Congress ought to express its dissent, and I believe every Senator and every Representative ought to announce that he will pay no attention to propaganda of this kind hereafter. Of the telegrams that I have received there is no difference in wording in any of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will excuse me in this connection, I received three so-called petitions addressed to me against the league of peace upon the ground that it was surrendering the sovereignty and independence of the United States: and in each case all the signatures were in the same handwriting, and the language was exactly the same in each petition. But I do not see any right that I have to quarrel about that. People have a right to wire me, and they have a right to send petitions, and they have a right to use propaganda, and, God knows, they have a right to suppose that Representatives and Senators will be influenced by political motives, and that if a Representative or Senator thinks that he may be defeated, he will take one course; and if he thinks not, he will probably take another. Is it not, after all, our own fault? Is it not our own cowardice? If people did not believe that, they would not bring that sort of pressure to bear on us.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever to any citizen of the United States writing to any Senator or Representative; and surely I have no objection to his writing to me, provided he expresses his own opinion and provided he pays the expense. I am not speaking about such requests. I am speaking about a propaganda started by the departments themselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Government paying for the telegrams. I have not any doubt that there is some arrangement made by which the Government or somebody pays for the telegrams that we are receiving in this particular propaganda.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to be misunderstood about that. Of course, any propaganda started and carried on at the expense of the United States Government against either branch of the legislative body is wrong in every conceivable form. I was not talking about that. I was going back to the basic point at the root of all of it; and the basic point at the root of all of it is that if politicians, Senators, and Representatives were not cowards, this sort of pressure would not be here bothering us to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a great deal of truth in what the Senator says.

Mr. KING and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not only would it be improper to use public money, but it would be also equally as improper for public officials to take the money of parties in interest and send out telegrams at their expense while they are in public employment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that some of the telegrams I have received protesting against the publication of certain documents have reference to documents which the committee have no idea of discontinuing at all and never have had.

I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I received a letter four or five days ago. It was unusually frank and candid, differing from many of those that are written to Senators and Congressmen. The writer stated that he had received word from a certain bureau in the Department of Agriculture that owing to the penuriousness of Congress in failing to make adequate appropriations for a certain publication it was to be discontinued or its usefulness very much minimized, and protesting against it, and insisting that we make large appropriations for the continuation of that publication. He confessed that he got his inspiration from the department; the department had written him and he was asked to write me because I had been somewhat strong in my opposition to departmental publications and bureau publications, many of which are but a waste of printer's ink and an annoyance and an unnecessary expense to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I received a protest from the same gentleman to whom my colleague has referred, and at the bottom of it there was a threat in which he predicted what would happen to me if I did not do such and such a thing. All I wish to do at this time is to call attention to the fact that I believe the departments of the Government ought to cease propaganda of this sort. If it affects me in any way it is that if I were favorable to a proposition and the head of some department began a propaganda of the kind that is going on now I would almost feel like changing my attitude, if for no other reason than to let the departments know that Senators and Representatives will act upon their judgment irrespective of what propaganda may be started.

Mr. WARREN. Apropos of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Colorado and the distinguished Senator from Utah, I will ask the Secretary to read section 6 of the third deficiency appropriation act, which refers directly to this matter and which was sought to be corrected by the Committee on Appropriations, who reported that bill, which Congress passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 6. That hereafter no part of the money appropriated by this or any other act shall, in the absence of express authorization by Congress, be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress, to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress, whether before or after the introduction of any bill or resolution proposing such legislation or appropriation; but this shall not prevent officers and employees of the United States from communicating to Members of Congress on the request of any Member or to Congress, through the proper official channels, requests for legislation or appropriations which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business.

Any officer or employee of the United States who, after notice and hearing by the superior officer vested with the power of removing him, is found to have violated or attempted to violate this section, shall be removed by such superior officer from office or employment. Any officer or employee of the United States who violates or attempts to violate this section shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Mr. WARREN. That would seem to cover the case. It is the current law, and I hope and I believe it will be enforced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming one question before he concludes. It seems to me that that goes a little bit too far. It says except when some executive officer shall be requested by a Member of Congress. I think that every executive officer, even in the most subordinate capacity, ought to be left free to write directly to a Senator or Representative and advocate an appropriation or the cessation of one, whichever he chooses. I would suggest when the Senator finally brings the matter before the Senate that he leave that out and do not say "upon request of a Member of Congress."

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator did not hear me when I stated that it is current law, a law which was passed some weeks ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not hear the Senator say that, and if I had, it would not change my view that so much of it ought to be corrected at once, because undoubtedly an executive officer or the head of a bureau or department ought to be left perfectly free, upon his own initiative, to advise me or you or the Senator from Utah or any other Senator as to what he thinks would be an improvement in the law in order to better carry on the business of the Government. To make it a penal offense to do that without our request is making ourselves a lot of Prussian junkers, in a way. We do not want to do that, of course. That law ought to be corrected to that extent.

PEACE TREATY AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, on Monday next, at the close of the morning business, I shall ask the privilege of addressing the Senate on the subject of the pending peace treaty and the league of nations.

TRANSFER OF SHANTUNG TO JAPAN.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I give notice that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, if the business of the Senate permits, I shall discuss the provisions of the treaty of peace relating to Shantung.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice that on the 14th instant I should take occasion to briefly present to the Senate my views with regard to certain reservations upon the peace treaty. I desire to submit to the Senate my views with reference to that matter on next Wednesday morning, provided no Senator has given notice that he desires to occupy that time. If so, with the permission of the Senate, I will discuss the matter on Friday morning at the close of morning business, not only with relation to the legal effect but also with respect to the political effect of such reservations.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Tuesday, July 29, I shall address the Senate on the league of nations.

MILITARY AIR SERVICE.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] referred to the possible necessity for further airplanes and some criticism of the action of Congress or of the department with reference to the discharge of officers in the service. I send to the desk a letter from the governor of New Mexico containing a telegram from the governor of Texas upon this subject, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fe, July 11, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have this day received a telegram from Hon. W. P. Hobby, governor of Texas, which is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

AUSTIN, TEX., July 10, 1919.

Gov. O. A. LARRAZOLO,
Santa Fe, N. Mex.:

Knowing the Mexican situation as I do and believing that some action by the United States Government with reference to conditions in Mexico and along the border will be necessary in the near future, I view with alarm the action of the War Department in demobilizing and discharging all officers of the National Army, which will practically wipe out the Air Service. To my mind, it is imperative that Congress make some provisions for a continuation in service of a reasonable number of the National Army officers until a permanent military policy has been established, as it would be impossible to get these trained officers, upon whom the Government has spent millions of dollars, especially in the aviation branch, back into service after being discharged. Please wire your Senators and Representatives to aid this matter.

W. P. HOBBY,
Governor of Texas.

I agree with Gov. Hobby that the policy of demobilizing and discharging the officers of the National Army now on duty, principally along the Mexican frontier, is rather an improvident one, and that at least until matters in Mexico assume a permanently peaceful and orderly condition a sufficient number of such trained officers and soldiers should be kept on duty along the border, and this, as you can readily understand, as a necessary protection to our people and interests.

I therefore suggest to you the advisability of conferring with the War Department and of calling the attention of the Secretary of War to this matter, with the request that a sufficient force, commanded by competent and trained officers, be maintained along the Mexican border until such time as their further presence there is shown to be unnecessary.

Hoping that you will attend to this request, I beg to remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

O. A. LARRAZOLO, Governor.

Hon. A. B. FALL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have not complied with the request of the governor in so far as taking up this matter with the War Department is concerned because I am informed that the War Department has no recourse; that the Congress of the United States having failed to make provision for these officers it has become necessary for the War Department to take the action which they have taken. I should like to know from the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee if that is not a correct statement of the case.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As the Senator is on the floor, I desire to state that I have been to the War Department in an effort to have as many soldiers as possible kept along the international line from Texas to the California coast. I have been assured that Gen. Cabell, who is in charge of this, was keeping the War Department advised of the conditions existing, and I have been informed likewise that every possible protection would be taken to sufficiently guard the border. I confess that, judging from the letters I have received from the towns along the border of Arizona, they are not satisfied. I believe they are absolutely sincere in it and know what they are doing; and I should welcome any act, either by the department or by the Congress, that will put beyond peradventure any threatened danger to the American people along the border between the two Republics.

While I am on my feet I will say in that connection that at some later day in this session I may have something to say about the conditions in Mexico as revealed to me from public prints and from private letters, and will submit to the Congress the necessity of some steps being taken to safeguard the lives and property of the people not only on the border but those living in Mexico under the invitation, if you please, of the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona did not catch fully the statement I was making.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true; I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I will repeat for the Senator's benefit that I stated that I had not presented to the War Department this communication to me from the governor of New Mexico, inclosing to me the telegram from the governor of Texas, because my information was that the War Department could do nothing in the matter; that the Congress of the United States itself, by cutting off appropriations, had rendered it necessary that the War Department should discharge these officers whom these governors seem to think are so necessary for the protection of the border in the aeronautic service, and I had just requested the chairman of the committee to state whether my information was incorrect.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the chairman answers the question I want to inquire of the Senator if there are not enough soldiers that could be sent to that place for the proper and full defense of that whole border without endangering the safety of the balance of the country? If there is any place in the world where we need the soldiers now, in my judgment, it is along that border.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I will take just a moment or two to express my views on that subject. I shall trespass for only a minute upon the time of the Senate.

In my judgment, sir, the trouble along the border is that the troops there have not the proper orders. In my judgment, if they were ordered to prevent raids or incursions upon this side and to take any means which they thought necessary to preserve order along the border and to protect the lives and property of American citizens one-tenth the number now on the border could do it. We have a border of very great length, 1,400 miles, practically unprotected. We have enough troops to patrol every mile of it, and more; but the difficulty is that they must so conduct themselves as not to bring this country into a possible conflict with anyone who may be temporarily exercising power in Mexico. The consequence is that the faces of our troops along the border, guarding us ostensibly from raids from the other side, are turned toward the north instead of toward the south to prevent incursions of American business men owning property in Mexico into the Republic, at least upon a great many occasions, at various points. They are attempting to prevent smuggling, as they call it, from this side to the other side, and they overlook the smuggling from the other side to this side. They do pursue a hot trail, as they call it, when they can get orders from a superior officer to pursue a hot trail; and I may say that the troops, in so far as their orders are concerned, have performed their duty magnificently. The people of the United States do not know that at least 12 times within the last 4 or 5 or 6 months the troops of the United States have gone across the Mexican border and have pursued Mexican marauders, and when they examined the bodies invariably they found the uniforms of the Carranza regular soldiers upon the bodies of at least some of those marauders whom they were pursuing. Col. Langhorne and the officers under him in the Great Bend district in Texas have done magnificent service, and if they were turned loose and told to stop it they would stop the trouble along the border.

Now, I renew the request for information from the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, with respect to the Air Service, which was discussed here a few minutes ago, we might just as well face the facts as they are. The Army appropriation bill made an exceedingly severe cut in the Air Service appropriations and brought the appropriations down to such a point, not only in the matter of the appropriation of $25,000,000 for maintenance, operation, experiment, and construction, but also in the pay appropriation for the Army, that the Air Service is practically reduced to a shell. There will be little left of it by September 30. Between now and September 30 every emergency officer serving in the Air Service must be discharged, for the simple reason that by September 30 there will not be any money to pay such officers. The same is true in every other branch of the Army, but the effect upon the Air Service is the more serious, because it was among the emergency officers that we found our fliers.

I am informed by the Chief of the Air Service that this will leave on September 30 a total commissioned personnel in the Air Service of 232 officers. Practically all of those will have to be assigned to purely administrative duties, and we will have, in effect, no fliers at all.

It is idle to talk about the De Haviland planes, of which we have something like 3,000 in storage, in good, bad, or indifferent condition. If the present plans go through—and I think myself the War Department is quite helpless in the matter—there will be no one to fly the planes. I say "no one." There may be ten or a dozen men who might be gathered here and there out of the regular service who have become fliers during this war and who can be taken away from the administrative work; but to all intents and purposes there will be no active flying service in the Army of the United States after September 30 next.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have been somewhat critical in the past of the War Department, although not vociferously so, and I simply wanted to do that department justice in this matter, as I understood the facts about it, by saying that if there is any blame whatsoever to be placed in the particular matter under discussion it is the fault of the Congress of the United States and not the fault of the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And may I interject the observation that it can hardly be said to be the fault of the Senate?

Mr. FALL. That is my understanding.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee permit a question? Is it not true that 90 per cent of these planes, or a great portion of them, are to be turned back to the original manufacturers at about 10 per cent of the cost of making them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator from Kentucky must be referring to training planes. It is true that the department is endeavoring to sell at the best figures it can the training planes, of which we have a tremendous surplus; but the only combat plane, or so-called combat plane, that we have in any quantity is the De Haviland 4, which already, I may say, is, by comparison with foreign planes, out of date, but it is a serviceable plane. The trouble is we will not have men to fly it.

Mr. STANLEY. Have we not any battle planes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The De Haviland 4 is the only plane we have which is used in aerial warfare of any kind or description.

Mr. STANLEY. Are these training planes serviceable for any other service than training planes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not. You can not mount guns on them. You can not do active work with them. They are only to train men to fly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, are they being sold at 10 per cent of their cost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That matter was discussed when the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate. It is true that 2,700 training planes were sold at something like 10 or 15 per cent of their original cost. Some were entirely out of condition, some were in poor condition, some were in good condition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the reason or the excuse, whichever it may be, given for that transaction?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That nobody wanted them in large quantities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Could they not have been retailed, then, to a little bit better advantage?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, that is a question of policy. I am not prepared to defend the War Department on that point nor to criticize it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not asking the Senator to defend the War Department. I am merely asking his opinion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator asked me a question, and I am endeavoring to answer it. I can give the Senator the War Department's explanation, and I have to trust to my recollection, which may be somewhat inaccurate. According to my recollection, the War Department asserted that it would have been dangerous to sell training planes to individual citizens all over the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because many of those planes are not in good repair, and accidents would inevitably follow their falling into the hands of individual citizens; and the War Department contended that it would be a bad policy for the Government to sell 2,700 planes, in all degrees of defective condition or lack of repair, and let them be scattered all over the country, and have crashes and accidents and complaints following. So, rather than do that, they sold a large number to the Curtiss Co., who agreed to take them just as they ran. Some of them were standing in hangars, some of them were on factory floors, some of them had flown almost to destruction, some had been flown very little. The Curtiss Co. agreed to take a certain number just as they ran, and to get them out of the country, and to let somebody else do the crashing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, if that be true, the department was justified in violating the maxim of "caveat emptor"; but are not the materials in an airplane worth more than 10 per cent of its cost, even if you are going to junk it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not tell the Senator from Mississippi. I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know, either. I thought perhaps the Senator did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I should like to know if the morning business is concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not started yet.

Mr. LODGE. I thought we were under the order of petitions and memorials.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are. We have had one petition.

Mr. LODGE. We are acting under that order, then. There are a number of Senators who are pretty busily engaged who have been sitting here trying to get an opportunity to dispose of some morning business. Therefore I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can have it. Are there further petitions and memorials?

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MOSES. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the Friends of Irish Freedom of Walpole, N. H., remonstrating against the adoption of the covenant of the league of nations. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 12, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MOSES: At a mass meeting of the Friends of Irish Freedom of the Town of Walpole, N. H., held July 6, 1919, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we are opposed to any league of nations that does not safeguard the Monroe doctrine and the absolute right of the American people to decide for themselves what is necessary for their welfare and happiness.

"Resolved, A league of nations founded on force of millions of subject races is not a desirable amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, and we request our Senators to vote against it.

"Resolved, That we demand the freedom of Ireland and all subject races before we consider a league of nations.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators in Congress."

FRIENDS OF IRISH FREEDOM OF WALPOLE, N. H.
WM. J. KING.

JOHN HEALEY.

Mr. MOSES. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of sundry Lithuanian citizens of Manchester, N. H., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LITHUANIANS OF MANCHESTER, N. H.,
122 Merrimack Street, July, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, the Lithuanians of the city of Manchester, N. H., have, in mass meeting assembled, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas Lithuania was for ages an independent State, whose inhabitants, a distinct ethnic group, have never renounced their right to independence; and

"Whereas the establishment of the independent Lithuanian State would add materially to the future peace of the world: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Lithuanians of this city and citizens of the United States of Lithuanian descent, request the United States Government, through the honorable Representative of our district and the honorable Senators of our State, to recognize the complete independence of the Lithuanian Republic."

R. KONDROTAS, Chairman.
J. A. ZUKAUSKAS, Secretary.

Mr. MOSES. I present resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of sundry Lithuanians of the Roman Catholic Parish of All Saints, of Manchester, N. H., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROMAN CATHOLIC PARISH OF ALL SAINTS,
Manchester, N. H., July 13, 1919.

To his honor GEORGE H. MOSES,
House of Senators, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, members of the Lithuanian Roman Catholic Parish of All Saints, of the city of Manchester, N. H., in a meeting assembled at Battery Building, Manchester Street, Manchester, N. H., have adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the invasion by the Polish Army of Lithuania is a brutal violation of the war aims declared by President Wilson and the allied governments, condemned by liberal opinion the world over as indefensible interference with the right of self-determination of nations;

Whereas Lithuania was for ages an independent State, whose inhabitants, a distinct ethnic group, have never renounced their right to independence: Be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the parish and American citizens of Lithuanian descent, hereby request the United States Government to compel Poland to withdraw her army from the Lithuanian territories, and that all assistance be denied to Poland as long as she continues to occupy the invaded territories; and be it further

Resolved, That we request the United States Government to recognize the present Lithuanian Government and to render it moral and material assistance.

L. J. JAKAITIS,
Chairman.
FELIX CHEKUTIS,
Secretary.

Mr. MOSES. I present resolutions adopted by Lodge No. 119, Lithuanian Roman Catholic Alliance of America, of Manchester, N. H., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROMAN CATHOLIC ALLIANCE OF AMERICA, LODGE NO. 119,
Manchester, N. H., July 13, 1919.

To his honor GEORGE H. MOSES,
House of Senators, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, members of the Lithuanian Roman Catholic Alliance of America, Lodge 119, located in the congressional district of the city of Manchester, N. H., have in a meeting assembled at the lodge hall, 153 Manchester Street, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas Lithuania was for ages an independent State, whose inhabitants, a distinct ethnic group, have never renounced their right to independence;

Whereas the establishment of an independent Lithuanian State would add materially to the future peace of the world: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the lodge and citizens of the United States of Lithuanian descent, request the United States Government, through the honorable Representative of our district and the honorable Senators of our State, to recognize the complete independence of the Lithuanian Republic.

L. J. JAKAITIS,
Chairman.
J. A. ZUKAUSKAS,
Secretary.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of Midland Grange, No. 1681, Patrons of Husbandry, of Burrton; of Local Grange, No. 1812, Patrons of Husbandry, of Reno; of Ninnescah Grange, No. 1878, Patrons of Husbandry, of Sylvia; and of Highland Grange, No. 1790, Patrons of Husbandry, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Independence, Kans., and a petition of sundry citizens of Goodland, Kans., praying for the repeal of the tax on automobiles, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Goessel, Kans., and a petition of sundry citizens of Harper County, Kans., praying for the repeal of the tax on ice cream, soda, soft drinks, medicines, toilet articles, clothing, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I present a communication from the League of Free Nations Association, inclosing a resolution adopted at the national conference of that association, based upon a referendum vote of its members throughout the country. I ask that the communication and accompanying resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The communication and accompanying resolution were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEAGUE OF FREE NATIONS ASSOCIATION,
New York City, July 9, 1919.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Wardman Park Inn, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The inclosed resolution, based upon a referendum vote of members throughout the country, was passed last night at a national conference of this association.

Very truly, yours, JAMES G. MCDONALD,
Chairman.

Resolved, That the League of Free Nations Association, in accordance with a referendum of its full membership, calls upon all forward-looking citizens to urge the United States Senate—

1. To ratify without reservations the treaty with Germany, including the league of nations covenant.

Such ratification would establish immediate peace, the world's most urgent need, in the interest of order and progress; would abolish many international injustices which have proved prolific causes of war; and would create an agency for the rectification of remaining injustices and for the establishment of mutually advantageous and just relations between nations.

2. To accompany its ratification with a resolution, declaring it to be the purpose of the United States, as a member of the league of nations, to—

(a) Press for the immediate restoration of Kiaochow and the German concessions in Shantung to the Chinese Republic.

(b) Hold that nothing in the treaty or the covenant shall be construed as authorizing interference by the league in internal revolutions or as preventing genuine redress and readjustment of boundaries, through orderly processes provided by the league, at any time in the future that these may be demanded by the welfare and manifest interest of the people concerned.

(c) Call for the inclusion of Germany in the council of the league as soon as the new Republic shall have entered in good faith upon carrying out the treaty provisions; for the inclusion of Russia as soon as the Russian people establish stable government; and for the full participation of both Germany and Russia on equal footing in all economic intercourse as the best insurance against any reversion to the old scheme of balance of power, economic privilege, and war.

(d) Press for the progressive reduction of armaments by all nations.

(e) Throw its whole weight in behalf of such changes in the constitution and such developments in the practice of the league as will make it more democratic in its scheme of representation, its procedure more legislative and less exclusively diplomatic; an instrument of growth invigorated and molded by the active, democratic forces of the progressive nations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented memorials of employees of the Hood Rubber Co., of Watertown; of the H. J. Heinz Co.; of Charles H. Horne & Co., of Averill; of the Hazen-Brown Co., of Boston; of the Truscon Steel Co., of Boston; of the Ideal Vogue Shoe Co., of Averill; of Kenworthy Bros. Co., of Stoughton; of the Babson Statistical Organization; of the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., of Boston; of the Rice, Barton & Fales Co., of Worcester; of Robert G. Pratt & Co.; of George C. Vaughan, of Peabody; of the Angier Chemical Co., of Boston; of Putnam & Cross, of Lynn; of the Weber Piano Co.; of Rogers Lunt & Bowles Co.; of the Bicknell-Thomson Co., of Greenfield; of the Columbia Steel & Shafting Co., of Boston; of the Hunt-Spiller Manufacturing Co., of Boston; of Robbins Gamwell & Co., of Pittsfield; of Wadsworth, Howland & Co., of Boston; of the John Hood Co., of Boston; of the Springfield Printing & Binding Co.; of the L. E. Knott Apparatus Co.; of the Beaver Mills, of North Adams; of the American Bosch Magneto Corporation; of John P. Squire & Co.; of the Barrett Co.; of Whitney & Co., of Leominster; of the Globe Automatic Sprinkler Co.; of the Cheney Bigelow Wire Works, of Springfield; of the J. D. Clark Co., of Rochdale; of the Standard Plunger Elevator Co., of Worcester; of the Potter Drug & Chemical Co., of Malden; of the Burmus Paper Co. (Inc.); of the United Button Co.; of the Spencer Box Co.; of the Sulpho-Naphthol Co.; of the A. E. Little Co., of Brockton; of the Wire Goods Co., of Worcester; of the Merrimack Manufacturing Co., of Lowell; of C. B. Sampson, of Holyoke; of the Armour Leather Co., of Boston; and of the Baker-Vawter Co., of Holyoke, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the St. Francis levee district of Arkansas, in annual meeting at Bridge Junction, Ark., favoring the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Braxton County, W. Va., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2847) providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, which was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 793) authorizing the issuance of patent to the Milk River Valley Gun Club (Rept. No. 88); and

A bill (S. 794) granting lands for school purposes in Government town sites on reclamation projects (Rept. No. 89).

REV. E. M. MALLORY AND REV. E. BELL.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 124, submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia on the 17th instant, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 1, before the word "is," to strike out "Secretary of State" and insert "President"; in the same line, after the word "hereby," to strike out "directed" and insert "requested"; in line 2, after the word "Senate," to insert "if not incompatible with the public interest"; in line 3, after the word "in," to strike out "his," and in the same line, after the word "possession," to insert "of the State Department," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, the records in the cases and all papers in possession of the State Department connected with the cases of Rev. E. M. Mallory, charged with harboring criminals, and Rev. E. Bell, charged with involuntary homicide, they being citizens of the United States and residents at the time in Korea.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have received a number of communications from parties acquainted, as they thought, with the facts complaining very bitterly of trials or alleged trials in Korea and of treatment of our citizens as well as the natives and other citizens. I did not present to the Senate or make public those communications; I thought it hardly wise to do so; but when these two cases were brought to my attention, when two alleged trials of American missionaries in Korea were referred to, with the further statement that the records were in the State Department, and that they would give us an appreciation of what was taking place, I felt that at least we ought to have those records, as requested by those who wrote to us, and find out from them, if we could, something of an accurate character. It was for that reason that I offered the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MYERS. I present the report of the Committee on Public Lands on Senate bill 183, with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 90) thereon. It is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. WALSH], and is intended to afford partial relief to the homesteaders on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana. They have suffered from terrible drought for three years. I ask that the bill be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has made homestead entry under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stats. L., p. 558), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment," may obtain an extension of time for one year from the anniversary of the date of entry last preceding the passage of this act within which to pay the one-half of the installment then due or such part of any preceding installment, where payment has not yet been made and where an extension of time therefor is not authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stats. L., p. 994), by paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the sums to be extended from the maturity of the unpaid installments to the expiration of the period of extension, the interest to be paid to the receiver of the land office for the district in which the lands are situated, within such time as may be prescribed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the one-half of any installment which becomes due within one year from the passage of this act and for which an extension of time for payment is not authorized by the said act of March 2, 1917, may also be extended for a period of one year by paying interest thereon in advance at the said rate: Provided further, That any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in like manner, but no payment shall be extended beyond eight years from the date entry nor shall any extension be granted for less than one year: And provided further, That if commutation proof is submitted all the unpaid payments must be made at that time.

SEC. 2. That moneys paid as interest provided for herein shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians, the same as moneys realized from the sale of the lands.

SEC. 3. That the failure of an entryman to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any payment extended either under the provisions hereof or under the provisions of the said act of March 2, 1917, at or before the time to which such payment has been extended, shall forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 17, after the word "may," to strike out "annually," and in line 18, after the word "manner," to strike out "but no payments shall be extended beyond eight years from the date of entry, nor shall any extension be granted for less than one year," so as to read:

That any person who has made homestead entry under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 558), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment," may obtain an extension of time for one year from the anniversary of the date of entry last preceding the passage of this act within which to pay the one-half of the installment then due, or such part of any preceding installment, where payment has not yet been made and where an extension of time therefor is not authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 994), by paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent per anuum on the sums to be extended from the maturity of the unpaid installments to the expiration of the period of extension, the interest to be paid to the receiver of the land office for the district in which the lands are situated within such time as may be prescribed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the one-half of any installment which becomes due within one year from the passage of this act and for which an extension of time for payment is not authorized by the said act of March 2, 1917, may also be extended for a period of one year by paying interest thereon in advance at the said rate: Provided further, That any payment so extended may thereafter be extended for a period of one year in like manner: And provided further, That if commutation proof is submitted all the unpaid payments must be made at that time.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7343) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2527) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 2528) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply and as a municipal park site; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2529) to appropriate money for the relief of impoverished and suffering homesteaders and other farmers in the drought-stricken western regions of the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 2530) to authorize an advance to the "reclamation fund" for the prompt completion of drainage work on the Rio Grande project (Texas-New Mexico), and other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2531) donating a captured cannon or fieldpiece and cannon balls to the town of Follansbee, Brooke County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 2532) to incorporate the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2533) granting an increase of pension to George E. Guthrie (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 2534) granting an increase of pension to Anton Mazzanovich (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

PRICE OF COAL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and also that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce if that is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 126) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Whereas for several years the price of coal to the consumer has from time to time been largely increased; and

Whereas for a period this increase in price was attributed to existing war conditions; and

Whereas in spite of the fact that since the armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, normal peace conditions have prevailed, the price of coal has continued to rise, without any apparent economic or other proper reason therefor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be instructed to make inquiry into the cause or causes which have brought about the enormous increase in the market price of coal, and to that end obtain full data regarding freight rates, wages, profits, and other matters bearing upon the question under consideration, with a view to determining who or what may be responsible for such increase in price, whether due to economic causes, and, therefore, proper and right, or whether due to manipulation or profiteering on the part of miners, shippers, or dealers in coal.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to subpœna witnesses and compel their attendance, to send for persons and papers, and do such further acts as may be necessary to secure any and all information desired in the furtherance of said inquiry.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce shall report its findings to the Senate, together with such recommendations as may be pertinent and advisable, with a view either to congressional or Executive action, in order to remedy existing conditions or the punishment of any individual or corporation deemed guilty of unlawful acts.

Resolved further, That the expense of the aforesaid inquiry be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk a short communication from the Farmers' Union and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

615 WOODWARD BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., July 15, 1919.

DEAR SIR: We are glad that there is still a chance for the repeal of the daylight-saving law, as all farmers are interested in seeing this done at the earliest possible moment.

This is a question upon which the farmers are of one opinion. They are absolutely unanimous in their opposition to this law and have been from the day it went into effect. It is not only a great inconvenience to them, but in many cases proves an absolute loss and waste to them.

The farmers were told during the war that they must expect to make greater sacrifices than any other class. They were practically the only business men who worked without a "cost plus" in some form. They were the only laborers who never went on a strike, no matter how long the hours or how little the pay. Now, the daylight-saving law, along with other things, has been instrumental in creating dissatisfaction among farm laborers. They have borne all this patiently up to the time when there can be no legitimate excuse for a continuance of such unjust legislation.

Farmers do not have access to the President as do the organizations that are advocating the continuance of this law. They feel sure that if the President was closer in touch with the situation and knew the hardships this law works upon them and that they are unanimously against it he would not want them to bear this unnecessary burden longer. You have been on the ground continuously and know the feeling of the farmers in this matter, and we feel that we may depend on you to see that this unjust and unnecessary law is repealed at once.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President.

E. A. CALVIN,
Washington Representative,
Association Farmers' Union Presidents.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an article entitled "The league of nations," written by William H. Fleming, of Georgia. Mr. Fleming was formerly a Representative in the Congress of the United States. I served with him there either one or two terms, I have forgotten now which. He is a remarkably good lawyer and a very clear reasoner, and he has written an article which, I think, will aid the public and the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to understand the legal situation with regard to the league of peace, especially upon the question of the surrender of sovereignty and independence, that has been so much argued; and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

(By William H. Fleming, former Congressman Tenth District of Georgia.)

We people in America did not pay the price nor bear the agony of France and Belgium and England and Italy in the World War. Yet the pages of history afford no nobler example of devotion to liberty, of loyalty to humanity, of service to brother man, and of duty to God than when America pledged her life, her fortune, and her sacred honor that the Hun should not crush out our Christian civilization.

Victory has been achieved, but not without the sacrifice of seven and a half million of human lives and a waste of wealth almost inconceivable.

Some of the leading statesmen of the world met at the Paris conference, and many other statesmen who were not there lent their counsel and advice—notable among the number being Hon. William Howard Taft, whose noble patriotism leaves no place for narrow partisanship. Under the direction of these leading minds, hundreds of experts, embracing every line of industry, of politics, of law and of government, labored for months. As a result of their work and wisdom, in dealing with the most difficult and complicated situation that ever faced any set of men, a treaty of peace has been formulated. That treaty has been signed by the delegates at Versailles and awaits only formal ratification by the proper authorities of the nations involved in the conflict.

Under our Government it is the prerogative of the United States Senate to act upon all treaties when presented to it by the President. That body is now asked by some of its Members to reject this treaty of peace, or to so amend it as to block its present operation, and thus delay the return of peace to an anxious and suffering world.

Some of these opponents of ratification are men of high position in our public life. They must have some reasons, more or less satisfactory to themselves, for their obstructive action at this critical stage.

Evidently we can not afford to oppose ratification on the mere authority of the great names appearing among the obstructionists—for if we accept that principle for our guidance, we are met with the authority of still greater names in favor of ratifying the treaty. We, the people, must therefore examine for ourselves into the validity of the objections.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS PROPERLY EMBODIED IN TREATY OF PEACE.

In the first place, and regardless of its provisions, we are told that the league of nations ought not to have been embodied in the treaty of peace.

This criticism, when subjected to analysis, appears illogical to the extent almost of insincerity. Of course any man who really believes that concerted action by the civilized nations of the world to enforce peace is in itself an undesirable and abominable thing is fully justified in saying that the league ought not to have been embraced in the treaty. That man is opposed to the league in the treaty or out of it.

But taking it for granted, as we surely may, that the league to enforce peace is a thing to be desired, as a forward step in the higher development of world affairs, by which peace-loving democracies may combine their powers to protect themselves and weaker peoples against aggression of war-loving nations, then it is patent that to have neglected to take advantage of the one great opportunity presented by the peace conference at Paris would have been almost a crime. At the least, it would have been a blunder in diplomatic strategy, and we have the saying of a famous French diplomat that in such matters a blunder is worse than a crime.

Had not The Hague Tribunal labored for years in vain to get unity of action for peace among the nations? Did not Germany thwart every effort in that direction, because she was confident of her superior power and intended to bring on a war of conquest for her own aggrandizement?

But the developments of the war brought about a sudden change in the attitude of nations in regard to this issue. When Prussianism was in defeat, and all the peoples of central Europe, exhausted in man power and in wealth, stood aghast at the unspeakable horrors of the bloody conflict, it was then that the world, as never before, was ready to listen to those men of vision who pleaded that the powers of righteousness should combine against the powers of evil, and thus promote the happiness and prosperous development of both good and bad.

Such an opportunity to serve mankind would probably not have come again in a hundred years. We should be thankful that our President had the intuition of genius to seize the occasion for the accomplishment of this great mission, and also that he had the moral courage to stand by his convictions.

With confident assurance we may accept it as a fortunate fact that the league of nations was put in the right place at the right time.

The founding of this league of nations will, no doubt, be held by students of history in future years as one of the great blessings of the World War that balances off to some extent its terrible evils of suffering and loss.

THE LEAGUE AND THE CONSTITUTION.

Again, we are told by some of those conscientious objectors in the Senate and out of it that our Constitution forbids our entering into such a league.

From the beginning of our Government we have had much discussion about the proper location of the dividing line between State rights and National rights under our Constitution, but by no possibility can that time-worn issue be dragged into the consideration of the acceptance or rejection of the treaty of peace.

The Constitution itself expressly says in Article I, section 10, paragraph 1, that no State shall "enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation."

The full power of treaty making is vested in the President and the Senate, acting by a two-thirds vote of those present. (Art. II, sec. 2, par. 2.) In our foreign relations States are unknown. Abroad there is but one flag, the flag of the Union.

The Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Justice Field in 133 United States, page 266, says that the treaty power extends "to all proper subjects of negotiation" between our Government and the Governments of other nations. After stating that a treaty can not do what the Constitution forbids, nor change the nature of the National Government nor of the State government, nor cede any portion of the territory of a State without its consent, Justice Field adds:

> But with these exceptions it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions that can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country.

Thomas Jefferson is on record as holding that the treaty-making power extends to all subjects "usually regulated by treaty."

However, if the authority of the Supreme Court and of Thomas Jefferson fails to carry conviction to any adherent of the doctrine of State rights, surely such adherent will not question the authority of John C. Calhoun, the most profound and logical expounder of the Constitution as related to that doctrine.

When Mr. Calhoun was Secretary of State under President Tyler, he addressed a letter on June 28, 1844, to Mr. Wheaton, then American minister to Prussia, in which he used the following language:

> The treaty-making power has indeed been regarded to be so comprehensive as to embrace, with few exceptions, all questions that can possibly arise between ourselves and other nations, and which can only be adjusted by their mutual consent, whether the subject matter be comprised among the delegated or reserved powers.

The framers of our Constitution have not deserved the praise heaped upon them by historians and statesmen if a defect should now be discovered in that document which compels us to refuse cooperation in the greatest organized movement ever undertaken for the welfare of mankind. They made no such blunder, and we wear no such shackles.

OUR TREATY WITH PANAMA.

Following up the general objection as to the unconstitutionality of the treaty and the league, the critics specify by alleging that we have no constitutional right to stand sponsor for the liberty or independence of any foreign nation, and that such action would be without precedent.

In answer, let us look to the record.

On November 18, 1903, Hon. John Hay, our Secretary of State, signed a convention with the Republic of Panama for the construction of the ship canal; on February 23, 1904, ratification was advised by the Senate, and on February 26, 1904, proclamation of the treaty was duly made. The very first article of that treaty reads as follows:

> The United States guarantees, and will maintain, the independence of the Republic of Panama.

If we had the constitutional power to guarantee the independence of Panama, why have we not the same power to cooperate with other leading nations of the world to guarantee the independence of Belgium and Poland and other members of the league? Evidently it is not a question of power but of policy.

THE LEAGUE AND AMERICANISM.

But the point about which the enemies of the league seem to concentrate their heaviest artillery is article 10, which reads as follows:

> The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

We are told by some of these objectors that such a covenant is un-American; that it is a surrender of American sovereignty; and that no red-blooded American should submit to it, and so forth. And one excited alarmist in the Senate has sworn an oath that he would not vote for the treaty even though Christ himself should approve it.

ROOSEVELT FAVORED ARTICLE 10.

In the midst of these direful forebodings we can derive some comfort at least by turning to the words of a man whose red-blooded Americanism no one can doubt, and whose standard, ever in the front of the battle like the white plume of Navarre, was the political rallying point for millions of his devoted countrymen.

When President Roosevelt had been awarded the Nobel peace prize for his great service in bringing about the peace of Portsmouth, between Russia and Japan, and had returned from his trip to Africa, and was making his triumphal journey through Europe, he went to Christiania, Norway, to receive his distinguished honor in formal manner from the hands of the Nobel peace committee.

The date was May 5, 1910. His audience was the world. The occasion was one that will be ever memorable in history. The opportunity called for the best of truth and wisdom that was in the heart and head of this orator-statesman from America. He rose to the situation then, full of pure patriotism and free of petty partisanship.

He made two carefully prepared addresses. In one he spoke thus:

> In the end I firmly believe that some method will be devised by which the people of the world as a whole will be able to insure peace as it can not now be insured.
> How soon that end will come I do not know; it may be far distant, and until it does come I think that while we should give all the support that we can to any possible feasible scheme for quickly bringing about such a state of affairs, yet we should meanwhile do the more practicable, though less sensational things.
> Let us advance step by step; let us, for example, endeavor to increase the number of arbitration treaties and enlarge the methods for obtaining peaceful settlements. Above all, let us strive to awaken the public international conscience, so that it shall be expected, and expected efficiently, of the public men responsible for the management of any nation's affairs, that those affairs shall be conducted with all proper regard for the interests and well being of other powers, great or small.

There we heard him appealing to the conscience of the world, as we so often heard him appeal to the conscience of America.

In his other address he was even more definite in its application to present world conditions, and said:

> Finally, it would be a master stroke if these great powers bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves, but to prevent by force, if necessary, its being broken by others.

After reading those brave words let no American who believed in Roosevelt consent to striking out article 10 from the league of nations. We might well charge that article 10 was paraphrased from the speech of this great American.

ROOSEVELT FORETELLS THE COMING OF WILSON.

But again, and chiefly, as if touched with the spirit of prophecy, Mr. Roosevelt said:

As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions.

The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who would bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time, and his title to the gratitude of mankind.

It is no reflection on Mr. Roosevelt for us of this day to suggest that perhaps he thought it possible sufficient years were left to him to win again the Presidency of the United States, and from that vantage point of power realize in himself his vision of that coming statesman.

Fate dashed his hopes. Death closed his eyes upon that entrancing prospect. But his prophecy was fulfilled in Woodrow Wilson, the veritable man he foretold, who has, indeed, "earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of mankind."

WM. H. FLEMING.

AUGUSTA, GA., July 2, 1919.

ALSATIAN POTASH.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of the magazine called "Victory—An Illustrated Magazine of Franco-American Relations," and I ask that a short article contained in it on Alsatian products be printed in the RECORD, for the information of the Senate.

I do not know how many Senators here have been importuned by their farmer constituents to do something in relation to the present situation as to the price of potash; but at the present time the farmers are compelled to pay an exceedingly high price for potash. I understand that there is an embargo against Alsatian potash, formerly German potash, now under the control of France, and it has been stated that the price of potash has been inordinately high on account of this embargo. The statement has also been made that France could not supply us with potash for several years. This article gives certain facts and contradicts the impression which has been gained that potash could not be imported from France. If something could be done to satisfy the industry here in America and at the same time release this potash for importation, the farmers of the country would be greatly benefited.

I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in order that those interested in the subject may be informed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the article being printed, but I wish to ask the Senator what he means by "something being done" for the producers of potash here? Does he mean that he wants a duty placed upon the importation of potash, so as to make it more expensive to the farmers than it otherwise would be?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No. I want the embargo at the present time placed upon the importation of potash by the War Trade Board taken off.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that that has been done.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The embargo has been raised. At least, I saw a publication in the Washington Post the other day to that effect. I do not know—nobody can believe anything he sees in a newspaper, necessarily—but if not done it soon will be, and if any request of ours will help to do it, all the better, of course.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator that I have requested not only the War Trade Board but the Department of Agriculture to do something in the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, my information is that the Senator from Mississippi is in error about potash being taken off the embargo list. I think it is included in the embargo.

Mr. LODGE. It certainly is. So are dyestuffs.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; so are dyestuffs. I think the Senator from New Jersey is entirely right. We ought to take that embargo off and let the foreign potash come in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It states that dyestuffs from Germany and potash from Saxony were not released from the embargo, but the Alsatian potash was. I may be mistaken.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator from Mississippi will read the article, he will ascertain that the principal supply of potash will come from Alsace; and, if the embargo is lifted, our farmers in this country, instead of paying $170 a ton for potash, which they need for the production of their crops, will be paying $50 or $60 a ton.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When was that article written?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. July, 1919, this month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the date of publication; but when was it written? Does the Senator know?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am inclined to think it was written about the close of the war. But whether that is true or not, the resolution can not do any harm. It is of the utmost importance to the cotton planters very much more than anybody else, because they use more potash in proportion to hydrogen and other fertilizers than do almost any other producers of plants.

Mr. SMOOT. Potash is to be discussed in the near future in the House of Representatives. If there is any duty placed upon it, it must originate there. I am not going to object to this article going in the RECORD; but I wish to say that the farmers may be able to buy potash a little cheaper if the embargo is lifted and the importation allowed to come into this country free of duty until the American industry is destroyed that has been established in the production of potash in this country. But after that happens I do not know whether they will be able to buy it for any less than they are buying it to-day or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish I really thought there has been a potash industry successfully established in this country. I am looking for the facts. I hope it has been done, but I am a little afraid it has not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it has been successfully established; I have not any doubt of it; and if an embargo were placed on potash importations I think within the next 12 months there would be potash produced in this country sufficient for its needs. I have not the time, I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The prices which the producers of potash we are talking about are asking to be paid are exorbitant.

Mr. SMOOT. That came about because of the fact that the war was on, and every country wanted unusual quantities of potash for munition purposes. They required the potash, and it made no difference what price the producer asked, it was paid. But that is not what the American producer is expecting in the future. The American producers expect to make a business of it in this country and to produce potash sufficient for the needs of the country, and if we allow them a fair chance I have no doubt they will produce it at a fair price.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], with reference to the first resolution which he introduced, that if the Senate is going to inquire particularly into the high cost of all the articles which we are now consuming, we will have nothing much to do but that. The price of coal is high because every basic element that enters into the cost of coal is high. Wages have been increased. The price of steel has been very largely increased. Everything that the coal producer has to buy has largely increased in cost, but more particularly wages have increased. The same thing has happened with reference to coal that has happened with reference to cotton, cotton oil, and with reference to everything the farmer produces. I am quite sure the Senator has no objection if investigation is to be made along these lines that it should include the entire subject of the high cost of living at this particular time and not one particular subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the article referred to by the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(From Victory for July, 1919.)

"ALSATIAN POTASH.

"Since the signing of the armistice it seems that a campaign has been carried on in America against the importation of potash from Alsace. This campaign is of more or less German origin, although some of its leaders maintain that we must not deal with Germany, and others that American industry would suffer; finally some say that France would not have enough potash for home consumption if we permitted its importation.

"A quick survey of the question will show that the real situation is quite different from that which is presented in certain American newspapers.

"I.—Potash industry in America.

"BEFORE THE WAR—GERMAN IMPORTS.

"The potash industry began in the United States in 1914. Before that date Germany was the chief potash-producing country. In 1913 the Kalis Syndicate had extracted, from the Stassfurt mines alone, 11,800,000 tons of crude salts and had manufactured 1,650,000 tons of concentrated salts. When the war came the cessation of the importation of potash was a great blow to America, which, before the war, had made use of a fleet of 250 steamships for the sole purpose of importing potash from Germany.

"In view of the fact that the price of potash rose to 2,000 and 2,500 francs a ton for chloride of potassium, as compared with a former price of 195 francs, American business men realized how hard it was to have to depend upon the outside world for essential products.

"Before the war the amount of potash used in the United States was as follows: In 1910, 244,900 tons; in 1912, 216,000 tons; in 1913, 231,000 tons.

"Every year about 220,000 tons were used in agriculture and 10,000 tons in chemical industries. This potash was furnished almost entirely by Germany, and the value of imports in 1913 reached $18,073,685. In 1914 only 207,000 tons were imported; in 1915 the amount dropped to 134,000 tons.

"DURING THE WAR—AMERICAN PRODUCTION.

"During the war the production of American potash amounted in 1916 to 35,739 short tons; in 1917 to 126,961 short tons; in 1918 to 192,587 short tons. It was obtained from different sources—from the salt waters of Searles Lake, from California, and from the lakes of Nebraska; also from the dust of cement furnaces and from seaweed along the Pacific coast. Some have even attempted to produce potash as a by-product in beet-sugar refining. One company, the Oxnard Sugar Factory, manufactured 100 tons in this way in 1918.

"All these processes, however, are very costly and were only developed in consequence of the practically entire suppression of imports; in 1917 imports amounted only to 8,100 tons, sources being as follows: Russia, 17 per cent; Chili, 17 per cent; England, 15 per cent; Italy, 10 per cent; Japan, 14 per cent; other countries, 32 per cent.

"The importation of potash from France was very small before the war and fell from 1,000 tons, worth $84,400 in 1914, to 83 tons, worth $5,200 in 1915.

"PRESENT SITUATION AND FUTURE NEEDS.

"Since the signing of the armistice, because of the drop in price of potash, certain American processes of manufacture have been abandoned. It was due to this that two companies failed—the Diamond Match Co. and the Hercules Powder Co., both of whom extracted potash from seaweed and sea wrack.

"II.—Actual conditions in the German potash industry.

"Germany, in spite of the loss of Alsace-Lorraine, remains, because of the importance of the Stassfurt mines, a formidable opponent.

"In December, 1918, the Minister of Agriculture in Washington gave out that 'even under the most favorable conditions it would be impossible to obtain French potash in the United States before June 1.' This statement, which can easily be explained by the change in régime of the Alsace-Lorraine mines, was exaggerated by the Germans, and on January 17 a dispatch of the Associated Press announced that because of the needs of France no authorization for importing Alsatian potash into the United States could be obtained for two or three years at least. This statement is not based upon facts.

"Besides, the manufacturers of the State of Nebraska tried to put an obstacle in the way of shipments of 500,000 to 600,000 tons of potash which were to have been sent to the United States in the ships that returned from France.

"The total German production of 1917 was 1,004,285 tons, as compared with 1,110,274 tons in 1914; however, the loss of the Alsatian mines will reduce these figures. On the other hand, German consumption has enormously increased. Germany, therefore, will not be able to export any potash unless she greatly increases the production of the Stassfurt Basin, which, before the war, was already being worked to its full extent.

"III.—The Alsatian Basin.

"In 1869 rock salt was discovered at Dornach, near Mulhausen; however, it was not until 35 years later, in 1904, that three Alsatians formed a company to develop the resources of sea coal and petroleum in the valley of Nonnenbruch. Rock salt was discovered at a depth of 358 meters; then, at 645 and 725 meters, two layers that were recognized as being potash.

"Finally, this potash bed was found to extend over approximately 200 square kilometers, mostly under the forest of Nonnenbruch, northwest of Mulhausen.

"Its depth varies from 500 meters in the south to 800 meters in the north. According to calculations based upon these investigations, the entire bed includes 1,472,000,000 tons of useful products, of which at least 300,000,000 tons are pure potash. These mines cover an area extending from the foothills of the Vosges to Mulhausen, Cerny, and Soulz.

"The Industrial Society of Mulhausen has figured that the lower layer of potash covers 172,000,000 square meters and the upper layer 84,000,000 square meters—in a word, that the total production would amount to nearly 70,000,000,000 francs.

"The Alsatian salts are greatly superior in quality to those of Stassfurt; the latter need to be put through an expensive process in order to separate the chloride of potassium from the chloride of magnesium. The Alsatian mineral contains no magnesium. It is necessary merely to crush the mineral when it comes from the mines in order to obtain salts for agriculture.

"The consumption of potash salt in France will undoubtedly increase in the future, and the development of the Alsace-Lorraine potash beds will permit France to play an important rôle among potash-exporting countries.

"In 1914 the output of the Alsace-Lorraine beds was more than 40,000 tons, and this was far from representing the possible output, for the Germans did not wish to make Alsace-Lorraine a serious competitor of the Stassfurt mines. Thus the owners of the latter mines succeeded in reducing the Alsatian output to a minimum and to keep prices high by this means.

"German propaganda in the United States has attempted to spread the idea that France would be opposed to the export of Alsatian potash, especially to the United States.

"IV.—France offers to ship potash to the United States.

"Because of all the facts above mentioned, the idea prevails in the United States that France refuses to allow the exportation of potash. This idea is false. A telegram from President Wilson, dated April 28, announces that 'France offers to ship potash to the United States' under conditions favorable to America, where the price of potash has risen six times as high as that paid for German potash before the war.

"In 1916 a representative of the American Potash Syndicate maintained that the price of potash, extracted from the lakes of Nebraska, could advantageously compete with prices of German potash in America before the war. He tried to prove that potash sold at from $20 to $40 a ton. But a recent statement of potash producers shows that the real price is double this, or four times the price of Alsatian potash that was sent to Rotterdam.

"Therefore, for 10 years the United States has sustained an enormous loss in order to encourage the development of potash in America; and for 4 years this industry has been allowed to develop freely, without competition, under shelter of a protecting tariff. Capital has easily been procured to build factories, but most of them have failed. More than 100 licenses have been taken out, but none has had real commercial value.

"The French Government is considering sending Alsatian potash by boat, via Rouen to Havre; moreover, they contemplate sending a qualified Alsatian representative to organize sales upon arrangement with American business houses.

"V.—Conclusion.

"Alsatian potash imported to the United States will, therefore, be three times less expensive than that produced here. Unless the price of American potash is greatly reduced (which is hardly likely) it will be profitable to only a small number of producers to prohibit the importation of the Alsatian product. To do so would be contrary to the interests of agriculturists, farmers, and general consumers; in a word, to practically the entire population of the United States, since the fall in price of articles of primary importance, such as cotton, fruits, cereals, tobacco, potatoes, etc., depends upon the abundance of crops.

"In closing we may state that the exportation of Alsatian potash is one of the means that will permit France to pay for a part of the articles she receives from America, and that in this way it will stimulate the foreign commerce of the United States."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have a very short article, written by Frederic R. Coudert, the very worthy son of a very noble sire. The article is entitled "The League Basis for a Better World System." I request that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE LEAGUE BASIS FOR A BETTER WORLD SYSTEM.

(By Frederic R. Coudert.)

[The following clear and brief outline of reasons why the people of the United States should support the plan for a league of nations now before the Paris conference is contributed to this magazine by an authority of recognized international distinction.]

"I.

"The league is the result of the logic of events rather than of the will of statesmen or of the theories of political philosophers. Nationalism, in many respects a beneficent principle, is also in many cases a disruptive force. It succeeded to and replaced those traditions of European unity embodied in the concept of the Roman Imperium. The national movement slowly developing through the eighteenth century and breaking out with fury during the French Revolution, led, like the Reformation, to a quarter of a century of war. Present conditions in Europe are calculated to lead to indefinite warfare in the attempt to realize national aspirations. Such warfare can only be avoided by co-operative action upon the part of the great nations. Necessary self-interest at a time of continuing peril dictates a permanent league of nations as in similar fashion the temporary union of free democratic peoples was essential to save civilization from the assault of Prussianism.

"II.

"The instinct of peoples the world over understands this necessity. Two powerful forces or ideas are at work—that which makes for national self-consciousness and that which aims at a wider organization of humanity. They are the two great dynamic forces of world politics to-day. Nationality must be recognized and its rights asserted and maintained not by an appeal to force but to the association of nations which, having recognized in principle the justice of those claims, is now creating a mechanism for overcoming the difficulties incident to their just application.

"III.

"The league of nations has been injured by its more enthusiastic adherents who, in declaring that it will end war and inaugurate the millennium, play into the hands of its enemies.

"What it can do and will do is to adopt federation as a working principle under which the nations may maintain their national existence without necessary recourse to war. This principle has made America what it is; its application can alone save Europe from an indefinite vista of conflict.

"IV.

"The pivot upon which the league of nations must mainly revolve is the solidarity of the English-speaking Commonwealths. With France we will always have close, sympathetic, cooperative relations. No greater task devolves upon the American citizen to-day than to strive for good fellowship with those who have the same language, the same common law, kindred institutions, a common consciousness of right and wrong, and whose combined power in men and resources could defy militant aggression from almost any combination of powers seeking world domination by force.

"V.

"The United States can not live and, in fact, never has lived in isolation. The Seven Years' War, as well as those wars incident to the French Revolution and Napoleon, involved the American Colonies and the American Nation. That we can be indifferent to nothing which threatens world strife the war has proved. Our undivided duty is to work for the Federal principle and its practical application, through methods which will ever grow by practice and experience more efficient.

"VI.

"Thus the success of the league of nations already existent will depend most largely upon American opinion. It is the duty of all interested in bringing about a better world system to educate that opinion and to create a 'state of mind' favorable to international cooperation. In order that this may be effected, partisanship must be eliminated, superficial objections answered, erroneous ideas of national sovereignty, mostly 'made in Germany,' put aside, and moral and intellectual approval of the Nation marshaled behind its President spokesman in the superb and inspiring attempt in applying the federative principle on a world scale to bring about a better system and a firmer foundation for international law and morality. The doctrine of sovereignty was never carried so far as by the Prussian State; it defeated its own end.

"VII.

"The draft approved by the conference at Versailles for the constitution of a league of nations embodies the best attainable in the present condition of opinion.

"1. It provides for a permanent organization always ready to function.

"2. It makes provision for a taboo or 'outlawry' of any nation refusing to abide its decision.

"3. It furnishes machinery for solving one of the world's fundamental difficulties—to wit, the exploitation of undeveloped peoples.

"4. The difference between the proposed plan and the mere opportunity for arbitration afforded by The Hague Conference is, of course, fundamental. The latter assists the established practices of arbitration and aims at some codification of international law, while the proposed league institutes a new world order designed to correct the inherent disruptive tendencies inevitable in the system of theoretical, sovereign, independent, unrelated nations.

"5. Above all, it places preponderant power in the hands of the world's great democracies and gives to France, the United States, Great Britain, and Italy an influence which can always be decisive against predatory power under whatever forms disguised. The agreed plan marks a capital event in history and furnishes a basis for infinite development toward international cooperation and the marshaling of material and moral force behind law. World opinion is at last given an organ of expression. The part of America in bringing about this result is one for just patriotic congratulation.

"6. The Monroe doctrine announced to the world that the United States would protect the integrity of South American States against foreign aggression. The league extends that principle of protection to all nations. The rights of the United States are not impaired; the guaranties of the States of South America are strengthened. It is a misapprehension of the meaning of the Monroe doctrine to believe it endangered by the proposed plan.

"President Monroe defined his own doctrine as follows:

"We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those (European) powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of suppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

"One of the latest official exponents of the doctrine, President Theodore Roosevelt, so defined it:

"The Monroe doctrine should be the cardinal feature of the foreign policy of all the nations in the two Americas, as it is of the United States. * * * The Monroe doctrine is a declaration that there must be no territorial aggrandizement by any non-American power at the expense of any American power on American soil. It is in no wise intended as hostile to any nation in the Old World. Still less is it intended to give cover to any aggression by one New World power at the expense of any other. It is simply a step, and a long step, toward assuring the universal peace of the world by securing the possibility of permanent peace on this hemisphere. During the past century other influences have established the permanence and the independence of the smaller States of Europe. Through the Monroe doctrine we hope to be able to safeguard like independence and secure like permanence for the lesser among the New World nations.

"I know of no more completely adequate or satisfactory definition.

"Senator Root has lucidly defined the now traditional doctrine, as follows:

"It is the substance of the thing to which the Nation holds, and that is and always has been, that the safety of the United States demands that American territory shall remain American.

"The Monroe doctrine does not assert or imply or involve any right on the part of the United States to impair or control the independent sovereignty of any American State. The declaration of Monroe was that the rights and interests of the United States were involved in maintaining a condition, and the condition to be maintained was the independence of all the American countries. * * * We frequently see statements that the doctrine has been changed or enlarged; that there is a new or different doctrine since Monroe's time. They are mistaken. There has been no change. One apparent extension of the statement of Monroe was made by President Polk. * * * All assertions to the contrary notwithstanding, there has been no other change or enlargement of Monroe's doctrine since it was first promulgated.

"7. Those who oppose a league in principle are, in large part, the men who obstructed America's entrance into the World War on the theory of 'isolation' or unconcern with the affairs of other nations; a theory never true to the facts and absurd in this century, in which nothing is so impossible to conceive as a lotos-eating America 'careless of mankind.' The experience of the Great War has killed the theory, save in the most parochial-minded. This is no time for 'little Americans.'

"8. On the other hand, there are those in and out of the Senate who, while honestly favoring a league of nations, attack the proposed plan upon the ground that it would require the sending of American troops to take part in Europe's struggles. While this appears to us a parochial view overlooking changed world conditions, which necessitate action on the part of America to maintain peace in a world which modern methods of transportation have made comparatively small, we think that an extension of the very valuable plan of mandatory control would meet the objection, as far as it has any foundation, by dividing the world into four zones, one of which would be the Western Hemisphere, in which the United States, acting in accordance with the league's mandate, could intervene when anarchic or other conditions threatened world peace. The United States, as in the case of the Philippines, has never hesitated in its willingness to give an account of its political stewardship.

"9. Inaction would be fatal. Some means to solve pending problems must be found. The mass of mankind ardently desires something that may save civilization from war or anarchy. Leaders of opinion can not be dumb to the clamor of world anguish. The present proposed constitution of a league of nations, with slight modifications not inconsistent with its announced principles and with a revision clarifying some of its clauses, would be the greatest advance yet made by mankind on the long, cruel road from the reign of force and fraud toward that of law and peace."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7343) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendments only.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that the only changes in the former bill are to one part of one section. One change simply strikes out $6,000,000 and inserts $8,000,000, on page 43, and the other change strikes out, on the same page, the item in which the original members of the Federal Board were included with others in the limitation of salaries. Those are the only two changes that occur in the bill as it was originally passed through both bodies.

I have been asked a number of questions regarding the amounts made available for the vocational educational problem altogether. I desire to say that to this $8,000,000 may be added the $6,000,000 passed in the special bill which came from the Committee on Education and Labor. There was also $3,500,000, or a little more, for the current year provided for in the original bill and its amendments providing for the educational rehabilitation problem, and there is $5,500,000 in the Army bill. So the whole amount passed at this time and available for the current year is $23,000,000.

The veto of the President was based upon something like 4,000 soldiers now under care of this agency and 4,000 more who will have to be taken on, and he asked for an addition of $2,000,000. The House has provided even more than that—$14,000,000 more, carried in the two bills.

As to the limitation of salaries, I have here a list of the changes that have been made. Several Members of the House have told me that the Vocational Board is entirely satisfied with the list as finally arranged, and that will be shown by reading the printed report of the hearings. While it provides very liberally for 288 in place of 307, starting at $6,000 and the lowest man getting $2,500, yet there is saved in this list $94,080. The 288 men will get from $2,500 to $6,000 and there is no limit as to how many they may employ under $2,500 per annum.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the Senator. Do I understand his position to be that there is no limitation upon the amount that may be utilized of this appropriation for the payment of employees and no limit upon the number of employees?

Mr. WARREN. The limit is as I stated. The balance of it is, of course, subject to the judgment and determination of the board as to how many, if any, they shall employ. They have at present employed, as I understand it and as the evidence seems to show, 307, but they felt that they could cut that number to 288.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is very difficult to hear what the Senator says, and I am very much interested in his statement.

Mr. WARREN. I was saying that they have employed 307 men, whose total salaries amount to $941,580. The list was gone over at the hearings and the secretary of the board has assured me that this schedule of 288 men has been accepted by the board as satisfactory. All the 288 men receive salaries of $2,500 or more, and the necessary employment of additional men can be made at figures less than $2,500 each.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee decided that they would offer no amendment to the bill, and the bill as now reported is the bill as it passed the House. I want to take just a short time of the Senate to discuss some features of the bill, particularly the appropriation that has been referred to by the chairman of the committee.

The chairman is correct in saying that there has been appropriated with the amount carried in the pending bill $23,000,000 to cover all the activities of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, both in the direct appropriation for that board and the appropriation through the Army appropriation bill. I want to say in the beginning that this $23,000,000 is not going to be sufficient to pay the expenses that will be incurred the coming year. We might just as well know it now as later in the year.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator right there what his estimate of the deficiency will be?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate by the officials of the bureau is that there will be $11,000,000 deficiency.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose it is safe to assume it will be a good deal more than that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt at all in my mind but what it will be.

So far as the object of the legislation is concerned, nobody can find fault with it. If the money was to be expended in a way that no criticism could be offered of it, and if it were expended primarily for the soldier himself, I doubt whether a soul would utter a word of objection. But if the reports are true that come to me, Mr. President, this bill is not altogether a bill for the rehabilitation of soldiers. It is also a bill intended to rehabilitate superannuated professors and school-teachers from one end of the country to the other. The proposed organization on July 1, 1919, was as the chairman of the committee said——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean that they are to be rehabilitated financially under the terms of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I mean.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me, if he means that incompetent, broken-down teachers are to be employed at good salaries, I think the Senator is mistaken about it.

Mr. SMOOT. If I am informed correctly, a great many of these teachers are now here in the District of Columbia awaiting the passage of the bill, and if I am informed correctly there have been letters sent to all the States of the Union asking for a list of teachers that they can get who are not employed at this time, who could be used in this service. I have not seen those letters, but I am told by a man who has been interested in this legislation that that is the case, and that they have a great number of them in the District of Columbia now waiting to be employed as soon as the President signs this bill.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator who sent the letters?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator would know just as much about who sent them out as I would.

Mr. KENYON. Would it be Dr. Prosser?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say whether he signed the letters or not, but the Senator knows himself that there have been letters sent throughout the country asking for such information.

Mr. KENYON. I heard the Senator from Utah say that, and he is generally correct, and, of course, I would be inclined to accept his statement at this time, but I would like to bring out who is accused of doing that and find out about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not seen the letters, but I have been told they were sent out by a man who has been interested in the advancement of this legislation.

Mr. President, it is true that in the organization as proposed on July 1, 1919, there were to be 307 employees receiving salaries all the way from $2,500 to $10,000. I have the list showing the number of employees comprising the 307 and the compensation to be paid to each grade.

The committee in the House took this question up and agreed, as I am informed, with the officials of the bureau to a reorganization as reported in this bill, and the number receiving above $2,500 has been cut from 307 to 288. There is no limit in this bill as to the number of teachers who can be employed at $2,475——

Mr. THOMAS. Or $2,499?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, or $2,499, as the Senator suggests. The sky is the only limit. Of all the legislative bills that have been presented to Congress that open the door wide to pay any salary below $2,500 out of a lump-sum appropriation, this bill and its companions are the limit. There is no particular amount named that shall be paid for salaries. It can all be paid for salaries under this appropriation. No amount is set aside for the expenses. All is to be paid out of one lump sum, to be handled exactly in the way that the officials of the bureau may desire. Prof. Branch, of Chicago, Ill., the head of the Branch School of Engineers at Chicago, was in Washington when this bill was under consideration before. Prof. Branch was one of the men at the first meeting in Washington at the time Dr. Prosser arranged for the meeting of certain professors throughout the country for the purpose of proposing this legislation.

Prof. Branch tells me that at that meeting the program was mapped out and certain schools of the country selected where this education should take place, and it was agreed at that meeting, he informs me, that the schools should receive their proportion of the soldiers based upon their ability to handle them or the room that they might have to accommodate them. The professor came to Washington a short time ago, protesting against the agreement not being carried out. I asked him in what way, and he said that the Branch School of Engineers, of Chicago, Ill., up to that time had not had one soldier assigned to it; and, on the other hand, Dr. Prosser assigned to the school in which he was interested, namely, the Dunwoody Institute, in Minnesota, nearly 4,000 soldiers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did Prof. Branch make that statement to the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; he made that statement to me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I have very little confidence in anything that he says.

Mr. SMOOT. Prof. Branch told me that he had offered to take students at $15 per month and that Dr. Prosser was charging $50 a month for every soldier.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator is sure of his facts it is a very serious charge. I had heard those charges around the Capitol——

Mr. SMOOT. I asked Prof. Branch to go to see you at 9.30 o'clock one morning and tell his story to you.

Mr. KENYON. He did spend an hour and a half with me, and then I followed the story up, because it was a shocking thing to me that such a thing should go on. Does the Senator understand that Dr. Prosser, on this statement of Mr. Branch or any other information the Senator has, had these men in the Dunwoody Institute after he became connected with the Vocational Board?

Mr. SMOOT. Prof. Branch did not tell me what time they began assigning to his school, and therefore I can not say. I am not going to say anything except just what Prof. Branch told me.

Mr. KENYON. I know, but these are pretty serious charges against a man like Dr. Prosser, and if they are true, Dr. Prosser ought to go.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. As I understand the facts, if the Senator will allow me to state them——

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I shall be glad to have the Senator state them.

Mr. KENYON. Before Dr. Prosser became a member of the board at all there were some 4,000 soldiers who had been sent to the Dunwoody Institute at different times for training—that is, for different kinds of positions with the Army. That was done by that institution, which is an endowed institution in Minnesota. Since that time and up to the present time I have a list of men who are at the Dunwoody Institute. The Senator from Georgia has one. At this time there are 44, and there is no such charge as $50 a month made. The Senator from Georgia and myself, who do not stand for graft any more than anybody else, called these men and talked to them. I had heard of the Bliss Institute having received $50 a month for tuition, which seemed to me to be an outrageous proposition. I have not yet substantiated that, but the contracts were made to pay for these soldiers' training on the basis of just what the institution charges others. The Senator, I am sure, is mistaken. I know the Senator is so fair that he would not want to make a charge against a man holding the important public position that Dr. Prosser does, with a clean life and character, reflecting upon him as it does, if it is not true.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. The Senator knows me well enough to be sure of the fact I would not do that.

Mr. KENYON. I do. Upon what does the Senator base his statement that $50 a month was paid in this Dunwoody Institute?

Mr. SMOOT. I said Prof. Branch told me, and I think he told the Senator, too. If he did not, he did not tell him all he told me. He said that there was $50 a month charged in the Dunwoody Institute for every man who was sent to that institution. He also said that he had offered, and was ready, to take the same men or the same number of men into his institution for $15 a month.

Mr. KENYON. He did, and I think Mr. Branch ought to have some of these men. I do not like the situation in that respect. But he did not know that the $50 a month was charged. It is just like all these other rumors that float around, distorting people's characters. When I pinned him down to whether or not he knew, he said that he did not know, and I say it is not true.

Mr. SMOOT. He stated to me that he did know it, and he said they were getting $50 a month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Again he discredited himself by putting himself in the attitude of a man who states one thing that is absolutely false and is not to be believed in anything he says.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state my object in speaking about the matter. I do not want this board to start out with any such proposition as one of the men who was instrumental in providing for this very legislation said that it started with. I would not say a word to blacken the character of a single soul on earth; I know what false reports mean to men; but here was a man who attended the very first meeting, who was asked to attend that meeting here in Washington, and did so, and the program was mapped out, the policy was adopted of selecting where the soldiers should be sent, and every detail was agreed to beforehand, before they came to Congress to ask for this legislation.

If Prof. Branch has made statements such as I say he has, and I am quite sure the Senator from Iowa feels positive that he made the statements to me, he should not have a soldier sent to his institute if the statements are untrue.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to see the Senator do any injustice to his informant. I think if we had taken him and pinned him right down to whether he knew this to be true, he would have stated that he did not, but he had heard it, as the Senator has heard it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is wrong there, because I stood in the Senate hallway and listened to him, and I asked him to go to Mr. GOOD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and tell him the story he had told me, as the question was then to come before the Senate in the sundry civil appropriation bill, the bill that finally passed Congress on the 1st day of July. I asked him, "Am I at liberty to use this information?" He said, "Yes." And not only that, but he expressed an earnest desire that hearings should be had, and stated that he was perfectly willing to appear before a committee of the Senate and testify to these things.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, that raises a straight question of veracity. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. So am I. Why not bring this man before the committee, and bring Dr. Prosser before the committee? This is a question of fact that is susceptible of proof. The information furnished me by the board is as follows:

> Tuition for regular courses is free to residents of Minnesota.
> Entrance fee, $3.
> When necessary to arrange a special course for a man or group of men because of their peculiar handicap or lack of previous preparation, 50 cents per day may be paid until such time as a man is qualified to enter upon a regular course offered by the institute.
> Tuition rate for men outside the State varies from $15 to $20 per month, depending wholly on course.

If Mr. Branch is going around stating that Mr. Prosser is placing men in an institution with which he has been connected, and with which he has a nominal connection now, at $50 a month tuition, that is a mighty serious charge.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it is.

Mr. KENYON. And if it is true, I should say that the President of the United States, if he can, ought to request Mr. Prosser to resign. If it is not true, then the gentleman who makes these accusations ought to come here or before a committee and say that he has been mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I said before, I think that if Mr. Branch has made these statements, and they are not true, his institution should not be used in any way for the rehabilitation of our soldiers. I will go that far.

Mr. KENYON. If Mr. Branch makes the charges, let him come in and prove them, and "prove up or shut up" when he is assailing the character of a man like Dr. Prosser.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Iowa is right. But, Mr. President, we can not wait for the passage of this bill upon that account. That can be done hereafter.

Mr. KENYON. I want to ask the Senator if he really believes now in his heart that these men were sent to the Dunwoody Institute when there are only 44 of them now, instead of 4,000? There have not been 5,200 in training at any time; so it is a perfectly ridiculous statement that 4,000 of them were receiving this training at Dunwoody Institute. Does he really believe that these men have been sent up there, and have paid $50 a month?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, after what the Senator from Iowa has stated, I have my grave doubts of it; and I want the Senator from Iowa to understand that I have never yet made a statement in this connection based on my own knowledge. I took particular pains to say to the Senate that I was telling the Senate just what Prof. Branch had told me, and I was very anxious that he should tell Mr. GOOD, of the House, and Mr. KENYON, of the Senate, just what he told me.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say that I was very much impressed with his appearance and candor and intellectuality, and what he said about his school; and I am satisfied now that what he meant to convey to the Senator and to me was that he had heard that this had been done, but that he was in no sense stating it as a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that he told me this: He said, "It is nothing more or less than paying $35 a month more to Dr. Prosser's institution than all the other institutions in this country would charge." If that is not a positive statement of what was being done, I do not know what could be. I shall be delighted to learn that it is not true, and I do not say that it is true, nor do I claim that it is true; but I do claim that that is what Prof. Branch told me in relation to this matter.

Now, Mr. President, I want the Congress to understand and the people of this country to understand that there will be many, many a scheme and many a steal inaugurated in the name of the American soldier.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, why does the Senator put that in the future? It is being done now, it has been done ever since the armistice, and it will continue to be done as long as a single soldier of the American Expeditionary Forces is on this earth.

Mr. SMOOT. I accept the correction, because the Senator from Colorado is correct. Every faddist in the United States, every schemer who can think of some kind of a proposition to get dollars out of the Treasury of the United States, is trying to bolster it up by the statement that it is for the benefit of the American soldier who fought the battles of our country in a foreign land. Nobody lives who would do more than I to take care of the soldier. In my opinion nobody would object to an appropriation for his relief; but I have seen so many schemes started with the evident purpose of helping the man that starts them, based upon a statement that it was for the recognition of the service of the soldiers of our country, that I am getting suspicious of claims coming under that guise or disguise.

I am not going to object to this appropriation; but I want to say, as I said in the beginning, that this appropriation is not going to be sufficient to carry on the work for the coming year. If the work is carried on with no graft attached to it, in the spirit in which Congress acts in making the appropriation, there is not an American citizen that would object to it.

I doubt whether it would be wise now to send this bill back to the House. I doubt whether it would be wisdom to undertake at this time to make an appropriation for the personnel of the bureau, as is done in the case of nearly all of the different departments of the Government, but if there were time to do so it would be the very height of wisdom, and then make certain appropriations for certain purposes, and then, when reports come to Congress, find out just how the money was expended. The trouble is with these lump-sum appropriations. When we find that there are being paid by the Government, at some of these bureaus, salaries as high as $15,000 out of a lump sum, with no report made to Congress, we ought to stop it.

I say now, Mr. President, as I said before, that we are not going to reduce the number of Government employees in the District of Columbia until the Appropriations Committee refuses to give the money. That is the only way in which it will be done. Why, do you realize that in the Civil Service Commission's report that I picked up just this morning I find that there were added to the employees in the District of Columbia from June 1 to June 28 four thousand five hundred and odd employees, and during that same time there were separated from the service 3,381 employees, or an increase of 1,119 in the number of employees in the District of Columbia from June 1 to June 28 of this year? We all thought that just as soon as the war was over some of these departments, at least, would begin to reduce their forces.

I know it is too late to do anything with the appropriations for the present fiscal year; but I want to say that I shall object to any further appropriation bills passing this body unless there is some authority that will show why the appropriations should be made. Unless there is a reduction in the number of employees in the District, I for one shall insist that the appropriations be cut, irrespective of what the department officials say.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is any investigation being made by any of the committees for the purpose of ascertaining the character of services rendered by the employees, and the necessity for a reduction, or the reason why a reduction is not being made in the clerical forces of the Government in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMOOT. None that I know of.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me while I call attention to a card which I have recently received? I have had perhaps 50 similar letters and cards from employees in the Government service. I received this one on the 10th of the present month from a relative of one of the employees in a Government department. A portion of the card is as follows:

> The person referred to worked her first day in the War Department, Nineteenth and B NW., and filed 900—

Then there is a blank space, meaning, I suppose, papers—

> expecting to do better the next day. Before the close of the first day several of the young men working there in the same department took her aside and told her to lay off working that way, as she would work several of them out of a job. Since then she has only filed 400 per day. You should pension these young men. It would save office rent.

This is one of the letters or cards of the same character, which I think many of the Senators are receiving, showing the incompetent service which is being rendered, and showing that in many of the departments there are people hanging on, doing nothing, and preventing those who have an inclination to do an honest day's work from performing their service. Something ought to be done to rid these departments of the thousands of incompetent, inefficient, and unnecessary employees.

Mr. SMOOT. If our Efficiency Bureau had the power given them to go into all the departments without the consent of the heads of the departments, and then had power to put their recommendations into force, I have not any doubt but that we could get rid of a third of the employees in the District of Columbia. I receive letters every day from the employees of the departments. I received one this morning. I am not going to read it. It is a long one, but, among other things, it said in the letter:

> Employees in different divisions all told the same story, that they had nothing to do for days at a time, and that their supervisors came to them and told them to write letters to their friends, or do anything to keep up the appearance of being busy.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read the whole letter, but I do claim that we are not going to separate the employees in the District of Columbia from the Government service as long as we appropriate money to pay them.

Mr. President, I have said what I have for the very purpose of bringing this matter to the attention of the board itself; I want to say frankly to the Senator from Iowa that after what has been said, and the statements that have been made, even were they true, I do not believe the board would now continue such actions in the future. I hope and trust that there is nothing in the reports; but I considered it of enough importance to bring to the attention of Congress, so that if there was any truth whatever in the reports the board would see that that condition was corrected and rectified; and that, I have confidence, will be done.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENYON. I rose to ask a question, but I can say what I had in mind in just a minute. It is in reply to the question raised by the Senator from Utah.

I am generally in such thorough accord with the Senator from Utah on these propositions of dispensing with the services of unnecessary clerks, and all these matters, that I do not like to disagree with him now. I do not think we disagree on anything except what are the facts. If they are the facts as the Senator states them, I can agree with him.

I want to say about this proposition of rehabilitation professors that the Senator speaks of, and that they have sent out through the country letters to bring all of the professors here or to different places and put them on the pay roll, that the facts of that matter are just these: When they saw the tremendous amount of work they were to have under this larger number of soldiers they did ask then for the months of July and August—that was the limit of the employment—to register at their different offices around the country professors who could be used for this particular work. I will say to the Senator that it was merely a temporary employment. That is all there is to that story of bringing in all the professors and school-teachers in this country for rehabilitation work; and they did not get anybody.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to state to the Senator that I have received communications from a number of professors and executive officers in institutions of learning throughout the United States, who state that they would be very glad to operate within their own States and discharge any duty that this board may require that they should perform within their States, for nothing. They want to make contribution toward the work of rehabilitating the soldier, and they would be only too glad to aid in every possible way in their own States without charging anything whatever.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that especially in New York and New Jersey has that been true. There have been a great many dollar-a-year men helping in this work.

Mr. KING. Oh, if the Senator will pardon me, many of the State universities and State schools will care for some of these soldiers who are to be rehabilitated; and the universities and colleges within the States and other schools within the States will be very glad to aid and will not charge anything for their services. The difficulty has been, or rather the reason why more have not offered their services, that the idea has gone out that Dr. Prosser and those associated with him were building up a great Federal machine here, and they were paying high salaries, and they did not want anybody within the States who would not separate themselves entirely from their State activities and give their undivided time and attention to the Government and come here and be under the direction of Dr. Prosser and his assistants, so that they could be sent throughout the country on a sort of ambulatory mission. I am sure that if they would utilize in the States the services of the educational men within the States they would get a far better service than they will get now and it would not cost the Government as much as the present plan will cost.

Mr. KENYON. They have been doing that. All I want to do further is to place in the RECORD a copy of a letter from Dr. Prosser to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] explaining the Dunwoody Institute matter. I think it will clear up the entire matter; and I think his other statement clears up the professorship matter that we have heard so much about.

I am in agreement with the Senator, however, that there are probably too many employees; and I wish there were some way in all of those departments in which the number of employees could be cut down. I will join the Senator in any kind of a move in that direction.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter may be placed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JULY 3, 1919.

Hon. MEDILL MCCORMICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCORMICK: Having been honored with a call from your secretary, Mr. Hansen, wanting certain facts, it gives me pleasure to furnish you the following information as to the training of disabled soldiers by the Federal Board for Vocational Education at Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis, and in Chicago, Ill.

When the war broke, I was director at Dunwoody, coming to Washington on leave of absence to become director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education under the vocational educational law approved February 23, 1917. By the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, the reeducation and placement in employment of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines was also given to the board, and I have been responsible, as director, for this new work as well. I expect at an early date to return to Dunwoody.

The Federal board is using more than 500 institutions in this country for the training of disabled men in agriculture, commerce, and the trades and industries, as well as shops, offices, and farms. A list of these institutions as of June 1 is given on pages 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the Vocational Summary for May, 1919, attached hereto.

These institutions are approved before being used by the central office on the recommendation of the superintendent of training and the chief of the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation. Information is gathered about the school. A personal inspection is also made by some representative of the board. Practically all the proposals to use a school are made by the district vocational officer for the district in which the school is located, and approved unless there is reason for disapproval by the central office. All the proposals for the use of schools in the Chicago and Minneapolis districts have been made by the district offices.

Eighteen schools and plants are being used by the Minneapolis district, as shown on pages 3 and 5 of the Vocational Summary attached, the disabled men sent them from the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana. The training work for each district is carried on largely in the district office city where the work can be carefully supervised by the agents of the board.

Dunwoody is one of these 18 schools recommended by the district office and approved by this office. It is a private philanthropic institution giving training for about 20 different trades and industries and has an equipment in plants and buildings worth about $1,000,000 and an endowment of more than $5,000,000. It admits all disabled Minnesota men to regular classes free of charge and charges only actual cost for special classes. Since it can not, under the terms of the will of the founder, admit nonresidents of the State free of charge, the actual cost of their instruction is paid.

The records of this office show the following facts regarding the number of disabled men in training at Dunwoody on July 1, 1919:

Number of men in regular courses at Dunwoody Institute to date	41
(Of this number, 7 have discontinued the course.)
Number of men taking electrical courses	7

The whole matter of the use of this school was frankly discussed with the standing committee of the board at the start, as I anticipated that some person with a grievance, real or imaginary, would raise the question sooner or later. It was necessary for us to use the school, since it is the only industrial and trade school with proper facilities for this task in the four States of the district. We could not punish the disabled man because the director had been connected with it!

I am informed that Mr. Branch, president of an electrical school at Chicago, has charged that, using my official position here to the advantage of Dunwoody, more than 4,000 disabled soldiers have been trained there. Surely this is a mistake, as the total number of men who have been placed in training from the start of the work in 48 States and 500 institutions was approximately 4,200 up to July 1, 1919. As I pointed out above, 110 of these are in training at Dunwoody, of whom 4 have been awarded courses in electricity.

In this connection it may be interesting to show the numbers of disabled men in training in other institutions for the trades and industries:

Ohio Mechanics Institute, Cincinnati	131
Tulane, New Orleans	110
Franklin, Boston	70
Georgia Tech, Atlanta	89
Dunwoody, Minneapolis	110
Rankin, St. Louis	52

It is possible that Mr. Branch has reference to the training done by Dunwoody during the war of enlisted or drafted soldiers preparing for mechanical and technical positions in the Army and Navy. These were not disabled men, but soldiers preparing for service across seas, sent to the institute by the War or Navy Departments for training under the same contract made with at least a hundred other similar institutions in the country. Dunwoody trained upward of 8,000 men for mechanical and technical service in Army or Navy, of whom about half were for each service.

The first arrangements were made with the Navy by me in June, 1917, while I was still at the school. From June until January, 1917, the institute paid from its own funds as a patriotic contribution about $100,000 for the instruction of sailors and marines barracked for the purpose at Minneapolis, for which it has not and does not expect to receive a cent of reimbursement from the Government. Beginning January 1 all detachments of sailors and marines were trained at Dunwoody at a price less than actual cost.

When the committee on education and special training began its work of training mechanics and technicians for the military service, Dunwoody was one of the schools approved by the War Department committee. Its dealings were entirely with Mr. H. W. Kavel, the acting director of Dunwoody, and contracts were made by him with the committee directly. I might say, in passing, that in carrying out these contracts the school lost not less than $50,000 in addition, which it regards as a patriotic contribution.

The necessity for the use of schools for this purpose was urged in every possible way by the Federal board on the Secretary of War, and a general plan for it prescribed to him, which was adopted as a basis for the work of the committee on education and special training.

At the outset the plan was for the Federal board to have charge of the inspection and supervision of the training under the committee. At the very outset, however, serious differences of opinion about policies and procedure caused the withdrawal of the Federal board with entire good will from the work of the War Department committee before any soldiers had been sent to an institution for training. At the request of the committee the Federal board detailed some of its agents to inspect about 40 institutions, one of which was Dunwoody, and report their findings to the committee. This represents the total connection of the board and, therefore, of myself with this matter.

Mr. Branch was very active and very much interested in this matter when a conference was held by the board here in Washington with heads of institutions from all over the country to learn whether the plans proposed by the board to the Secretary of War were feasible. Inasmuch as we had nothing to do with the approval of schools and severed our connection with the committee within a month after the plan was launched, I have had no general knowledge, in a busy life, as to which schools were used, nor have I known whether or not Mr. Branch's school was used.

Now as to the facts regarding the use of Chicago and Illinois schools for disabled men. A glance at page 2 of the attached vocational summary will show these schools as recommended for use by Mr. Sylvester, the district officer at Chicago, and approved by this office. The total number of men in training in the city of Chicago on July 1 was 241. Inasmuch as Mr. Branch's school is an electrical school, you will doubtless be interested in knowing that only four disabled men are training there for electricians and for electrical engineering, as follows: Armour Institute, 1; Commercial School of Trades, 1; Lewis Institute, 1; Lane Technology, 1.

Mr. Hamilton, the superintendent of training at this office, who has charge of the approval of schools, is absent from the city. When he returns I shall ask him to provide for you a statement as to his decision concerning Mr. Branch's school and the reason therefor.

May I not assure you in closing that so far as I know no person connected with this board is in any way prejudiced against either Mr. Branch or his school. Personally my relations with him have always been cordial and friendly. As we can not, however, place students in every institution, we must make a decision as between institutions in the exercise of our duty and responsibility to disabled men. You are at liberty to use this letter in any way you see fit.

Very truly, yours,

———— ————, Director.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Iowa, in all fairness to Prof. Branch, that it was not he that told me of the letters that were sent broadcast throughout the country asking for professors who could enter this service. That came to me from a man who is here in the District, and, as I am informed, knew of all the letters that were being sent out.

Mr. KENYON. But has the Senator any of those letters? I have asked the Board for Vocational Training to send me some of those letters, so that I might put them in the RECORD. Their statement, made to me not over 10 minutes ago, is that they are merely temporary matters, lasting only for the months of July and August, when they supposed that this work would be at its height.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not the letters, as I stated in the beginning, and yesterday morning was the first I had heard of them; and, as I say to the Senator, the information came to me from a party who said that he knew of the letters and called my attention to them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that the President vetoed this bill and gave us an opportunity to right what I think was a serious wrong in the bill as it was passed, so far as it treated the question of giving a chance for rehabilitation by vocational training to wounded or injured soldiers. There were severely wounded, according to the records, about 80,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is due Congressman GOOD to make this statement:

Congressman GOOD and I met Dr. Prosser and two other of his associates in the Marble Room when the former bill was under consideration, and I heard Congressman GOOD say to Dr. Prosser that with the amount of money that they had on hand, and the statement that was made by him that they had sufficient to pay the July expenses, he thought that the $6,000,000 provided in the other bill was sufficient; but if it was not sufficient, he would promise Dr. Prosser that, as far as he was concerned as chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, he would see that the money was furnished in due time.

I wanted to say that, because I am quite sure that Mr. GOOD felt, just as I felt, that the bill was satisfactory to Dr. Prosser in the way that it was originally passed, with that understanding; but afterwards the question of the limitation of salaries came up, and now, as I understand, that is the reason why objection was made to it more than the amount appropriated. I think the Senator from Georgia knows that if the appropriation made was not sufficient it would have been taken care of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood perfectly when the bill was in the Senate that the appropriation which it carried was not sufficient to do the work. The Senate committee, however, had stricken out altogether the limitation placed by the House committee upon the salaries to be paid. At that time I called the attention of the Senate to a letter I had received from the Secretary of Commerce, with a suggested plan for a limitation of salaries substantially higher than those in the House bill; but as the Senate committee had stricken out entirely the provision with reference to the limitation of salaries, and as it provided enough to go on at present, I made no objection to the Senate bill, although I stated at the time that, of course, it did not carry enough money for the work, but it would do until further legislation might be passed. The radical defect was that when we went to conference the House provision limiting salaries was restored, and with that provision nearly one-half of the force of instructors and experts necessarily would have resigned—a force that, in my opinion, was doing splendid work.

Mr. President, as I have just stated, there were, in round numbers, 80,000 soldiers reported severely wounded and total casualties of something like 240,000.

I believe it the duty—and it should be the pleasure—of those of us who did not go to the front, who stayed at home, safe and sound, to tax ourselves enough to make these men who have lost their arms and lost their legs and been otherwise physically injured financially whole so far as we can possibly do so. I believe that in the case of the man who has lost his leg or his arm and who was making $150 a month or $200 a month before we ought to be glad to pay him all his financial loss. I never have been much in favor of service pensions. If the man gets out sound, I think he ought to receive his compensation in connection with his discharge; but whether he volunteered to go to the front, or whether by draft we sent him to the front, he did the fighting for those of us who were here at home. We should find real pleasure to make up to the injured his loss of earning capacity caused by his injury. I feel that these 243,000 men ought to receive from us willingly a sum which will put them where they can live or earn or be compensated by their Government to the extent of their financial loss as a result of their injury.

The railroad company is liable to its employee who is injured in its service to the extent of his injury. I do not say there is a legal liability on the Government, but I say there is a moral liability, and it ought to be a pleasure to follow the policy of making these injured men financially sound.

Mr. President, accepting that as a basis for my discussion of this subject, I come to the question of the effort by the Government, through the expenditure of money, to fit these injured men again to take their place in labor, in occupations—not perhaps the old place, perhaps a new one—but to fit them, so far as college instruction or other instruction can do so, to take a place where they can again make what they made before their injuries were received.

It was with that in view that I had the pleasure of presenting to the Senate at the Sixty-fifth Congress a bill to provide vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled soldiers and sailors discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States. The Senate of the United States, after a three-day debate, on a roll call, had no Senator who failed to support the bill. It was unanimously passed. Why, it was not only right, it was sound economically. It was sound economically because if we spend two or three thousand dollars a man to fit him to return to occupation so that he can earn as much as he did before, it is a much less sum that we would be called on to pay if we kept up his salary permanently. He perhaps was a man making $1,500 to $2,000 or from $1,000 to $2,000 a year. If he is left without special training, his earning capacity may be practically gone; but if we spend $3,000 to fit him again to earn $1,000 to $2,000 a year it is an economic saving, according to my view of the responsibility of his Government for his loss. What is wrong with that? It is an economic saving to the country because we are fitting a man who otherwise might do nothing to be a producer and a substantial and useful citizen. Over and above that, we bring back into his life the joy of not being dependent upon charity, of not being dependent upon his Government to compensate him year by year for his loss. We bring back into his life the joy and privilege of doing for himself, of being still capable of earning for himself and perhaps for his wife and his children a support.

Mr. President, when I consider the problem of vocational rehabilitation, I can not be patient with suggestions of extreme, narrow economy. I do not believe anywhere that money should be wasted. But the experience of the countries involved in the war, even before we entered the war, demonstrated the fact that men with physical injuries, ofttimes unable to pursue their former occupation, by special training, by special instruction, have been fitted in many, many instances to again earn a competency even larger than that which they earned before. A fairly well-educated farm laborer loses his arm or his leg or is injured otherwise physically so that active physical labor can no longer be performed by him. He goes to the agricultural college, and in a two-year course is taught and becomes capable of doing a higher order of work than he ever did before and producing more than he did before. I mention this as one of many lines in which the physically defective may receive training which will fit him for profitable occupation.

Mr. President, to give such instruction, to give such aid to the injured soldiers is a splendid contribution upon the part of this country, a splendid use of money, lessening our real liability to them and adding greatly to their value as citizens and their opportunities for happy lives.

I think this work will cost a good deal of money. We have now 13,757 injured soldiers who have been approved for training by the central office. We have 5,200 now in training. We have 8,577 approved, who are going forward at once, and in a few days there will be 13,757 in training. One hundred and forty-seven thousand one hundred and nineteen have been reached by the representatives of the Federal board and have been informed of their rights; 98,779 are under supervision, and efforts are being made to classify and assign them. Suppose it costs $1,400 or $1,500 a year to give to one of these men his training and to fit him to go back into active occupation, we should not be disturbed about the cost.

The Canadian Government undertook to erect buildings and carry its injured soldiers into schools organized and built expressly for the purpose. A much wiser policy was embodied in our bill. It was the policy to distribute them to existing institutions, retaining them as near to their homes as practicable.

It has been charged that there was some arrangement looking toward the schools to which the soldiers would be distributed agreed upon before the rehabilitation bill was introduced, and the inference has been drawn that this was to aid favored institutions. I will state to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] what, if it is investigated, will be found to be the truth upon this subject. The question which confronted those of us studying the problem was, Shall we undertake to build schools as Canada did or can we find institutions already in existence prepared to do the work of training the injured soldiers?

A number of men not connected now with the Federal Board for Vocational Education, but educators and physicians, studied the work of a number of schools and colleges to see if the soldiers could be taken care of without establishing or building new institutions, not allotting the soldiers at the time to the schools, not distributing them then to any institutions, but to find out whether there were institutions already in existence that could meet with some added work the responsibility which was to be placed upon them if selected to train the injured soldiers. That is the whole of it, magnified and misrepresented into the statement that it was a scheme to give money to these particular institutions. The plan adopted was a wise one. I went over it with these men before I introduced the bill. I discussed it with teachers and college professors and men who were not connected with the Federal board to determine whether it was safe to provide in the bill that the money was not to be used to erect new institutions. That was the real object, but it is very easy to take a fact and repeat it once or twice and get a false impression about it. I am personally acquainted with the efforts that were made before I introduced the bill to find out whether institutions existed that could meet the demand.

With reference to the soldiers sent to the Dunwoody Institute in Minnesota by the Vocational Board, I do not think any considerable number are there. My memoranda does not show a hundred already placed in Dunwoody. I have a statement here of the manner in which they are paid. If they are from Minnesota and have no special instruction, as I understand it, the Minnesota students go to the school free of tuition; and most of those who are there are from Minnesota. If they have special instruction, that costs not to exceed 50 cents a day. I have a copy of the letter written by Dr. Prosser to the governor of the institute before scholars were assigned to it, stating that he could not consent to more than 50 cents a day being required as a basis, and $20 a month was the limit. For students coming from other States, where the institute was not obliged to receive them, the Government was to pay tuition of from $15 to $20 a month, according to the character of the work and the expense put upon the institution in the matter of tuition.

The grand total is: Residents of Minnesota, 82; outsiders, 32; actually assigned, contracts pending, and contracts not yet received at the central office, July 13, 114 men for the Dunwoody Institute.

This shows how easy it is to misunderstand and misrepresent. It is hard to repeat a thing just as it is told you, even if you try to do so, and with a little feeling on the subject it is easy to magnify, and repetition transforms a situation from what it was into something which it never was.

I wish to say that I will be glad to join the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor in calling for a list of every man employed in this work by the Vocational Board. I am deeply interested in this work. I am deeply interested in it for the good it will do, and then I am deeply interested in it because it is a measure I helped promote, and I wish to see it conducted absolutely clean, and I believe it will be. I wish every dollar that is expended spent solely for the good of the soldiers for whom it is to be used. I will join in this work the able chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, who succeeded me in that position last March. As he always helped me while I was chairman, I am determined to return the service, and help him as chairman in every way within my power.

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator. I hope I may be as the Senator was, for the Senator was always right, and I hope I may be as right as the Senator was and merit his aid.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Iowa and I agree on practically everything that has been done for several years past, and I think we were both right.

Mr. President, I hope this bill will pass as the House has sent it to us. I do not want Senators to be frightened by the fact that this rehabilitation work will cost money. What I want them to do is to understand that if we rehabilitate these soldiers we will be meeting a liability that we ought otherwise to provide for year by year in appropriations far greater than any figures that the rehabilitation will cost.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President I offer the following notice in regard to the pending bill, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

Notice is hereby given that under Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I shall to-morrow, July 19, 1919, or on the first legislative day after to-day when the Senate may be in session, move, when the bill (H. R. 7343) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, is before the Senate, to suspend subdivisions 2 and 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, prohibiting the adding of new items of appropriation and prohibiting the proposing of general legislation on any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment in the form of a new section to the said H. R. 7343 making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which said proposed amendment in the nature of a new section is as follows:

To resume and prosecute work on projects and units thereof under the reclamation act, stopped during the war, and to begin and prosecute existing projects and units thereof which are practically ready for prosecution, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, $50,000,000.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend, by adding after the figures "$1,730,000," in line 21 of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That the status of peace between the former Imperial German Government and the United States of America being declared to exist, no part of said sum shall be used in enforcing the provisions of section 3 of the act of October 6, 1917, known as the trading-with-the-enemy act, as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it does seem to me that this bill ought to be passed without adding anything to it. The chairman of the committee, of course, is in charge of the bill, and his judgment is better than mine. If we are to begin modifying other features of the bill it will be difficult to stop. This money is needed at once, is it not? Are we not running on it now?

Mr. WARREN. It should have been passed before the 1st day of July. We are running without the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We are running without funds since the 1st of July.

Mr. FALL. It is not my fault.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not the Senator's fault, but it might be if we add such an amendment to the bill, however meritorious it may be.

Mr. FALL. I have not injected an amendment into the bill until this moment. I have taken up no time whatsoever in discussing it. I have been somewhat in sympathy with the Senator from Georgia, who has devoted a good deal of time when it was here before and now to discussing it. This is simply a limitation upon an appropriation. That is all it is.

Mr. KENYON. I understood, though I may be in error, it states that peace has been declared between Germany and the United States?

Mr. FALL. No; it is simply a recognition of the status as a reason for the limitation upon the pay of United States marshals.

Mr. KENYON. I am not going to object to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McCumber	Shields
Chamberlain	Harris	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Colt	Harrison	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Smoot
Dial	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Spencer
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Stanley
Fall	Kellogg	Nugent	Sutherland
Fernald	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
France	King	Page	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Pittman	Underwood
Gay	Knox	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Hale	Lenroot	Reed	Warren

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business.

Mr. DIAL. I announce the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am not out of sympathy with the object sought to be accomplished by the Senator from New Mexico, but I think it would be unfortunate to involve this bill, which ought to pass at once, with anything else. So I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation offered on an appropriation bill; and, if the Chair will permit me, I will state the reason why I insist that it is general legislation.

The trading-with-the-enemy act fixed the time of the proclamation of the President as the time when peace shall be restored. The amendment proposes to substitute, I think, the declaration of Congress as the time of the termination of the war in place of the time fixed in the trading-with-the-enemy act.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia, possibly, is unaware of the fact that the trading-with-the-enemy act is permanent legislation that has been on the statute books of this country in one form or another since 1798, and during the present conditions the Congress of the United States in its wisdom saw fit to enact legislation along that line.

The trading-with-the-enemy act is itself permanent legislation which is invoked or coming in force automatically whenever this country is at war. The original act was placed upon our statute books during the status of war, which was never declared, between France and the United States of America. Section 3 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, which is the section referred to in the proposed amendment, simply makes it unlawful—

(a) For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, granted to such person, or to the enemy, or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, to trade, or attempt to trade, * * *.

That is permanent legislation which in one form or another we keep on our statute books, so that if war arises it is not necessary to reenact the legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me ask the Senator, Is there a provision in the amendment limiting it to the termination of the war by the proclamation by the President?

Mr. FALL. There are other provisions of the act, such, for instance, as the provision with reference to the Alien Property Custodian, which, when the President declares the war to have ended, become inoperative.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Has this subject received consideration at the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which the Senator is a member? If so, did not the committee act adversely upon the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FALL. I made a statement in the Senate immediately after the action or nonaction—it was not action—by the Foreign Relations Committee, in which I stated that I had assurances that the resolution would be reported out within a day or two. At that time Germany had not yet signed the peace treaty. My understanding was that some Senators thought that the resolution to which the Senator from Utah refers should not be reported out until after Germany had signed the treaty, for the reason that otherwise I might be accused of giving encouragement to Germany not to sign the peace treaty. I have not brought the resolution up nor attempted to bring it up since.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit another inquiry?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the matter is still before the committee and has received consideration at its hands, and in view of the further fact that Germany has signed the treaty and the committee will undoubtedly act very promptly one way or the other upon the resolution, does not the Senator from New Mexico think it would be somewhat of a discourtesy for us now to take it out of the hands of the committee?

Mr. FALL. The Senator may possess a very much finer and keener sense of courtesy than has the Senator from New Mexico. If the Senator from New Mexico had entertained any such sentiment he would not have offered this amendment, because the Senator does not intend, however ignorantly he may act, to show any discourtesy to the Foreign Relations Committee, or any other committee, or any individual Senator, or to the Senate as a whole.

Mr. President, the status of affairs is simply this, and it might just as well be understood once for all: The status of peace between the United States and Germany exists, and are you afraid to declare it and turn your citizens loose and let them trade?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that the adoption of a resolution declaring that the United States is at peace with Germany would in any way control the status in Germany as viewed by the German Government?

Mr. FALL. No; I do not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then we would be in a position where we had declared ourselves at peace with Germany, with no declaration on the part of Germany that she was at peace with the United States; would we not?

Mr. FALL. No; not at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was the view I took of it.

Mr. FALL. I do not think the Senator understands the situation. In the first place, Mr. President, there seems to be an idea in the minds of a great many people—and I am not surprised that the opinion should be entertained by the layman, the ordinary citizen, who is busy with his engagements and does not pay any attention to matters of this kind—I am not at all surprised that the opinion exists, because of the propaganda which has been going on in this country for so long, to the effect that it was necessary to force the hand of the Senate of the United States, that they should ratify a peace treaty in order that peace might exist. The fact is that peace exists and has existed, and it becomes the duty of some one in this country to put it in effect, to put it in force; and the signing of a treaty or the ratification of the treaty is not the only method by which peace is brought about.

When war ceases peace exists. War is a status. Peace is a status. Peace is the ordinary status of the people of the earth. War is an extraordinary condition, establishing a status. You do not make war by declaring war. You do not make peace by declaring peace. You make war by fighting. You make peace by ceasing to fight. The rules and regulations under which the peoples of the several Governments will continue to act after the status has been established are embraced in what is known as a treaty of peace, and that is all that we have before us to-day and are considering in the Foreign Relations Committee now.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FALL. For a question; yes, sir.

Mr. PITTMAN. If peace is a question of fact and not of declaration, why is the Senator desirous of having a declaration on the part of the United States until a joint or contemporaneous declaration is made on the part of Germany?

Mr. FALL. Oh, Mr. President, so far as we are concerned—the Senator is a lawyer—this is municipal legislation, applicable to the people, if it is anything, that we are considering here, a sundry civil bill; and if this amendment is not subject to the point of order, then it is purely legislation affecting the people of the United States, and has nothing to do with Germany or whether Germany declares the war to cease or not.

Mr. President, the blockade has been lifted. The different nations of the world are trading with Germany. The President of the United States, if we can believe the public press, is issuing licenses to citizens of the United States enabling them to trade with Germany. The papers have informed us of this fact, and that those who seek licenses may get them at the proper office. If this amendment has any effect whatsoever, it will simply be to place all citizens on an equality, so that under a prosecution for a violation of section 3 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, such a citizen not holding a license issued by the President of the United States can offer the amendment itself in justification for his act.

That is the status of the amendment. If it is subject to a point of order, let the point be raised and the ruling be had. If it is not, let us have a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have just read the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico; and it appears to me that the substance of the amendment is an effort by indirection to declare the status existing between this Government and the Government of Germany, without awaiting the usual course of the ratification of a treaty. It appears to me that there can be but one conclusion as to the purpose of the amendment. It reads as follows:

That the status of peace between the former Imperial German Government and the United States of America being declared to exist, no part of said sum shall be used in enforcing the provisions of section 3 of an act of October 6, 1917, known as the trading-with-the-enemy act.

Now, of course, if we do not desire further to enforce the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act we have a right to say so, and withhold those portions of the appropriation in this bill that will probably go to the United States marshals and district attorneys; and it might be in order, if it is not new legislation, for the Congress to make that limitation. The only criticism of that, if that were all that were contained in the body of this amendment, would be as to whether or not we desired to continue in force the terms of the trading-with-the-enemy act.

I understand that under Executive orders at the present time the trading-with-the-enemy act is not being enforced. There may be some technical orders being issued that it is necessary to promulgate in order to comply technically with the terms of the act; but there is no real effort to restrict trade under the terms of the trading-with-the-enemy act at this time.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Unless the terms of section 3 are being complied with, then whoever is allowing such trading is violating the law of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said that probably some technical blanket orders are being issued to prevent that; but whilst the Senator is on his feet I should like to ask him a question. Would he be willing to consent to strike out of his amendment these words?—

That the status of peace between the former Imperial German Government and the United States of America being declared to exist—

And just let the amendment read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used in enforcing the provisions of section 3 of an act of October 6, 1917, known as the trading-with-the-enemy act.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I have a little Irish in me. Will the Senator tell me whether, in the event I consent to striking out those words, he will support the amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I will support it.

Mr. FALL. Very well, sir. I have no objection to striking them out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All right, Mr. President. With that modification of the amendment, I have nothing further to say. I have no desire to keep the trading-with-the-enemy act on the statute books.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With that modification of the amendment, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. FALL. Of course, I simply desire to say that I am anxious to get results, and that I have consented to strike out that clause for the purpose of getting results. Any other or further purpose I have had has been achieved by offering it as it was in the original words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used in enforcing the provisions of section 3 of an act of October 6, 1917, known as the trading-with-the-enemy act, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment as modified.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in view of the condition of this legislation, I trust that that amendment may not be adopted. While fully in sympathy with the movement, yet I am also in sympathy with these thousands of men and women who are waiting for the compensation due them, and with these establishments that are really going ahead without warrant of law, as they have been doing for more than half of this month. It seems to me necessary that we should at this time pass this bill as it has come to us from the House and take up these other matters at some later day.

Therefore I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I want to say that, of course, the Senator from Wyoming is not at all to blame in this matter; but, nevertheless, I have been misled into the thought that there would be no objection to this proposed amendment if I acceded to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. Otherwise I certainly should have endeavored to secure a vote directly upon the question as to whether the Senate of the United States, at least, as one body, is ready to declare its recognition of the fact that peace exists between this country and Germany. Of course now there is no opportunity for me to have the voice of the Senate upon that proposition by virtue of the fact that I have been, not of course caught in a trap, because no one intended to lay any for me——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say to the Senator that I have had no conference with the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. FALL. I am sure of that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to vote for the Senator's amendment, and will do so.

Mr. FALL. I am confident that the Senator will; and I was simply expressing my very serious regret that the chairman of the committee had refrained from expressing himself until after the agreement had been reached between the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Georgia and myself, and I had agreed to an amendment of the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is reminded that there was a point of order made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] which was pending and not determined upon and waiting until this later consent to change the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Oh, I am not accusing the Senator——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want the Senator from New Mexico to understand that the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Georgia can not bind the Senate, and that we are not obliged to adopt this amendment because they have agreed on it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I have not undertaken to make any such assertion nor any such suggestion. The remark of the Senator is entirely unwarranted. I was simply expressing my personal regret that I had been led into certain action by the suggestion of the Senator. I have criticized no Senator whomsoever, and the Senator from Minnesota should know from our past association that he is the last one in this body whom I would attempt to criticize in any way.

Mr. NELSON. I was surprised, Mr. President, at the language of the Senator. He seemed to intimate that this thing was settled because of the agreement that had been made. I want to say to him that it is not settled for one. There will be one vote against it, anyway.

Mr. FALL. Why, of course; and I want to say that I was very much surprised at the attitude and the language of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota misunderstood me. The Senator from New Mexico withdrew his amendment—that part of it which I thought made it subject to a point of order. Therefore I withdrew my point of order. I still hope that the bill will pass without any amendment at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from Minnesota seems to think that some of his brother Senators have made an agreement that affects him. My purpose in rising a moment ago was to combat the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as it stood, because I believed that the language in the amendment at that time involved those very grave questions which affected peace conditions in this country; and, believing that they should only be considered in the proper way in connection with the treaty, I was prepared to resist the amendment on that ground. But I wanted to know the attitude of the Senator from New Mexico, and I asked him as to whether or not he was trying to withhold appropriations from the future carrying on of the trading-with-the-enemy act, or whether the main purpose of his amendment was to affect the peace status of the country. When I asked him if he was willing to strike out those words that related to the peace status of the country, he said he was, but first asked me if I was willing to support the amendment without them, and I said I would; that I was willing to support his amendment if it did not affect questions relating to peace.

That conversation was entirely between the Senator from New Mexico and myself. Of course, it did not affect anyone else in the Senate; and I merely wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, the trading-with-the-enemy act was a very useful piece of legislation when we were in an actual condition of war. I expect and hope that within 30 days the treaty of peace will be ratified by the United States Senate and a technical condition of war will be over, as an actual condition of war is over, and therefore I see no reason in the world why any money should be wasted in carrying on the trading-with-the-enemy act at a time when we have let down the bars for the admission of all classes of goods into the enemy country to-day. By the terms of the agreement entered into in Paris, not waiting for our ratification, the doors are open to Germany for the goods and the trade of every nation on the earth, including ourselves.

Now, I do not believe that the executive branch of the Government will use any of this money to further enforce the trading-with-the-enemy act, but if that were done it certainly would be a waste of public money. Therefore I do not see any harm whatever in adopting the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico and providing that this money shall not be used for that purpose when we do not want it used for the purpose, when we are not going to use it for the purpose, after he has stricken out that section of the amendment which related to the peace status of the two nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. He is absent to-day. I transfer that pair to my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HENDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who is absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Borah	Gronna	Lenroot	Poindexter
Cummins	Hale	Lodge	Spencer
Curtis	Harding	McCumber	Sutherland
Dillingham	Johnson, Calif.	Moses	Underwood

Edge	Keyes	Phelan	Sterling
Elkins	McCormick	Phipps	Townsend
Fletcher	McLean	Pomerene	Wolcott

So Mr. FALL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, line 18, insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the board is authorized to use of any unexpended balance on hand the sum of $50,000 for assisting in the construction and equipment of a woman's reformatory institution near Camp Pike, in Arkansas, said board having agreed with the local State authorities to furnish said sum for the purposes upon their supplying a like amount, which has been done.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while I might under other circumstances not object to this amendment, as I said a moment ago in reference to another matter, I feel that the necessity of passing the bill without amendments of that kind makes it necessary for me to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. If there be no further amendment proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that, having given written notice in compliance with the rule that to-morrow I would offer an amendment, the final vote can not be taken to-day. My notice serves automatically to postpone a final vote on the passage of the bill until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to be heard for a minute upon the point of order. I had no opportunity to give the notice until to-day. The bill was passed by the House only yesterday afternoon. Prior to that time I did not know but what the bill would be defeated in the House. I had no way of knowing that it would pass the House and come to the Senate, and it was only reported to the Senate to-day. I had no way of knowing what would be in the bill as reported until it was reported to-day. I had no way of knowing what the committee might put in the bill or take out of the bill. I had no way of knowing what the contents of the bill would be until it was reported to-day.

A construction of a rule which would make the rule meaningless and ineffective is not a sound construction of a rule. A rule must be given some construction which will make it operative and effective and which will make it mean something. If you give a rule a construction which destroys the rule, then the construction is unsound, because it would destroy the very subject which you are construing.

If the bill had been up for consideration before the Senate on yesterday, I think it could be justly contended that by giving my notice to-day I was too late, but I had no opportunity to give the notice until to-day. I claim that the rule under which I gave my notice, Rule XL of the Senate, operates so that when a bill is reported to the Senate, if a notice is given of a motion to suspend the rule in order to offer an amendment which is prohibited by the rules, it operates automatically to put the final vote over one day—that is, if it is offered on the day the bill is reported.

If I were to give the notice to-morrow, the bill having been before the Senate to-day, that I would on Monday make this motion, then I would have slept on my rights. But I have had no rights to sleep on heretofore.

I say when the bill is just reported to the Senate this rule places it in the power of any Senator to put the vote over one day if he gives his notice on the same day that the bill is reported, not if he gives notice on a subsequent day, but on the same day he can postpone the vote for 24 hours. You may say if a Senator can do that he can postpone the vote on the bill forever, but that is not sound, because his right to postpone the vote 24 hours is limited to giving a notice on the same day the bill is reported to the Senate, and after that day if he gives a notice he is too late and he has slept on his rights. Unless you take that construction of the rule it simply destroys the right of a Senator to give notice on the same day a bill is reported that he will on the next day move to suspend the rules in order to offer an amendment which is forbidden by the rules. Unless that construction is taken, then a Senator is powerless to give notice that he will move to suspend the rules on the same day the bill is reported if the rest of the Senate is ready to vote that day. Therefore I urge the point of order that the bill can not be voted on to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MYERS. Then, Mr. President, I offer the amendment now without notice, and in doing so I will beg the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill not to make a point of order against it, because a delay of one day will not hurt anything in regard to the bill. I ask that the amendment may be read, so that the chairman of the committee may hear it. I offer it now without notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the proper place in the bill:

To resume and prosecute work on projects and units thereof under the reclamation act stopped during the war and to begin and prosecute existing projects and units thereof which are practically ready for prosecution, to be immediately available and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, $50,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I would like to help my friend the Senator from Montana at the proper time, but I am compelled to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. Then I will offer another amendment, which is materially different. I ask that it be read and hope it may appeal to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the proper place:

To prosecute further work on projects, and units thereof, under the reclamation act, now in course of construction, and to begin and prosecute new projects and units thereof in drought-stricken regions of the United States, to be immediately available and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to drought-stricken and suffering homesteaders, farmers, and ranchers, $5,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order against that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I was in hopes the chairman of the committee would not make a point of order against it, as it is for a much smaller sum. Of course, that is a matter for the Chair to rule upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I can not believe that the Senator's point of order is well taken.

Mr. WARREN. Pretty nearly all points of order lie against it. In the first place, it has not been estimated for; in the second place, it has not been presented to the committee and printed a day beforehand; it is legislation, and it also increases an appropriation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not understand the Senator to put his objection on those grounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to renew my point of order that the Senate can not vote on the bill to-day, in view of the notice I have given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] sustained the point of order, and the Chair will stand by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MYERS. Then I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTICLE 10, COVENANT OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I give notice that on Monday, the 28th day of July, at the close of the morning business, I shall address the Senate upon article 10 of the covenant of the league of nations.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT EQUIPMENT FOR ROAD PURPOSES.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on July 1 the Senate adopted two resolutions—Senate resolution 108 and Senate resolution 109—one directing the Secretary of Agriculture to report the quantity and description of war material, equipment, and supplies, particularly the number and description of cars, trucks, and tractors, which will be required for the use and improvement of highways, and so forth. A supplement or complement to that resolution directed the Secretary of War to report to the Senate the number and description of cars, trucks, tractors, and other war material, equipment, and supplies on hand and which are not needed by the War Department, and so forth. The purpose was to require these departments to indicate the number of cars that would be required for road purposes and the number that would be available then for sale.

My information was that there were several thousand trucks that were not being properly cared for, and that would so deteriorate as to become of little or no value, whereas if they were properly handled and properly disposed of several millions of dollars might result to the Government. I desire to inquire whether, pursuant to these resolutions, these departments have responded and furnished the information required.

The VICE PRESIDENT. None has come to the hands of the Chair.

Mr. KING. I shall simply content myself with saying that some of these departments are very slow in answering the demands and requests made for information by the Senate. If these departments fail to furnish this information at the next meeting of the Senate I shall ask for the passage of appropriate resolutions which I hope will secure the information called for.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that it will be necessary to keep the Senate in session until the sundry civil bill has been signed by the presiding officers. The bill has gone back to the House, and there will be no delay in signing it, because it is engrossed and ready. In the meantime I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 7343. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send representatives to the World Cotton Conference to be held at New Orleans, La., October 13 to 16, 1919, inclusive.

DEATH OF EDWARD V. MURPHY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I rise to announce the death of Edward V. Murphy, at Albany, N. Y., on the 16th instant, while en route to Canada, where he hoped he might regain his rapidly failing health. He is to be interred in this city on Monday next.

For almost 60 consecutive years he has been connected with the official stenographic force of the Senate. Mr. Murphy entered upon this work on February 13, 1860, and ever since that time has rendered most faithful and efficient service. His has been a wonderful experience, and his contact with men and measures before and since the Civil War made him a most interesting and instructive figure in and around the Capitol. Always faithful, courteous, and kindly, and holding him, as I did, in the highest regard, I feel constrained to announce the death of this splendid public servant to my colleagues in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility of the death of Edward V. Murphy, late one of its Official Reporters, and expresses its sense of the fidelity, industry, and ability with which he discharged the duties of his responsible office.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 21, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 18, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou everliving God, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; creating, re-creating, upholding, sustaining Thy children in everything that is pure and holy, help us to be too wise to be ignorant, too strong to be weak, too broad to be narrow, too just to be prejudiced, too noble to be mean, too generous to be selfish, too brave to be cowards, that the trend of our life may be Godward in imitation of the world's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee, headed by ex-Justice of the Supreme Court Charles E. Hughes, on the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in reference to the consultations they have been having the last few days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report made by the committee on the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. WALSH. What committee is that—Interstate Commerce——

Mr. RAYBURN. No; a report made by the committee headed by ex-Justice Hughes, which has been through the bureau in the last few days, an expurgated copy of which was found in the newspapers this morning.

Mr. WALSH. Ex-Justice Hughes?

Mr. RAYBURN. And several other members.

Mr. WALSH. The name sounds familiar.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this committee is an unofficial committee, is it not?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And some society ladies and others are on it, are they not?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, I do not know that that is any reflection on these ladies——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not mean any.

Mr. RAYBURN. They are the heads of great organizations——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But not expert insurance people; rather a social affair?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think ex-Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court is considered a pretty good authority on insurance matters.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think in a few hours any committee can make an overhauling of that department that would be considered——

Mr. RAYBURN. They do not profess to make any overhauling of the department or a full investigation. This is an advisory committee asked here to consult on certain policies with reference to that bureau.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the purpose of getting it in the RECORD at this time?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like for the Members of the House to have an opportunity of knowing what they say about certain matters set out in this report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It makes no constructive suggestions?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think they do.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture I offer a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, reports the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DYER. That it is not in order to take it up for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman is offering it for consideration at this time.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to find out if it is proposed to take it up now.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to take it up at the earliest possible moment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7413, being a bill "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920." That the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. That there shall be one hour of general debate, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. That at the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read. That the provisions in all paragraphs of said bill shall be in order. That on the reading of the bill no amendments shall be in order except germane amendments to the following paragraph, beginning on line 8, page 102, of said bill:

"That section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States,' approved March 19, 1918, is hereby repealed, effective on the last Sunday of October, 1919, after the approval of this act, when by the retarding of one hour the standard time of each zone shall be returned to and thereafter be the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone as defined in section 1 of said act approved March 19, 1918."

That at the conclusion of the reading of said bill it shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may be made to the paragraph specified as subject to amendment. That thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What makes you shut out any discussion or amendment of these four other senatorial propositions that were hitched on this bill originally and the House never had any chance to discuss except on the conference report?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was asked by the Committee on Agriculture after consulting with Members of another body, with a view of expediting the passage of the bill. It was thought it would materially expedite the passage of this bill if the Senate amendments, that would have been subject to a point of order, were made in order and reported as agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What goes of this great hullabaloo here that we have had about senatorial riders on appropriation bills? Have the Republicans entirely surrendered on that proposition or not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is not the question immediately before the House at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know it is not, and I am trying to get information.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Agriculture, as I stated, were desirous of expediting the passage of this bill and providing appropriations, so that the salaries of the employees in the Department of Agriculture could be paid. I understand that they are now selling their liberty bonds to pay their living expenses because there is no money available to pay their salaries.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe the method he has adopted now will expedite the final consummation of this legislation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the belief of the committee that reported the bill.

Mr. GARNER. I think that its belief is not well founded.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. RUBEY. I desire to give the gentleman some information, and that is that the report of the Committee on Agriculture was not a unanimous report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask if this is not another instance of "passing the buck"?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not familiar with that term. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] if the Democratic members of the Committee on Agriculture were in favor of daylight saving?

Mr. RUBEY. I will reply to the gentleman by saying that the Democratic members of the committee, speaking for myself, are not in favor of delaying this great bill by sending it again to the President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows, of course, that his committee presented and had adopted by this House a special rule for the consideration of this prohibition regulation bill. Does the gentleman think that this bill which he now would make in order should take precedence over the prohibition bill and is of greater importance to the country than that great bill that we absolutely want so badly?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In answer to the gentleman from Missouri, who is so eager for the early enactment of the law for the enforcement of prohibition, I will state that it is important to the country that provision be made for the payment of the expenses of the Department of Agriculture, which is now without funds.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield further for just a minute?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question only.

Mr. DYER. Well, if the gentleman feels that way about it, that it is so important, why does he intend to make in order a bill which has upon it a rider which he knows from the controversy about it will delay the enacting of this bill into law for maybe months and weeks? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman be good enough to give me a few minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. I should like the attention of the House for a few moments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and one gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Gould	Kiess	Rhodes
Ashbrook	Graham, Pa.	King	Riordan
Browne	Greene, Mass.	Lee, Ga.	Rouse
Carter	Greene, Vt.	Linthicum	Rowan
Costello	Hamill	McClintic	Schall
Dent	Hamilton	McGlennon	Scully
Dewalt	Hayden	Maher	Slemp
Dooling	Heflin	Mann	Smith, N. Y.
Eagle	Hersman	Mason	Stephens, Miss.
Echols	Hicks	Neely	Stiness
Fairfield	Hull, Tenn.	Oldfield	Sullivan
Fordney	Ireland	Porter	Tilson
Frear	Kahn	Purnell	Vare
Freeman	Kelley, Mich.	Reber	Walsh
Goodall	Kettner	Reed, W. Va.	Walters

The SPEAKER. On this vote 372 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], to be used as he may determine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there are two phases of this matter to which I wish to call the attention of gentlemen of the House. The question of the daylight-saving legislation is not the only question and not the most serious proposition that is involved in this very drastic resolution presented by the Committee on Rules. It was stated before the Committee on Rules by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture when applying for this resolution that there were, as I remember it, at least six legislative propositions contained in the bill as reported by his committee which were placed in the former bill by way of amendment by the Senate and those legislative propositions were never passed on by the House of Representatives save only as the House was voting upon the final completed conference report.

Now, this resolution provides that all those propositions shall be in order, and it further provides that they shall not be subject to amendment. Therefore six important legislative propositions are to be brought de novo before the House for the consideration of the House—propositions that would not be in order, perhaps, under the general rules of the House, and yet the House must pass upon them without even being permitted to offer an amendment to strike them out. I do not favor any such principle of legislation as that, and for that reason I shall vote against the previous question on this resolution.

The other phase of the matter is this so-called daylight-saving proposition. With that gentlemen are quite familiar. The House has passed an independent bill, for which, by the way, I voted, and will vote again, to repeal that daylight-saving law, and that bill is now pending before another body ready for action at any time it chooses to act. That body placed an amendment on the Agricultural appropriation bill which carried the repeal of the daylight saving, placing it there by way of a rider. The President of the United States has seen fit to veto the entire bill because of that proposition. This House has voted once, exercising its right, aye, its constitutional duty, and it failed to pass it over the veto of the President. Now, it is proposed to come again, with precisely the same legislation in principle, and once more carry it to the President of the United States. For what? We know he will veto it again. I can conceive of no reason why it is desired to do it save perhaps to give the House another opportunity to vote to pass it over the President's veto. That can be had by the Senate passing the independent bill and letting us have a straight test on that measure without tying up one of the great departments of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As one, therefore, who favored the repeal of that legislation and who will vote again to repeal it, and who will vote to pass that independent measure over the veto of the President, I most earnestly appeal to this House not to trifle with this great appropriation bill and undertake to force this proposition in by way of a rider which has no business on the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has referred to six riders. He has called attention to the fact that the six riders have not been given consideration by the House, and for that reason he contends this bill should not pass, carrying them. Yet it has been suggested that the six of the seven riders, not having been considered by the House, shall be made in order, and that the rider to repeal the daylight act, which has been considered by the House and passed upon by the House by a vote of 232 to 122, shall not be made in order.

Gentlemen, will you suggest a rule making in order six riders on an appropriation bill when not one of them has been considered by the House and not the seventh one, which has been considered? Gentlemen, this rule affords an opportunity for the speedy consideration and passage of this appropriation bill. A vote for this rule means the immediate passage of this bill. A vote against the rule means delay. Vote down this rule, if you will. If so, you will be fortunate to have a bill by the 1st of September.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not yield now.

Are you willing that the employees of the Department of Agriculture shall go without pay? We submit the proposition to you. The responsibility is upon you. If you delay, you will be responsible. If you vote down this rule, you delay the passage of the bill.

What is there to this rule? Only that the House may have opportunity to vote for or against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving act. That is all there is to the proposition. Are you afraid to trust yourselves? Are you afraid to go on record? Are you so determined to defeat this proposition—a proposition that 95 per cent of the farmers desire to have repealed, and repealed immediately—to refuse to take care of the department? It will not do, gentlemen, merely to say that you are for the repeal of the daylight-saving act and to do everything that you can to defeat it. That will not go.

It has been suggested that if this proposition is turned down the farmer will forget. Do not be deceived. If the farmer is compelled to get up an hour earlier in the morning, at 3 o'clock instead of 4 o'clock, with his lantern in hand, he will be reminded of the President's veto and the action of Congress. Gentlemen, will you have it said that the Committee on Agriculture, having jurisdiction of matters pertaining to agriculture, should deny the farmers the right to have this matter determined by their own Representatives? Are we not safe in leaving it to the vote of their own Representatives? Are you afraid to trust yourselves? That is the only proposition. Anyone who knows anything about it—and my Democratic friends know it as well as I do, and everybody knows it—knows that the only way to insure a speedy consideration and passage of this bill is simply to give the House an opportunity to vote upon the proposition so that a vote may be had in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do you not give the House a crack at these six propositions that the Senate opens up with?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If you vote for this new rule, you will vote to shut the House up on these six senatorial propositions that are riders. They can not be amended.

Mr. HAUGEN. The House accepted the six propositions unanimously.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They were accepted by the House on the conference report on the whip and spur of getting this great appropriation bill through, and the House never had a chance to discuss those Senate propositions.

Mr. HAUGEN. I put it up to the Democratic side of this House. Will you now delay the passage of this bill under the pretext that you want consideration of a proposition that you voted unanimously to accept heretofore? [Applause.] It is up to you, gentlemen.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman think he will expedite the passage of this bill by passing it here and sending it to the Senate, and from there to the President to have it vetoed and sent back here again?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from Iowa not only thinks so, but the gentleman from Missouri himself knows it. No one knows it better than the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. I know it will cause more delay——

Mr. HAUGEN. You can not deceive the American people by any procedure of this kind. Be candid about it. We must deal with the situation exactly as we have it. We are trying to pass this bill. You are trying to delay it, and the responsibility rests with you. The responsibility rests upon the President. He kept this bill 10 days. The Committee on Agriculture reported the bill. We have given it consideration, we have reported it, we have requested a rule, and the rule is here. The opportunity is here. Will you turn it down? Gentlemen, the responsibility is with you. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that gentlemen need not be alarmed about this bill being delayed in its consideration. I say that in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. If the previous question is voted down, a proper resolution for the immediate consideration of this bill will be forthcoming very promptly.

Mr. HAUGEN. What assurance can the gentleman give us for a rule that will give immediate consideration?

Mr. GARRETT. If the previous question is voted down, the gentleman will have his resolution very promptly.

Now I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I represent an agricultural district, and I introduced a bill to repeal the daylight-saving law. I voted for the separate bill that passed the House and is now in the Senate. I voted for this rider to the Agricultural bill. I voted to override the President's veto. Should the Senate pass the bill now pending in the Senate and the President veto it, I will again vote to override the President's veto. But, gentlemen of the House, I am not going to lend myself to this absolutely inexcusable and indefensible proposition submitted to-day.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asserts that he has at heart the interests of the Agricultural Department. He knows and I know that every project in that department is embarrassed to-day; that the work is being stopped; that employees who should have been paid on the 15th have not been paid, and are borrowing money all around the city of Washington. He says that we are responsible for the delay in passing the bill if we vote against this rule. Are you honest in it? Bring in a continuing resolution continuing the appropriations that the department had last year. If the gentleman will do that, the appropriations will be continued and this question can be fought out; but to bring this proposition in here when such conditions exist in the department, when employees who are on leave and expected to visit their homes can not go because they have not the money, when they are borrowing money to pay board bills, when the work of the department throughout the country is stopped, and then submit this proposition to the President again, is playing politics instead of in a patriotic way attempting to legislate in behalf of the country. It is merely an effort to embarrass the President. Bring in your continuing resolution and continue the appropriations of last year, and as soon as you do it every one of us will vote to repeal the daylight-saving law. If you do not, you are not going to use us to further any such scheme.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. With the elimination of the daylight-saving proposition could not the Committee on Rules bring in a rule to suspend the rules and pass the Agricultural bill to-day?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman knows that they could and it would be adopted in 30 minutes, the bill sent to the Senate, and made a law within 24 hours. But let us not deceive ourselves. Every man on this side of the House knows that by taking this course we are going to delay the enactment of this Agricultural bill and embarrass the department. We should adopt a continuing resolution to save the department or else leave the amendment out of the bill and send it to the Senate. Let the Senate vote on the House bill now pending in the Senate and send it to the President and if he vetoes it I will vote to override the veto. But this proposition is simply an effort to tie it on here without an opportunity to put an amendment on it, send it to the Senate, and then send it to the President and have it vetoed and come back here and delay the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. You gentlemen who represent agricultural districts and who are in favor of the existence of the Department of Agriculture can not afford to vote for such a proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the adoption of this resolution. I concede, of course, that the President was clearly within his constitutional rights when he vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill because it contained a provision repealing the law known as the daylight-saving law. But I, for one, insist that there are times when even the President is not justified in exercising his right of veto, and especially when by so doing he sets at defiance the overwhelming sentiment of the people whom he is supposed to serve and whose wishes he is supposed to carry out. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from South Carolina has talked about the great Department of Agriculture not being able to function. If that department is not able to function it is due to the obstinacy of the President of the United States and nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There is an explanation for this most unpopular action of the President. In violation of a tradition as old as the Republic, and which has been regarded by all of his predecessors as binding as law, the President, as we know, has absented himself from the country for eight or nine months. He has breathed a foreign atmosphere so long that he is no longer in close touch with the sentiment of the common people of his own country.

The pleas of the farmers—all the farmers—of the mothers of children of school age, and of many of the workingmen of this country that they should be relieved of the effects of this irksome and foolish law, passed in the first instance by Congress simply because it bore the Presidential stamp of being a war measure, has fallen on deaf ears.

Of course, now that the whole world has been made safe for democracy, perhaps it is appropriate that the President should insist that every day in this country should be made safe for the joy rider and for the patron of the golf links and tennis courts. Without intending any disrespect, because I have the greatest possible respect for the office of President, I want to say that when the President makes the assertion in his veto message that this legislation is in the interest of the workingmen of this country he is about as far wrong as he was when, as a member of the Paris peace conference, he allowed the friendly Republic of China to be robbed of the Province of Shantung by the wily and unscrupulous Jap. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I represent a great industrial district—one of the greatest industrial districts in this country—and the workingmen of that district, as well as the farmers, are unanimously in favor of the immediate repeal of this law, and they advance most excellent reasons for their demand. They say that because of the intense heat that prevails throughout the Middle West it is impossible for them to sleep until late at night, when it gets somewhat cooler, but that they are compelled under this law to get up an hour earlier in the morning and thus to lose an hour of refreshing, invigorating, and beneficial sleep. That is what they object to.

Talk about this being in the interest of the workingman! I want to say that the great majority of the workingmen who live in the section where we have hot summers are bitterly opposed to this measure.

There is another element that is found in opposition to this freakish law about which I wish to speak, a strong element, strong in numbers and powerful in influence, and that is the mothers of children who are going to school. You and I and every one of us who is so fortunate to have a son knows that it is next to impossible to induce a healthy, vigorous, normal boy to quit his play and come in the house until it is dark. Under this new-fangled law darkness does not come until about 9 o'clock, and 9 o'clock is time for children to be in bed. As a result our boys and girls are deprived of the hour which they have heretofore devoted to study in preparation for their school work of the following day. If you will consult the schoolteachers of the country, I venture to say that they will tell you that more children have flunked in their studies since this law went into effect than at any time before in the history of the country. [Applause.]

The truth of the matter is there is not a single justification for the continuation of this law. It has accomplished no substantial or beneficial results of any kind.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODENBERG. No; I shall not yield. The law has proved an intolerable nuisance to many of our people, and I hope that when the rule is adopted and the bill is again passed and sent to the President he, for once in his life, will set aside his own pride of opinion and listen to the voices of the representatives of the people and sign the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, after the attitude that I have taken on this measure and the fight that I tried to put up against this repeal I would be lacking in self-respect and courage if I did not take the floor at this time. I fail to see the analogy between the Shantung situation and justifying the repeal of this law as a rider on an appropriation bill. [Applause.] I want to tell my colleagues on the Republican side of the House—the new Members—that this is not a party matter. We may be new to this House, but we know how a party matter can be brought about, and none of us is bound to this rule as a party proposition.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] complains about the condition of the farmer and the condition of the school children. This repeal does not take effect until March of 1920. It does not repeal the law immediately. We have passed a bill to repeal that law, and that bill is in the Senate, and we should abide by the action of that bill. Those of us who voted against the bill will abide by it. We threw out this rider on the Agricultural bill when it was before us; we voted against the bill that was passed. The presidential veto was sustained in this House, and now they can not force this on us and say that it is a party matter. The individuals on the committee who brought in this rule seem to individually disavow such action but collectively approve it. I appeal to the new Members on this side that this is not a party matter, but it is simply the pressure being brought to bear by the agrarian movement. We have a perfect right to vote against the previous question and vote against the rule and also to vote against the bill if the rule is carried. There is nothing irregular in that vote. Do not let an argument of party regularity change your attitude. I repeat it is not a party matter. I do not know what percentage of the people all over the country want this measure kept as a law, but I know that an overwhelming majority of the people in my city are for keeping this law as it is, and I believe that when the President returned to his P. C. and got the reports from his listening posts they reported accurately that the majority of the people of this country are in favor of keeping the law exactly as it is on the statute books to-day. [Applause.] In the same breath that we are urged to vote for this repeal comes the claim that we want to expedite the passage of the appropriation bill. Notwithstanding that fact, a rule is brought in, which, if carried, absolutely hinders and retards the passage of the bill. I repeat it, and every man of common sense must acknowledge it, that we have passed a repealing bill; that that bill is now before the Senate; that it can be passed by the Senate in a few minutes and again put up to the President squarely on its merits. If you are so sure that the people of the country want a change, why do you not let it go to the President as a separate bill and not after a veto attach it as a rider to this appropriation bill? [Applause.]

I urge again the Members who have voted against this repeal, who have sustained the fight in the House, to stand by us now and to vote against the previous question and vote against the acceptance of the rule. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several Members, I wish to make it perfectly clear that if the previous question be voted down I will then be entitled under the practice of the House to the floor, and will immediately offer a resolution to take up at once the consideration of this Agricultural appropriation bill under the general rules of the House.

Mr. RUBEY. Read the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. It will take too much of my time, but the bill will be considered under the usual rules of the House, in the manner in which these bills are considered usually. There will, therefore, be no delay about that.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY].

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the statement made by the Republican spokesman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. He said that the distinguished President has evidently been out of touch with the people of this country. The Republican Party has been peeved ever since the people of the country reelected the present incumbent of the White House, and because he won the admiration of the people of the United States and went abroad and won the admiration of the world the Republicans are more peeved than ever. I voted against the repeal of the daylight-saving law. It was passed, and this great man in the White House had the courage to veto it because he was in touch with the majority of the people of the United States, and he knows that the majority of the people are opposed to the repeal of the daylight-saving law. It resolves itself into a contest between the farmers and the people of the cities. The Representatives of the agricultural districts come in here, the representatives of the farmers, who are banded together and show their strength. They insist that this law shall be repealed and they demand their commands be obeyed. I come from a city where thousands and hundreds of thousands of the toilers who work in the great industries do not want it repealed, where there are little girls in the factories who are denied an opportunity to enjoy God's sunlight otherwise, and I want them to have an opportunity to get out of doors to build themselves up physically and mentally. There are about 12,000,000 people engaged in agricultural pursuits as against 27,000,000 who are engaged in other industries; therefore my colleague [Mr. RODENBERG] is out of touch with the people instead of the President.

This is not a partisan question, but every opportunity given the Republicans of this House to inject politics and criticize the leader of the American people they grasp it; they admonish him for going to Europe, and if he refrained from crossing the ocean in all likelihood they would be verbally chastising him for not going. He had a right to go, and no one will deny he reflected the greatness of the United States and acquitted himself in a masterly way.

With you Republicans it is not a question of right or wrong. It is a question of abusing the administration, playing petty politics, and I think the people of this country are getting tired of it.

I am further opposed to this rule because of the riders attached in the Senate, which prevent discussion on the floor of this House of questions which affect all the people of this country; and under this drastic rule we are forbidden to raise our voice against this injustice and abuse. I will vote against it, and ask all of you who are interested in the great majority of the people of these United States, regardless of their political affiliation, to do likewise.

Now, if the gentleman from Illinois and the Republican Party desire to respond to the will of the majority of the people, then permit this present daylight-saving law to run along as it is and thereby give the poor, unfortunate toilers of this great country an opportunity to enjoy a few hours' recreation with their families. Another thing, Mr. Speaker, this Agricultural Committee——

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. It has made it impossible——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am very much interested in the discussion of this question. I am interested from two angles. I am interested because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] gave a good deal of advice to the new Members. I am interested from the gentleman's standpoint who just completed his speech, the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY], and I want to say to you men that I have lived in the country a good many years, and I have also lived in the city a good many years, and think I know something of the lives and habits of each class of people. I live in a city to-day, and if there is 30 per cent of the population, or even if there is 10 per cent of the population in the city or in the rural districts of my State—Ohio—that is in favor of this bill not being repealed I will vote with the Democratic side of the House. [Applause.] Under the present arrangement we are placed two hours ahead of where we were two years ago, and everybody in my community and in my State is called upon to disregard the laws of the land and the wishes of the high and mighty, who sends down his desires to this body, to violate the law or be inconvenienced. Every city and every village in my State to-day have disregarded this law and have gone back to the old time. This forces every one of Ohio's citizens to be technical law violators. The only thing that it really causes is inconvenience with the railroads and with transportation. I have it on good authority that the people who are interested in maintaining this law are the financial interests, because they lose a few hours of interest in computing the time at which interest begins and ends. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I am very glad to hear you enjoy that remark, but if you will go to your banker, and if he does not tell you that what I have said is true I will again vote with you.

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BEGG. I can not, as I have only a couple of minutes in which to speak. Another point. Mr. Speaker, why should not this rule be sustained and passed. It gives gentlemen on that side of the House—the Democratic—an opportunity, if they want to do so, to vote for the bill and for its passage. Many of them profess to be in favor of its repeal. If this action is dilatory, if it is delaying the passage of this Agricultural bill, you can not charge it to a single man in this House, but to the President.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. There has been one vote taken on the bill, and it passed by a vote of 232 to 122. I can not yield now.

Mr. DONOVAN. All right.

Mr. BEGG. And if 232 Representatives of this House do not have the means to be and are not in closer touch with the common people of this country than any President can be, sitting in the White House, what is a Congress for?

Mr. PELL. God knows.

Mr. BEGG. Nor do I know, by the way it has been acting the last two years, by its bowing to every whim of the President.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Illinois just stated he represented the toiling masses, the working people of the land. How do the working people of Ohio stand on this bill?

Mr. BEGG. Ninety per cent or more are in favor of its repeal.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. For a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. The statement of the gentleman was that financial interests are opposed to it, owing to losing some certain hours of their interest charges. Now, I will ask the gentleman if he will call on the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], one of his colleagues, who is a banker, as to whether there is anything that would cause one to base such an opinion——

Mr. BEGG. I will give the gentleman the privilege of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. DONOVAN. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN]——

Mr. BEGG. But not in my time. Mr. Speaker, I want again to call the attention of the House, and particularly the new Members——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. May I have one minute more?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas controls the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. BEGG. I want to call the attention of the new Members, because I am one, and I admit we are pretty green in some of our aspects on the floor of this House, and also to direct the attention of the old Members to this fact: We came from the people last fall [applause], and we know their wishes as well as you who are older, and I want again to direct the attention of the Members on the Democratic side to the fact that the reason we are here is because the people back home were not satisfied with your administration. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I want again to appeal to the Members of this side of the House that you will not get any consideration by pleading with that side of the House. [Applause.] I want to say to the leaders on this side you can count on me for Republican measures, because I am a Republican all the time. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the situation is a very simple one. There are just two questions before us. The first is, Shall we stop talking and begin to vote—— [Cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.] That is what the previous question means, and gentlemen who vote against the previous question are not voting to settle anything, but simply to indulge in further conversation.

Second, the question is, Shall we consider the Agricultural bill, a great supply bill that should be passed? It is reported by the Committee on Agriculture. The only way it can be considered is under a rule, and the adoption of the rule will provide for the immediate consideration and passage of the bill; and it is the duty of every man on this side, at least, having regard for the great interests served by this bill, to vote for the previous question and vote for the rule, in order that we may pass the Agricultural bill promptly. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas kindly agreed to yield to me three minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee, however, that there will be two more speeches on this side.

Mr. GARRETT. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

I have twice stated that if the previous question should be voted down, under the practice of the House some one in opposition to the resolution as it stands would be entitled to the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment. If that should occur, therefore, and I obtain recognition, I shall offer this resolution as a substitute for the committee resolution:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7413, being a bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and one-half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]; that at the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; that at the conclusion of the reading of said bill it shall be reported to the House with amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

With that resolution there is no reason why this bill should not be considered and passed before the sun goes down to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I appear before you because I am in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law.

In the brief time allotted to me I wish to give the several reasons which lead me to that conclusion. First, the people in both the cities and the country in the section from which I come are against the daylight-saving law. The sentiment among the farmers is almost universal against it, and I might answer my very eloquent friend from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] that the people of the cities, the toiling masses, in our part of the country are against the daylight-saving law. I represent as great an industrial city as there is in the Middle West—the city of Akron. [Applause.] There is no question that the present daylight-saving law is a great injustice to the farmer, and I am very much of the opinion that it is an equal injustice to the people of the cities. I can well understand why those distinguished gentlemen from the East are in favor of the present daylight-saving law, and I can not blame them.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. I will yield.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that Toledo and Cleveland, Ohio, adopted a daylight-saving law ahead of the Government?

Mr. DAVEY. It is true that all the cities of eastern Ohio adopted eastern time, and now they have rejected the faster time and gone back to the old time.

Mr. PLATT. If this bill is passed as the Committee on Agriculture is bringing it in, it will still leave you an hour ahead of where you were before.

Mr. DAVEY. It will leave us where we were by choice.

There is one more thing that I wish to say, gentlemen, perhaps partly in answer to my very good colleague from Ohio——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. It is just this, that I appear here as an American citizen and not as a Democrat. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am seeking to serve my country as an American, and I hope to be a better Democrat by being first an American. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the motion will be on the previous question. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has appealed to the House to vote down the previous question, and at the same time was frank enough to state that that would throw the control of the House to the other side of the aisle. That is the only real political motion that will be made upon this subject to-day—the motion on the previous question. If the gentlemen on this side desire to throw the control of the House of Representatives to-day into the hands of the Democratic Party, they will vote against the previous question.

The next question is on the adoption of the rule. That brings the question of the consideration of this bill before the House to-day, and will enable the House to pass the bill to-day. The motion that would be offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], if he were given control here, would delay the passage of this bill for as long as it takes to pass the Agricultural appropriation bill, which in the last instance was about 10 days. Last of all, if this rule is agreed to, it simply gives the House of Representatives an opportunity to consider all the legislation made in order in this bill. It is not a party question after this rule is agreed to. It is then a question for the House of Representatives to decide.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a brief question.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, the gentleman does not mean to leave the impression that there is opportunity to consider it with amendments?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not intend that the House should so understand it. I have stated the contrary. The House will have an opportunity to discuss, however, the only question at issue, which is the daylight saving. That is the only question at issue here; and the motion to recommit will give a yea-and-nay vote to the Members of this House on the daylight saving. If a yea-and-nay vote is not had upon an amendment to that, that provision goes out of the bill. And I say to the House that, if I have any influence with those in control, we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on the daylight saving [applause], so that every Member of the House who is opposed to the law can go on record plainly for its repeal, and those in favor of the law can just as plainly vote against its repeal. [Applause.] All we ask is that the Members of the House of Representatives shall have an opportunity to consider this bill as indicated in the rule and vote as they please on the question of daylight saving.

The rule makes the legislation in order in the House. Then Members of the House can vote as their convictions dictate and as their constituents desire when it comes to voting upon the question at issue.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 178, answered "present" 1, not voting 50, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. TILSON with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. WALTERS with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. VARE with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. REED of West Virginia with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. MASON with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. HULL of Tennessee.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. KING with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. PURNELL with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill is dispensed with under the rule.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not intend to take up much time on this bill. I think it is important that this House pass the bill, but I do want to talk just a little bit about the so-called Senate amendments. They are Senate amendments in a way, and in a way they are not. Every one of them was changed in conference. As I understand it, there were six amendments proposed by the Senate, which the conferees finally accepted as revised by the conferees, and they were attached to this bill as it passed. Every one of them ought to be on the Agricultural bill, and it is hardly fair to the body at the other end of the Capitol to criticize them for wanting to put some amendments on the Agricultural bill. Being an appropriation bill, it has to originate in this House; and certainly, as it has to pass the Senate, they have a right to some consideration in it. The conferees of the House reduced the amendments of the Senate until they are merely nominal as compared with other appropriations. Under this rule, of course, the only vote that will be of any consequence is that on the daylight saving. Your committee in reporting the bill as they did were actuated by two things. One was the current report that the President, having spent a few days in the United States, has been informed concerning the wishes of the people of the United States with reference to this war measure and that he is now ready to act accordingly. I do not know how reliable that information is. Much of my information is of a negative character, procured by consulting the ranking members of our committee on the other side, men whom you would have supposed the President would have consulted before vetoing this bill; men of the opposite party to myself, who are familiar with conditions in the United States, who favor the repeal of the daylight-saving law, and men who know the feeling of the people here. I am informed that the President never talked to one of them before vetoing the bill. He must have been busy in preparing that long treaty and in the work that he had abroad, and he was simply ill-advised in making that veto, and we are all hoping it will not occur again.

The other proposition is that a two-thirds majority of both Houses of Congress have voted to repeal this law, and there was some question in the committee whether that proposition had been properly presented to the Chief Executive. I think he was not advised on this subject. I am sure that some one from that side of the House had talked to him on one of the days that he was at home concerning a man at Ellis Island whom they were going to have removed. Then I think another man spent a day or two with him, no doubt, concerning this man Densmore, and I am satisfied some man on that side of the House has been explaining to him about the Postmaster General, and a lot of Senators were talking to him about the league of nations, so that he did not have time to find out that nearly three-fourths of the Representatives in Congress, representing their people at home, whose sentiments they speak, were asking for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. We are now simply offering him a chance to correct his error. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I represent an agricultural district. I have no large cities in my district. My people are favorable to the old system of time. They are against the new innovation. I voted against it. I voted to override the President's veto. While I did that and while I shall continue to represent the views of my people, as I understand them, I recognize the fact that I am confronted with a situation where I have got to use my judgment as a man and as a lawmaker.

The President was within his authority under the Constitution when he vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill. We were within our authority when we sought to override that veto and restore the old time. Now, we have before us the proposition as to whether or not we are to have legislation writing the appropriation bill into law, so that the great Agricultural Department may function, or whether we shall pass the buck back to the President and let him again veto this bill, because it carries with it the measure that he vetoed only quite recently. It is a serious proposition that confronts me as a representative of my people; but while that is true, I have come to the conclusion after deliberate thought that we can have legislation on this time question by reason of the fact that in the other end of the Capitol now is a bill containing the very provision that is in this bill. All that the Senate has to do is to pass on that legislation, and we shall have it stripped of the appropriation features of this bill, and then we can vote our sentiments and override the veto of the President, should he veto that measure if it is passed by the Senate. I do not feel that I can by my vote delay the appropriation bill which supports the entire Agricultural Department of this Nation, because that department now needs the funds, and I shall vote to pass this bill without the daylight section and take my chances as to representing my people who are in favor of repealing the daylight law, and when that measure passes the Senate and comes back, even if the President vetoes it, I shall vote to override that veto. That is the common sense of the situation as I see it. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEVER. How much time did the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas had one-half minute remaining.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the committee, in reporting this bill in its present form, acted wisely. As has been stated by my colleagues, there are other riders on the bill, four or five of them. It would, therefore, have been unfair to make all other riders in order and at the same time not give the House the privilege of taking a vote on the daylight-saving proposition—a question on which we have received more petitions for its repeal than have been received on all other matters of legislation put together. More than 2,200 telegrams came to the House Office Building the first day after the President's veto, urging Congress to repeal the daylight-saving law notwithstanding the veto. It is a fact that farm organizations all over the country from New York to California and from the Canadian line to the Gulf are now sending letters, telegrams, and petitions to the President endeavoring to inform him that the farmers of this country are practically unanimous for the repeal of this provision.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. SEARS. If that is true, why does not the Republican majority in the Senate pass the bill which the House has already passed?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. That is not for our consideration over here.

There were two arguments which the Executive used in justifying his veto of this bill. The first was that his advisers, including the experts of Europe, had informed him that the daylight law was a good and wise measure; and the second that the law enabled laborers to work during daylight and save artificial light, thereby saving fuel.

I submitted to the Members when this matter was up for consideration before that during the months of April, May, September, and October people who start at work at 7 o'clock in the morning, as most people do, must begin work by artificial light. In addition, they must use artificial light in the home to get ready to go to work. So the reasons given for the veto are not valid. I believe that if these things are pointed out to the President in addition to the vast number of telegrams and petitions that will come to him in the meantime, the President will see the wisdom of approving this measure if it goes to him a second time.

I want to submit, in all fairness, that if the people of the large cities see advantages in this measure they can have such advantages without the law—without forcing upon the farmers of all the country the disadvantage of working contrary to the natural hours regulated by the sun. It is unfair to ask the farmers of the entire Nation, upon whom not only this country but the world is depending for food, to work an hour and a half ahead of the sun.

It was argued when the hearings were had, when this act was passed in the previous Congress, that certain manufacturers in the East had adopted this provision before the law went into effect and had found it advantageous. If that is so, why, in the name of common sense, can not they start an hour earlier in the morning and have an hour extra in the afternoon without saying by mandate of law to all these 10,000,000 farmers, "You must adopt this law in order to accommodate us in the city"?

The fact of the matter is a large majority of the laborers in every part of the country are also asking for this repeal. Organized labor recently voted by a large majority for its repeal. The propaganda for the law is being directed entirely by the Daylight Savings Corporation of New York City.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that such imposition is not fair. I appeal to the sense of justice of my colleagues. I believe if this matter was submitted to the President of the United States by his numerous friends on the Democratic side of the House in just the right light he would see the error of attempting to fasten on the millions of farmers and laboring men of the country a rule that is to their disadvantage, when all the advantages claimed for the measure can be had by every city that wants them without any law at all. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have never known the people of Illinois to be so wrought up over a proposition as they seem to be over this.

On Monday, the 14th, I voted to override the President's veto and pass the repeal bill. Through an inadvertence, which nobody intended, a couple of dispatches were sent from here to the papers stating I was the only Illinois Member of Congress outside of the city of Chicago who had voted to sustain the President's veto. From that time to this life has been a burden. To show the intensity of the feeling, I want to take the liberty within my few minutes to read a portion of a letter I have received.

Hon. RICHARD YATES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN YATES: I have just noticed that you voted to sustain President Wilson on the nonsensical daylight-saving law. I am surprised to see you vote thus, but you know what you want to do. You will not have many supporters in this section when you ask for votes again. I have supported you a great many times and under trying circumstances, but I can not and will not support you any more.

I venture to say that every Member of this House has heard from his constituents in every nook and corner of the country on this subject. I have, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want any mistake whatever as to how I am going to vote. I am going to vote here to-day to pass the repeal of the daylight-saving law over the President's veto. And in doing so I will register the will, the overwhelming will, of the overwhelming majority of the people of Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Members be given five legislative days to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVER. On the bill, on the daylight-saving proposition?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. What is the request?

Mr. HAUGEN. For five legislative days for Members to extend their remarks. Only one hour has been given for debate, and it is fair to give Members the right to extend their remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman to make this specific—that these are to pertain only to the subject of the daylight-saving law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. AYRES. I object.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], a member of the committee.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have now under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, which covers something like 100 pages. However, in the present situation no attention is being paid to the important provisions of the measure and the necessity of speedy action on our part. With many Members the only question is the sending of this bill back to the President of the United States a second time, when it is sure again to be vetoed and result in still further delay and consequent hardship upon every employee of this great department of the Government.

Let me briefly recount the history of this legislation. Very soon after the convening of Congress in extra session we passed the Agricultural appropriation bill and sent it to the Senate. When we took the bill up for consideration in the House the Committee on Rules was appealed to and asked to give us a rule in order to make the repeal of the daylight-saving law in order upon the appropriation bill. The Committee on Agriculture was unanimous, with one exception, in asking for that rule. Now, what happened? The Committee on Rules refused the rule, and we had to pass the appropriation bill through the House without the daylight-saving repealing clause in it. The bill went to the Senate. There they inserted the repealing clause; it came back here, and we agreed to it. It then went to the President, and he vetoed it.

I yield to no man in my admiration of the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, and yet I feel that he made a mistake when he vetoed that provision of the Agricultural bill. In doing so, however, he acted wholly within his rights. When the bill came back with the veto message to the House, I voted to pass it over the President's veto, but we lacked a few votes of the necessary two-thirds and failed to pass it over his veto. The bill was then sent to the Committee on Agriculture. That committee now brings it here again to-day, with the recommendation concurred in by a majority that the bill again be passed and sent to the President with this repealing clause in it. There is not a gentleman in this House who is a thinking man but knows that when it reaches the President of the United States it will again be vetoed.

It is no light matter to veto a bill. No President of the United States is going to put his veto upon a measure without giving it his careful and candid consideration. We know that the President before he vetoed this bill did give the matter careful consideration, and you know and I know when it goes back to him it will mean another veto message and another delay in the passage of this measure. It is not necessary to do that. Three times this House has placed itself upon record in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law. You did it when you agreed to the conference report upon the Agricultural appropriation bill, you did it when you passed the Esch bill through this House as a separate measure, and you did it a few days ago when you voted by almost a two-thirds majority to pass this bill over the President's veto.

To-day in the other end of the Capitol there is the Esch bill, which was passed through this body by a vote of 244 to 133. That bill has been lying over there unacted upon for days and weeks. Why do not you gentlemen who are so anxious to put this up to the President a second time go over there and urge your friends upon the committee on that side to report out that bill? If you will do that, in 15 minutes it can be passed through that body and be sent to the President of the United States. I am in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law. I have voted for its repeal, I have voted to pass it over the President's veto, and should the Esch repeal bill be vetoed I will vote to pass that bill over the veto. I am unwilling to longer delay and hinder the passage of a great supply bill when this repeal can be accomplished in the regular way by the Senate passing the measure which has already been acted upon by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against the repeal of the daylight-saving law, and in doing so I voice the sentiments of more than 218,000 people whom I represent in the city of Baltimore. They have tried this law for a year. They find it beneficial. The school-teachers are in favor of it. I find there is a universal sentiment in the city of Baltimore against its repeal. I wish the bill which has been sent to the Senate could be considered by that body, so that the matter would be taken up in the proper way. I was talking to one of the men employed in the Agricultural Department yesterday. He told me that men there were borrowing money that they might live upon, and that they were unable, many of them, to go home on their vacations because they did not have money, and when they borrow this money he said they have to pay 10 per cent interest upon it. This matter ought to be taken up as an individual matter and not placed as a rider on the Agricultural appropriation bill. One of the speakers has just told us that there are 12,000,000 people engaged in the agricultural pursuits of the country and 27,000,000 people engaged in the industrial pursuits. Is not this great number of people, more than doubling the 12,000,000, entitled to some consideration in this matter?

Take the lives of those engaged in agricultural pursuits. They live in the fresh air and sunshine of the country, amid the trees and flowers and those things which make for health and comfort. Their life is one in the open fresh air and the beautiful sunshine—two ingredients which physicians tell us are more health-giving than all the medicines we could take. Their food is fresh from garden and field, and everything which Providence has provided is at their hand.

The 27,000,000 engaged in industrial pursuits are composed of men, women, and children crowded into the factories and shops of the great cities of the land, toiling behind the machines, sewing in the factories, and performing all the vast services required of them in their line of endeavor. Their life during working hours must necessarily be confined indoors in the crowded portions of our cities, where the heat of the day is reflected by brick and mortar, amid the close air of the factory, and the smoke coming from the great chimneys in their sections. Their only chance to get the fresh air, to enjoy free exercise and a bit of the country, is during their leisure hours when daylight makes it possible.

If you cut off the hour provided under the daylight-saving law in the afternoons they are deprived of just that much daylight in which to enjoy some of the blessings which the agricultural community enjoys all the time. To speak of the golf or tennis player is to speak of only an infinitesimal part of our city people. The men and the women enjoying this pursuit usually control their own time in which to take their exercise or to work; they are not confined to the long hours and the arduous work of those engaged in the industrial pursuits.

I speak for the laboring men, the women, and the children who find, by virtue of this law, they can get into the great parks and recreation centers of our cities to enjoy a little pleasure during daylight when their work has ended, the toiling masses of our people who are entitled to our attention. To go through my city after working hours one beholds in that section where live those engaged in these pursuits thousands of men, women, and children sitting upon the doorsteps, parading in the parks, playing baseball or some other game in which they are interested. It has meant much to these people, and to deprive them of it would be a great handicap.

I realize from what has been said that the farmer is somewhat inconvenienced by virtue of this law, but from my personal observation of the farmers of my State I can not see where it has been very harmful to them. Let them practice a little Christianity; let them remember their brethren engaged in the cities who are the purchasers and consumers of the products which they produce.

My city is largely engaged in canning enterprises, in the manufacture of many articles of clothing, ready-made and otherwise. When these factories or canning houses close in the evening one beholds thousands of the young boys and girls wending their way toward home. They have time under the present law for something to eat, and then they can make their way to the great parks, the river sides, and other places of amusement for recreation and fresh air.

I do hope nothing will be done to deprive them of this great blessing. If you must test the strength of Congress against the constitutional right of veto by the President, do not do it at the expense of the Agricultural bill as a rider. Let us not subject the employees of the Agricultural Department to delays and expense by not being able to pay them their money. There are thousands of these employees, many of them compelled to borrow money to live upon, some paying large percentage. Pass the Agricultural bill as an Agricultural bill, and let the Senate take up and consider and pass, if they will, the law which passed this House, repealing daylight saving, so that the question can go before the President purely upon its merits, and then if it is vetoed and the opposition wants to take the matter before the country in the next election, they will have a clear-cut case to present to the people.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that this daylight-repeal rider will not pass this House; that the President having expressed his opinion through his constitutional authority and having been sustained by a vote of this House, it will not be put up to him again in a similar bill in a similar manner, but individually as a separate and distinct proposition as provided in the bill I have mentioned.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LINTHICUM was granted the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to the daylight-saving law. My State was placed in a new zone, and therefore they ran the clock up two hours, and we are now practically sleeping in the daytime and working at night. My people are opposed to this law, but I do not believe in hypnotizing myself into believing we can secure the repeal of that law by a rider on this bill any more than I believed in hypnotizing myself into trying to believe that we were saving daylight. I shall therefore not vote for the proposition in connection with this bill. This great appropriation bill was held up until last Monday because of the President's veto, but since that time the delay has been caused by the committee. I voted to override the President's veto. I voted for the amendment to the Agricultural bill repealing the law. I voted for the bill repealing the daylight-saving law, which is now in the Senate of the United States, and I say to my friends on the Republican side, if they have hypnotized themselves to the extent of believing they are fooling the people of this country, I fear they will wake up to find out that they are mistaken. Gentlemen on the other side know they have a majority in the Senate. The people know you have a majority in the Senate, and they know that even before this bill was reported that the Senate of the United States, with or without the Democratic votes, could have repealed that law, and the bill dealing solely with daylight saving could have been sent to the President for his consideration.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. No; I can not yield, as I only have a few minutes. That would not have delayed this Agricultural appropriation bill, which should have already been passed so the Department of Agriculture and the work under it may be carried on throughout this country without further interruption. I believe the time has come when gentlemen in this House should try at least to rise above politics and meet the measurement of statesmen.

It is all right for you to play your little politics when you go home and try to fool the people, but the farmers of the country for whom you are so solicitous are reading the newspapers, and they know that the play you are pulling off here to-day is merely for political effect, mere buncombe, and it will not get you anywhere. What the people want is a repeal of the daylight-saving law, and I trust my good friends on the Republican side will be sincere, and that they will go to their colleagues at the other end of the Capitol and have them pass favorably upon the bill which we sent over to them.

As I said before, every chance I get to repeal the law I shall do so, except in this case, where I believe I would do more harm than good by voting to again place it as a rider upon this bill, knowing and believing as I do that the bill would again be vetoed and that it would be impossible to override the veto of the President of the United States, as shown by the vote the other day. Let us cease these political alignments and at least for a day legislate wisely.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think the President would veto this bill if it goes to him a second time?

Mr. SEARS. If the President was sincere in his first veto, and I believe he was, though I did not and do not agree with him, he will be false to himself if he does not veto it again if it includes the daylight-saving clause.

I desire simply to say further, Mr. Chairman, if the daylight-saving clause is permitted to remain in the bill, and it can only be permitted to remain in the bill for the purpose of embarrassing the President, those who are responsible can not escape the responsibility for any delay in the final passage of the bill.

I desire further to say I trust my Republican colleagues are sincere in their efforts to secure a repeal of the daylight-saving law, and, if they are, that they will see to it that the Senate passes the bill for that purpose which we passed and sent over there some time ago. I shall watch with a great deal of interest the final outcome and the fate of that bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, the President vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill because that bill carried a provision to repeal the daylight-saving law. A large majority, but less than two-thirds, of this House has voted to override that veto. The appropriation bill is again before Congress for consideration, and I am in favor of again writing into it the clause for repeal of the daylight-saving law. The short time allotted to me will not permit a lengthy analysis of the reasons why this obnoxious law should be repealed. Suffice it to say that an overwhelming majority of the people of my district and of the Nation at large demand its repeal. The parents of school children in town and country are against this law; the dairymen who are now selling their herds rather than stay up all night to prosecute their business are against it; the farmers with one accord are tired of it; 90 per cent of the population in whatever vocation are insisting that this law be stricken from our statutes. That sentiment is reflected here to-day from Democrats as well as Republicans.

You gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber concur with us in saying the daylight law is a bad one and ought to be repealed; yet you say our effort to repeal it in this particular bill is partisan politics. I deny the insinuation of any partisanship in this question. You admit that the law should be repealed, yet you say its repeal should be an independent measure. You say if we pass the present bill with provision for repealing the daylight-saving law the President again will veto it. But I say he is much less likely to again veto the Agricultural appropriation bill with its daylight-saving repeal than he would be to veto an independent daylight-saving repeal bill. We were unable to pass the old bill over his veto; so why should we hope for strength to pass an independent daylight-saving repeal over his veto?

Gentlemen, I put the proposition up to you as a matter of expediency. Let us stand for repeal in the Agricultural bill and put it squarely up to the President. Too much is at stake under these vast appropriations for him to hazard a second veto. One of the greatest divisions of our Government, a department far-reaching in its activities, is now paralyzed by reason of the recent veto. Can the President afford to prolong that disaster by another veto? I say he can not. I assert that at the time he wrote his veto message he was ill-advised as to true conditions. He stated in the message that the daylight-saving law had given "all but universal satisfaction." You Democrats who oppose us to-day concede that the President was misinformed when he wrote the text of that message. But still you say he would veto it again. In your zeal to protect the President from his manifest blunder, perhaps you are unfair to him in your estimate of his character. I have great respect for the office of President; and I have great respect for Mr. Wilson. I want to deal more fairly with him than do you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle.

Some excuse may be offered for the mistake he has made. For many months he has been away from America. Although most of us believed he should have been in Washington, where his official duties lay, he saw fit to spend his time abroad. I do not recall that fact for criticism, because he was following the line of duty as he saw it. But I do recall the fact in order that you may see how completely he was out of touch with the masses of people at home. He could not know how obnoxious and offensive the daylight-saving law had become. In the brief interval between his return from the royal courts of Europe and the assertion of his veto power he had no chance to inform himself about the views of our people on this important question. Moreover, in the abundance of his wisdom, the President is not prone to seek advice from smaller minds. I dare say no Democrat in this House had the chance to advise him with regard to public sentiment on this matter, and I am quite sure no Republican could do it. Therefore, it is not surprising that the President guessed wrong when he went in the face of public opinion in his veto statement ascribing universal popularity to the irksome, unwieldy daylight-saving law. But now he knows better. The newspapers have informed him. Democratic and Republican speeches printed in the RECORD from a Congress sent here by a wide-awake national constituency have informed him. Petitions numbered by multiplied thousands have informed him.

No Member on either side of this House will challenge my statement when I say that President Wilson knows to-day what the people of America think about the daylight-saving law.

Yet Democrats stand here and say he will again veto this bill if we seek to repeal the daylight-saving law. But I am unwilling to subscribe to that harsh view of the President. I should not like to believe, as the members of his party assume to believe, that the President would bow his neck in the stubborn pride of opinion and ride roughshod over the action of a Congress voicing the recognized public sentiment. Yet, if my charitable excuse for his veto blunder is not well founded, if he should persist in defying public judgment, then we have the right to know it.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask permission to extend the few remarks I made a while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the repeal of the daylight-saving law and see no reason at all to change my position. The daylight-saving law has been a piece of beneficent legislation to millions of American people. I voice the judgment of over 200,000 people of my district, a district made up of the working class, and I express the judgment of hundreds of thousands of the men and women in my city of every occupation and vocation when I say the daylight saving has contributed immeasurably to their comfort, their pleasure, and their happiness.

The increased hours of daylight made it possible for the people of my city—and I take it that it is so with the people of every other city and of the larger towns—to obtain a greater amount of outdoor enjoyment, a larger degree of convenience to have and enjoy the companionship of family and friends, and a broader opportunity for recreation than they had under the former time schedules. This has been conducive to better health, and it has made for the comfort and improvement of both mind and body. It has been the means of saving fuel and artificial light to a very large extent; and in these days of high and excessive cost of living it has aided in the savings of the middle and the poorer classes.

An amusing feature of the debates upon the law has been to hear Representatives of the farming districts vigorously appeal to the House as though the agricultural interests were exclusively to be considered and people engaged in industrial, commercial, manufacturing, and professional opportunities were deserving of no consideration at all. It was repeated again and again on the floor that those who opposed the provision to repeal were merely golf players and sought increased daylight for their own enjoyment. Those who thus spoke were either insincere in their unfounded and unjustified statements or else woefully ignorant of conditions of the masses outside of their rural environments.

In my insistence that the daylight-saving law be retained, I not only satisfy my own belief in the beneficial character of the law, but I am obedient to the demand of millions of toiling men and women, boys and girls, whom the increased hours of daylight, with all its opportunities and advantages, has brought much cheer and pleasure, better health and economic conditions.

The President in his wisdom, and in the exercise of his constitutional right, vetoed the Agricultural bill because of the rider that provided for the repeal of daylight saving. In his veto message he clearly stated his objections to the repeal. In the exercise of the duty and prerogatives of the House we took a vote on the question whether the bill should pass notwithstanding the President's objection, and the veto for want of a two-thirds vote was sustained. Why, then, try to foist this measure upon this House again? The attempt to coerce the President will not succeed, for were this repeal measure to be again passed by the House it would be met by another veto of the President. I have no patience with this effort to inject partisan politics or play the game of petty politics with so great a measure as is before us. The attempt now made to pass the repealing clause after the President's veto has been sustained is unfair to the President, and is making a mere football of this legislation. If it should pass, it will lead to an unjustified delay in making necessary appropriations for the payment of Government employees and meeting the expenses for conducting the Agricultural Department and its activities. For such delay those who now seek the repealing clause passed will be responsible.

I am not unmindful that much inconvenience may be caused to a great many people in the land due to the changed daylight schedule, but the greatest good is to be given to the greatest number, and viewing daylight saving as wholesome and salutary to the greatest number of the people, I oppose the repeal of the law.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOONEY] be recognized for one minute of the five allotted to me.

Mr. MOONEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is a very unusual situation in my city in regard to the matter under consideration. Cleveland, I think, was the first, certainly one of the first, cities to adopt the daylight-saving plan and it gave universal satisfaction, but shortly after the Nation followed our lead we were transferred from the central to eastern time zone. Under this arrangement we were really 1 hour and 40 minutes ahead of the sun, and following an ordinance by the city council the law has been disregarded.

It gave me pleasure to vote for the repeal of this law when our House bill was up for consideration. Later, when the Agricultural bill came back with Senate rider to repeal the law, although it seemed to me that this was no proper rider for an appropriation bill, I again voted for it, and still again when it came back vetoed by the President. I favored the repeal of daylight saving then and have not changed my position now; there is a bill for that purpose that has passed this House and is now pending in the Senate. I shall support that bill again should it come back to us. I do not understand why that course can not be followed by the friends of this repeal. It seems to me that there must be some purpose in adding this rider to an appropriation bill which does not appear upon the surface. The suspicion is present that some gentlemen who are confident that the President will again veto the entire bill seek to make it appear that he is responsible for delaying payment of salaries to employees in this department. With any such purpose I am not in sympathy; and for the reason that I feel, as the distinguished gentleman from Kansas says he does, that there should be no delay, I shall vote against the daylight rider in this bill, not because I do not want it repealed, for I do, but because I am unwilling to hamper this great department of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANDLER. The provision in this bill under consideration is the following:

> That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918, is hereby repealed, effective on the last Sunday of October, 1919, after the approval of this act, when by the retarding of one hour the standard time of each zone shall be returned to and thereafter be the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone as defined in section 1 of said act approved March 19, 1918.

Mr. Chairman, this provision, if passed, would only repeal one section—section 3—of the daylight-saving law. It would not repeal all of the law; only one section. I was one of only 40 Members in the House of Representatives who voted against the passage of the daylight-saving bill when it originally passed in the House. I voted to repeal it the first opportunity offered. I voted the other day to pass it over the President's veto. Certainly, then, my record so far as the repeal of the daylight-saving law is concerned is unquestioned and unquestionable. I am against the daylight-saving law and anxious to have it repealed, and being anxious to have it repealed I do not want to see it placed upon this great Agricultural appropriation bill which will force the President again to veto it as well as to veto again the whole Agricultural bill. Now, what is the situation? The repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law was placed as a rider in the Senate on the Agricultural bill and passed the Senate and then the House, and the President, because of that provision, vetoed the whole bill. An effort was made in the House to pass it over the President's veto, and it failed. What assurance have you if you retain this provision in this bill that the President will not again veto it? You have no assurance whatever that he will not veto it, but on the other hand you have every reason to believe he will again veto the whole bill. In fact you and I are practically certain he will again veto it. Then why willfully endanger all the appropriations for the great Agricultural Department when by pursuing a sensible and reasonable course we can promptly pass this bill and then secure the repeal of the daylight-saving law on its own merits, if we can secure its repeal at all.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. I am sorry I can not yield; I have not the time. Now, then, if this repeal provision is put upon this bill, if you will examine it, you will see it does not provide for the repeal of the daylight-saving law until the last Sunday in next October. I want to repeal it right now, to-day. You have plenty of time to pass a law to repeal it long before next October. You have got plenty of time. You appear very anxious to-day and show great apparent zeal to put this provision in this bill to repeal this law "next October," when you know it will defeat its repeal and defeat all the appropriations for the whole Agricultural Department. Are you willing to do that? I am not. [Applause.] Besides that, on the last Sunday in October the clocks will be turned back anyway and will not again be turned forward until March, 1920, under the present daylight-saving law as it is on the statute books. Therefore you will have from now until next October to repeal it and accomplish the same result, and not lose a minute of time, and in addition to that you will have six months after the 26th day of next October to repeal it and not take the slightest risk of defeating the Agricultural bill. Now, honestly, do you not believe that would be the safer and better course? Therefore your great anxiety to pass this provision in this bill for the repeal of this law next October, when under the present law the clocks will be turned back then anyway, does not seem to be genuine, but simply appears to be a disposition to play cheap peanut politics in reference to this bill and an effort to slap the President in the face, and if you do that I assure you that you will not secure the passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill or secure the repeal of the daylight-saving bill by any such unbecoming and unseemly tactics. [Applause.] You do not want either to pass the appropriation bill or repeal the daylight-saving law from the course you are pursuing, but to secure, if you can, some cheap political advantage, even at the expense of the general good, because you have every reason to believe the President will veto both again, and you can not pass the bill over his veto, because you have tried it and failed, and if you try it again you will fail again, and you know it. Then why try?

What is the becoming and sensible course to pursue? Eliminate this provision and pass this Agricultural appropriation bill without it, and you know the President will promptly sign it as soon as it reaches him, and the great Agricultural Department can resume its activities, which are now suspended and paralyzed. We have passed the bill repealing the daylight-saving law in the House of Representatives, and it is now pending in the Senate. You Republicans have a majority in the Senate as well as in the House. Let the Senate pass the daylight-repeal bill which has already passed the House and which I voted for, and send it to the President, and if he vetoes it I will vote to pass it over his veto. That is the orderly and becoming way to proceed to secure the passage of this Agricultural appropriation bill and to secure the repeal of the daylight-saving law. If both results can not be obtained in that way, they can not be obtained at all, and you must know it as well as I do. You are not deceiving yourselves, and you will not deceive the people, by your claptrap and apparent zeal when you must know you will only delay what the people desire, to wit, the repeal of the daylight-saving law and the passage of the Agricultural bill, if you persist in this course to include this provision as a rider on this bill. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS] said a little while ago, "Let us resort to some expediency." Well, all right; let us resort to some expediency right now and a little common sense as well and eliminate this provision from this bill and pass this Agricultural appropriation bill and secure the approval of it by the President of the United States, and put the Agriculture Department upon its feet again just as soon as possible, and then secure the passage of the bill repealing the daylight-saving law which a large majority in this House and in the Senate favor. If you are sincere, you will do that. If not, you will vote your peanut politics and not vote for the benefit of the Agriculture Department or for the best way to secure the repeal of the daylight-saving law or for the best interests of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. I thank you, gentlemen of the House, for your attention and leave the matter with you for your serious consideration and decision. [Applause.]

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman wish to extend on the remarks just made or extend his remarks upon another subject?

Mr. SEARS. On the remarks just made.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] suggested a few moments ago that we should put the proposition of repealing the daylight-saving law up to the Senate. "Passing the buck" seems to be the slogan on the Democratic side of the House.

Now, my friends, there is no politics in this issue whatever, notwithstanding the attempt on the part of several Democratic Members to give to it a political tinge. The quesion of repeal is purely economic. The people generally demand this legislation. It works a hardship on them as well as a financial loss, while only in a comparatively few instances would its repeal work a hardship in the cities.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] in his speech said that his constituents are practically a unit in demanding the repeal of daylight saving, and yet he is going to follow the President, who has set himself in opposition to the expressed wishes of a majority of the people. I ask you, is that representative government? Are we going to permit the President, who has been absent from this country for many months, and as a result of such absence has got out of touch with the American people to some extent, to dictate to this great legislative body as to what we are to do? Ah, my friends, if such is the case, the Congress of the United States has fallen upon evil days.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I can not yield to my good friend from Tennessee, for I have but a few minutes remaining.

My friends, there should be no politics in this question, and I am sorry that a large majority of the Democrats have seen fit to line up behind the President on this question, notwithstanding that many of them at heart favor the repeal. I would vote to repeal this law even though it had been vetoed by a President belonging to my own party, for I will not stifle my honest convictions at the behest of any individual; neither will I knowingly vote against the majority sentiment of the people back home, who have been so good to me in the past. We are not here to vote our own sentiments or convictions, but rather to vote and act as those whom we represent wish us to vote. That is my conception of popular government, and I will continue to make that my guiding principle.

This question has been discussed pro and con in Congress, so there is really nothing new that I can bring into the discussion. It is working a positive hardship upon the agricultural classes which is daily resulting in great financial loss. Under the new order our farmers can not get out in the hay and harvest fields until 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning because of the heavy dews, and the hired men in many instances insist on quitting at 6 o'clock so they can go to town. It means that our dairymen must commence milking at 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning. It means too long a day for the housewives both on the farms and in the cities. I have had scores of letters from women in my district asking me to work and vote for this repeal, and I submit that we must take the American mothers into consideration. The sacrifices they made in the late war are without parallel in the annals of history, and God forbid that the day will ever come when we shall turn a deaf ear to their pleadings.

Gentlemen of the committee, this is a burning issue with us. The folks back home are not talking "league of nations," but they are talking for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. With them it is a breathing, pulsating issue, for it affects them vitally. We ought to legislate according to their wishes and best interests and not according to whim and caprice of an individual who has assumed to tell us what we want and need. I, for one, will not take orders from the White House. Mine come from the sixth district in Minnesota. I know no boss save the people of my district. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this bill when it comes up for a vote if it contains this rider. I am opposed to any legislation which contains a rider which is being forced upon the people of this country. The President having vetoed the bill on account of that rider, his veto having been sustained by the House, this is no method to try to enact such legislation—by rider, the most reprehensible way of making laws.

The people in the large cities throughout the country—those who do the work—are in favor of the present daylight law; and yet some gentlemen coming from various parts of the country, who do not know the cities and do not know the people who live in them, say to you that 90 per cent of the people in those cities do not want the daylight-saving law. They are drawing very heavily upon their imaginations. It is the man who represents the city districts in the East who is closer to the people than the man who represents a country district. The reason for that is that the Representatives from the city districts get an opportunity of going back home and getting in closer touch with their people every week. They know that the working people of this country, including those who do occasionally play lawn tennis if they have the opportunity, are in favor of the daylight-saving law. Hundreds and thousands of employers and the leading newspapers of the country favor the daylight law. And I venture to say this, that the President of the United States has sufficient strength and determination of will to veto this bill again if it comes to him containing this rider. And I will say also that the American people will sustain the President in that view and in that action. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, this situation confronts the House: The daylight-saving repeal has passed this House three times by an overwhelming majority. This House voted the other day on the veto message by an overwhelming majority against the daylight-saving bill. No Member of this House has had his mind changed by the President's veto.

Every Democrat claims that nothing the President has said in his veto message has changed his mind. The President gave no new reasons or arguments to sustain his veto of the bill. On the one hand you have this condition in the country: A corporation called the "Daylight Saving Association," organized in the city of New York, made up of the club and sporting element, has been sending propaganda to all the chambers of commerce in the large cities saying, "Have your secretary send a telegram to your Senators and your Congressman to vote to sustain the President's veto of the daylight-saving bill." That is all you have on one side. On the other side you have the united farmers of this Nation demanding that you keep faith with them and repeal this war-time measure.

This daylight-saving bill is a war measure pure and simple. You never could have enacted it without making it a war measure. You know you could not. You said to the farmers that when the armistice came, when war ceased, you would repeal the law. Now you are refusing to do it. The President is refusing to keep faith with the farmers of this Nation.

Prior to our entrance into the war with Germany and the enactment of this war legislation called daylight saving, the people of this Nation had never had any trouble or inconvenience in adapting their pleasures and their business to the clock—the time as regulated and used for 100 years.

It was thought necessary during the war to use great bodies of workingmen in Government industries for the production of war material and to use further all the hours of daylight upon the farm in the production of food products, and the people were called upon everywhere to make special sacrifices during the war that the armies might be trained, clothed, and fed.

Right after the declaration of war, on the 15th day of April, 1917, the President issued his appeal to the people of this country and made this special appeal to the farmers of this Nation:

> I take the liberty, therefore, of addressing this word to the farmers of the country and to all who work on the farms: The supreme need of our own Nation and of the nations with which we are cooperating is an abundance of supplies. A food supply, especially for the present year, is superlative.
> Without abundant food, alike for the armies and the peoples at war, the whole great enterprise upon which we have embarked will break down and fail. The world's food reserves are low. Not only during the present emergency, but for some time after peace shall have come, both our own people and a large proportion of the people of Europe must rely upon the harvests in America.

Upon the farmers of the country, therefore, in large measure rests the fate of the war and the fate of the nations. May the Nation not count upon them to omit no step that will increase the production of their land or that will bring about the most effectual cooperation in the sale and distribution of their products? The time is short.

It is of the most imperative importance that everything possible be done, and done immediately, to make sure of large harvests. I call upon young men and old alike and upon the able-bodied boys of the land to accept and act upon this duty—to turn in hosts to the farms and make certain that no pains and no labor is lacking in this great matter.

This appeal was followed by this daylight-saving bill as a war measure, and while it met with much bitter opposition from the farmers they finally withdrew that opposition under the assurance from Congress and the President that when the war was over the law should be repealed.

The present Agricultural bill, the first of its kind enacted after the war, carried the repeal of the daylight-saving law. It passed both Houses of Congress with scarcely no opposition whatever and went to the President for his approval. The President, without giving any new reasons whatever for the repeal, vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill on July 11, and the House on July 14 by a vote of 248 to 135 said that the President was wrong and that his veto did not meet the approval of Congress, but they lacked 8 votes of having the necessary two-thirds to override the veto.

It has been many years since any question has so aroused the farmers of this Nation as has this veto, which has disregarded the rights of those whom the President called upon to help win the war by making every sacrifice.

The farmers of this Nation did make to the very limit the supreme sacrifice. They gave first their sons from nearly every farm, depriving themselves in many cases of sufficient help, and forced the wife and mother, the daughters and little children, to labor in the fields to take the place of the boys who had gone overseas. They labored through every hour of daylight and far into the night to produce food for the Nation and the world. They submitted to extortionate freight rates under Government control of railroads. They obeyed all the war-time rules and regulations of the Food Administration. They saved the Nation and the world in its time of stress and peril, and now when they desire above all things to get back to normal conditions and conduct their farms and business in their own way the President by this veto disregards their rights and ridicules their every protest.

When the brewers and saloon keepers of the Nation appealed to the President to repeal war-time prohibition he sends a message to Congress saying:

The demobilization of the military forces of the country has progressed to such a point that it seems to me entirely safe now to remove the ban upon the manufacture and sale of wines and beers, but I am advised that without further legislation I have not the legal authority to remove the present restrictions. I therefore recommend that the act approved November 21, 1918, entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products,' and for other purposes," be amended or repealed in so far as it applies to wines and beers.

The petitions and prayers of the united farmers of the country must be disregarded while the President is fighting to save the brewery and the saloon.

I am aware that in the past the politicians have considered the vote of the farmers of the country "not worth the powder." They have all professed to be friends of the farmer except when it comes to legislation for his benefit. They are ever ready and willing to flatter the farmers in the press and on the stump and to "farm the farmer" as an easy mark for votes. But that day has gone, and everywhere, in every State of the Union, the farmers to-day are organizing for their mutual benefit. They are forming societies, unions, and organizations to protect the interests of the farm in matters of politics and legislation. The farmer has determined to be no longer ridiculed and disregarded. His rights are as sacred as those of socialistic organizations which inscribe upon their banners "No beer no work." They will be heard. The Members of this Congress who voted to sustain the President in this disregard of the rights of the farmers will find at the next election that they will be disregarded by the farmers of the Nation. Let us have a roll call and put on record those who have not the courage to stand by their own judgment and who refuse to keep faith with the farmers of the Nation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this one minute in order to present a city man's view with regard to the question of daylight saving. We are in favor of the daylight-saving law as it now stands. Many of us voted to support the President's veto. I was one of those. This matter has now come to the committee and to the House, however, in such form that those of us who desire to vote to sustain daylight saving as it now exists may have an opportunity to do so. Some gentlemen misunderstood this rule. It was brought in unquestionably in response to the demands of the farmer constituency, and perhaps of the larger number of those who vote on the Republican side of this House. I am always in favor of reaching the point on a question like this—we are dealing with an appropriation bill—and for that reason voted for the rule, but I reserved to myself the right, which I still reserve, when the opportunity comes, as I expect it will come, to vote for the continuance of the daylight saving as we now have it. And I wish to assure our friends from the city districts that that opportunity will come to-day, and we will have a square vote on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to add my approval to what has already been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I voted for the rule for the same reason as did the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with the express and distinct understanding that opportunity would again be given to vote directly upon the section relating to daylight saving.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have not said a word on this floor since the passage of the Indian appropriation bill. I have heard considerable discussion here about the people in the cities favoring the continuance of the daylight-saving act. I represent a district which is very largely industrial, but we have in addition varied agricultural interests. I have made a very careful canvass of my district on this question, and I find that the statements of gentlemen who are saying here that the majority of the people in the cities favor the act are borne out by the information that I get from my district. But I think a majority of the people of my district favor the repeal of the act. I voted the other day to pass the measure over the President's veto. I shall be glad to vote again to-day in the interest of the repeal of the act, believing that I am representing a very large percentage of the sentiment in my own district and a very large percentage of the sentiment of the people throughout the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, sometime ago we passed through this House a bill repealing the daylight-saving law by an overwhelming majority, and sent it to the Senate. About that time the Senate placed a rider on the Agricultural bill repealing the daylight-saving law, and it was agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses.

The President vetoed this bill because of the provision repealing the daylight-saving law. The veto was sustained in the House for the reason that it did not receive a two-thirds vote.

I voted against the daylight-saving law at the last session of Congress when it was passed. I voted at this session to repeal it and also voted to pass it over the President's veto. The President was within his rights when he vetoed the bill. We who voted to pass it over his veto were within our rights.

The Agricultural appropriation bill which we passed through the House is now in the Senate, and if passed by that body will be approved by the President. The Senate could also repeal the daylight-saving law by adopting the bill which we passed in the House as a separate measure and it could go to the President again in this way. But instead of having that course pursued the Republican majority in the House, for the purpose no doubt of trying to embarrass the President, has reported another Agricultural bill with this rider, knowing that if it is passed and sent to the White House again in the same form it will be vetoed. It looks like small politics on the part of the Republican majority. The President was no doubt willing to assume the responsibility for the little delay caused by his veto, but if this bill is sent back to him again in the same form they will be responsible for the further delay in the passage of this appropriation bill. The great Agricultural Department has been very much embarrassed since the 15th of this month on account of this annual appropriation bill not having passed. The thousands of employees of this department, I am told, are borrowing money and paying 10 per cent interest because they could not be paid their last pay checks.

The repeal of the daylight-saving law would not take effect if passed until next March, so there is plenty of time to consider its passage. Under these circumstances it should not have been placed as a rider in this bill and should be stricken out when the bill is reached for amendments, and I have no doubt but that it will be.

I am as much in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law as any Member of this House, but I am not in favor of delaying the passage of this appropriation bill carrying more than $33,000,000 when it will in no way aid in the repeal of the daylight-saving law. Further delay in the passage of this bill will paralyze the activities of the Agricultural Department, and it will be no credit to Congress to send back this identical bill to the President which he has vetoed, and it seems to me that it is offered for no other purpose than to try to embarrass the President, and is very small politics to say the least of it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, what the farmers and laborers and merchants and bankers and doctors and lawyers and preachers and all the people in my district want is the repeal of this law, and they do not want any excuse for not repealing it. [Applause.]

My colleagues who do not vote to repeal this law can live until doomsday, and yet they can never properly explain to the people their action for not voting to repeal something that the people do not want. [Applause.]

I am going to vote to repeal this law, even though the President is in favor of it. During the war I sustained and backed up the President by voting for every single thing he requested, but the war is over now, and I am now going to reassume the full duties, functions, and responsibilities of a representative of the people. The President exercises one responsibility—that of the Chief Executive—while I am expected to exercise another—the legislative capacity of a Representative of the people in Congress to carry out their will and desire, and this I am going to do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I object except as to those who have actually spoken on the bill. I object to those extending remarks who have not spoken on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, everybody who was in the last Congress knows that I have played no politics on this question. A bill came from the Senate, introduced by a Republican, by Senator CALDER, and although I was then chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and could have introduced a bill of my own had I so desired, I would not ask the committee to report it, but asked the committee to report the bill introduced by Senator CALDER, a Republican. That bill was reported and passed this House. I made every effort, even when I was scarcely able to stand on my feet, to secure consideration of it in the House, and when it was passed only 40 votes were registered against the bill, and of those 40, 36 were Democrats and 4 were Republicans.

Now, when the bill for repeal was reported from the committee of which I still have the honor to be a member I never mentioned politics in relation to it, and it was passed by a vote of 232 to 122. It was moved in the Senate to suspend the rules and make the repeal bill in order on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and only five or six votes were finally cast against it. It came back here and was agreed to in conference. It was sent to the White House and vetoed, but without my advice.

Are you gentlemen opposed to the repeal of the daylight-saving law, except by a rider on an appropriation bill? Those opposed to the daylight-saving law have almost unlimited strength in the other body, and can pass the bill that we passed; they may be able to pass it by a two-thirds vote. But some gentlemen in here are playing politics of an inconceivably small and contemptible variety, which is demonstrated by the fact that you are trying to force the President to veto this bill again. If you pass this bill with the repeal of the daylight saving in it, he will probably veto it again, and we will sustain his veto again and put the responsibility where it belongs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the situation as it presents itself to the committee is this: Some weeks ago, when the Agricultural appropriation bill was about to be considered in this House, an effort was made to induce the Committee on Rules to present a rule making this amendment in order on that appropriation bill. The Committee on Rules, under the very able management of the distinguished Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at the present moment, for some reason or other refused to allow that rule. The Agricultural appropriation bill passed the House and went to the Senate, and the Senate attached an amendment to it repealing the daylight-saving law. That bill came back to the House from conference, and the conference report was agreed to, including the repeal of the daylight-saving law. It was sent to the President with that feature in it. The President, exercising his constitutional right, vetoed that bill, and sent it back to the House. The House sustained the President's veto, although a majority of the House, it is only fair to say, did not vote to sustain the veto.

As soon as it became apparent that under the peculiar circumstances there might be found a method of embarrassing the President of the United States and subjecting him to criticism upon what I conceive to be more or less a comparatively inconsequential proposition, there seems to have been no trouble whatever in inducing the Committee on Rules, which of necessity is the political committee in this body, to report out a rule to this House to-day making in order this proposition, although they would not give it to us before.

Anyone who knows the President of the United States, who has ever looked into his cold, gray eyes, is well aware of the fact that while the provision in this bill differs slightly from the provision sent to him before, when this bill reaches him he will veto it again upon the ground set forth in his former veto message. Now, I am in favor of the repeal of this daylight-saving law myself, and introduced a bill since the signing of the armistice to repeal it. I am in favor of it because I think a majority of the people whom I have the honor to represent in this body desire to have it repealed; but I do not feel that as a sensible man dealing with a situation, dealing with a fact and not a theory, I should stand here and play the childish rôle of doing something that I know we will have to do over again. Therefore I shall vote to strike this out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, our Democratic friends declare themselves in favor of a measure and then declare that they are going to vote against it.

The bill gives an opportunity to again show whether you are for or against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving act. Its history and faults are well known. When the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration in the House the first of this session, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I offered an amendment to the bill repealing the entire so-called daylight-saving act. A point of order was made against the amendment and sustained.

The Senate inserted the repeal in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and the House, having already passed a separate measure repealing section 3 of the daylight-saving act by a vote of 232 to 122, concurred in the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill containing the repeal of the entire act referred to, with little discussion and without a dissenting vote.

The Agricultural appropriation bill was vetoed by the President because it contained the repeal of the daylight-saving act. The House voted 248 to 135 to pass the measure over the President's veto—nearly the necessary two-thirds vote.

In view of the sentiment shown in the House by the votes, the hardship imposed by section 3 of the daylight-saving act, especially upon the farmers, the inconvenience and expense caused in general, the sentiment expressed in numerous resolutions, petitions, and communications addressed to Congress urging its repeal, a majority of the committee again recommended the repeal of section 3 of the daylight-saving act, which section provides that the standard time of each zone shall be advanced one hour during the seven summer months. This would not affect the other sections of the act, which provide for the establishment of standard time and zones and authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to define such zones. In other words, it would simply repeal the daylight-saving provision of the act, and is identical with the amendment which I offered to the Agricultural appropriation bill and to the repeal passed by the House June 18 by a vote of 232 to 122.

In view of the above I, as chairman of the committee, reported the Agricultural appropriation bill, containing the repeal, and requested the Committee on Rules to report a rule making the entire bill in order for immediate consideration so as to expedite its passage. The rule has been reported. The previous question has been ordered. Your opportunity is here. Will you vote for the repeal or will you turn it down? You can not get away from it, gentlemen. You can not deceive the farmers; you can not deceive anybody by the statement that you were for the repeal but voted against it.

All sorts of excuses have been offered for voting against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving act, against the previous question on the rule, and against the main question—the repeal of the act. One excuse advanced by Democratic friends is that this side is playing politics. I assume that every Member will vote his honest convictions in accord with the best interest and the desire of those whom he represents. The contention is that the people in the cities are opposed to the repeal and the people in the country, especially the farmers, are for the repeal. If so, I take it that Members will vote on the question as they have done heretofore. City Members will vote against the repeal and Members representing agricultural districts will vote for the repeal. What is the situation? The Republicans, the majority, are responsible for legislation. The President vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill because of the clause contained in the bill repealing the daylight-saving act. The department is without legal authority to continue its activities. Not one dollar can be legally expended outside of the permanent annual appropriations. Many employees are without funds to meet their obligations, without money to pay their rent. Instead of making payments on bonds subscribed for they are being compelled to dispose of them at a sacrifice. Everybody knows, every Democratic Member of this House knows, that the plan suggested to reinsert the repeal in the Agricultural appropriation bill is the only one that will expedite the passage of the bill. The proposition is not to obligate anybody to vote for the repeal but to give every Member of this House an opportunity to again vote upon the question, not to vote for or against it but to vote as he pleases.

Now, a word as to the political phase of it. No reference as to what took place in the committee is proper or in order, but the vote just taken upon the previous question on the rule to make the provision for the repeal of the daylight-saving act in order was a test. This is, as before stated, under the rules of the House, the only way in which a vote can be had upon the proposition. The RECORD will show the fact that every one of the 12 Republican members of the Agricultural Committee voting voted for the previous question, and that every one of the 7 Democratic members voting voted against it; that every one of the 7 Republican members of the Rules Committee voting voted "aye," and that every one of the 4 Democratic members of that committee voting voted "no." So here we have, at least, from the members of the two committees having jurisdiction over the matter an expression as to whether the House shall be given an opportunity to vote upon the question. The RECORD will show a solid Republican vote for and a solid Democratic vote against it. Judging by the vote and by what has taken place here to-day, it is safe to say that, possibly with one exception, every Democratic member of the two committees voting will record his vote against the repeal provision, so if our Democratic friends raise the issue, if it is any consolation or advantage to them, the RECORD will tell the story. As far as I am concerned, I am satisfied to stand by the RECORD and accept the challenge. Now that you have raised the issue, it will not be for my Democratic friends who are doing everything in their power to defeat the repeal of the daylight-saving act, who are not even willing to permit a vote upon the proposition, to say that you were for it. No! The day has passed when campaign promises and the throwing of a few bouquets to the voter just before election will be acceptable. The voter will hold you to your campaign promises. He will hold that "actions speak louder than words." With the President's veto and the record made here it will not do for any Democratic Member to say to his farmer constituent, who will be compelled to light his lantern, or to stumble around in the dark, in order to do his chores, milk his cows, swill his hogs, and care for and hitch his team in time to take his children to school at 8 o'clock sun time instead of 9 o'clock, that he was for the repeal but voted against it.

The farmer will not accept it. Nor will the employees in the department, in the factory, in the mill, or on the railroads, nor the mothers and children who, in order to get their required rest and sleep, are compelled to go to bed one hour earlier, which is especially undesirable during the summer months, when, owing to the intense heat, it is impossible for them to sleep the first hours of the night, and who are thus deprived of an hour of beneficial rest. Parents and teachers report that a large number of children have failed this year in their studies, due largely to loss of sleep. All agree that refreshing sleep is invigorating to both mind and body, and is as necessary and conducive to health and longevity as food.

If the act can not be repealed, the title of the act, in order to comply with the schedule fixed therein, should at least be changed from "An act to save daylight" to read "An act to compel the housewife to prepare the evening meal in the heat of the middle of the afternoon; the suitor to court his sweetheart in the daylight; the laborer, after his evening meal, to sit on the porch in the heat of the summer and swat flies, go to bed while it is still light, roll around an hour or two in the early part of the hot summer evening, and later be called by the alarm clock in the cool, refreshing hours of the morning; the farmer to stack and thrash his grain wet with the morning dew—not to conserve or increase but to curtail production, to increase the high cost of living, and to do foolish and uncalled-for things too numerous to mention." Why this absurdity? If there is any advantage in advancing the clock, why not improve upon it by advancing it an hour or two more, so that, as suggested, we may eat our evening meal at noon, and then have an opportunity to attend the ball game and matinees?

Why deprive 100,000,000 people of sleep at the proper and God-appointed time in order to give the golf player that extra hour on the golf links and accommodate a few who desire to work on the earlier schedule? Everybody knows no legislation is required to change their schedules. If a change is desired by them, all that is necessary is for the employer and employee to agree to make the change.

What unpardonable sin have the people in the country committed that warrants the discrimination? Have they not done their part? We were at war. The world was short of food. The winning of the war depended upon food as much as upon any other thing. Congress found it necessary to fix the price of wheat at half the price the farmer would have received if the law of supply and demand had not been interfered with. He gave his sons to the Army; his wife and daughters took his sons' place in back of the plow. He bought bonds, he gave to the Red Cross and Young Men's Christian Association. Invariably his hired help quit work at the usual time by the clock, which was an hour early as a result of this unjust and uncalled-for law, and interfering with the law of nature on the farm.

The act not only costs the farmer millions of dollars annually, but curtails production, and thus adds to the already high cost of living to millions of consumers. We have 6,000,000 farmers and 6,000,000 laborers employed on the farm. One hour lost each morning, owing to the dew, to each of the 12,000,000 on the farm is equal to 12,000,000 hours, which is equivalent to 1,500,000 eight-hour days, and that, at a wage of $4 a day, amounts to $6,000,000 loss to those on the farm daily at least for every day during the several weeks of haying, harvesting, and thrashing that this absurd law is in effect. In addition, the farmer was compelled to pay millions of dollars additional transportation charges. On the other hand, the millers, the packers, the steel trust, and various other enterprises were put under Government control, either through the license system or by voluntary arrangements. Many contend that the licensing system should be continued, especially as to the packers and other big interests. Railroads were taken over and granted hundreds of millions of dollars compensation in excess of a fair and reasonable compensation. What happened to the millers, the packers, and others under Government control? Millers were permitted to increase their operating profits 175 per cent and on their capital invested 100 per cent.

According to the Federal Trade Commission's report as printed in Senate Document No. 248, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, page 7:

Five meat packers, Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy, and their subsidiaries and affiliated companies have monopolistic control of the meat industry and are reaching for like domination in other products. Their manipulations of the market embrace every device that is useful to them, without regard to law. Their reward, expressed in terms of profit, reveals that four of these concerns have pocketed in 1915, 1916, and 1917 $140,000,000.

On page 14 it states that "of this astounding figure $121,000,000 represents excess over their prewar profits." On page 15, tanners are reported to have increased their profits from $644,390.90 in 1914 to $3,576,544.27 in 1916. On page 14 it reports the profit made by Morris & Co. for the fiscal year ending November 1, 1917, as 263.7 per cent on the $3,000,000 capital stock outstanding. On page 9 the steel corporation is reported to have increased its profit of $46,520,407 in 1914 to $478,204,343 in 1917, or about 1,000 per cent. Much of these excess profits at the expense of the farmers, who were greatly inconvenienced by this unjust law.

The farmer submitted to all of it. With lantern in hand he started out one hour early; his good wife and sweet daughter helped milk the cows and swill the pigs; his daughter ran the binder; his wife helped shock the grain; and he produced 917,000,000 bushels of wheat—about one-third of the wheat production in all the world. He brought in to market every bushel he could spare at the price fixed by Congress, or at half price. If he did not bring it in, the Government made him, or had some one bring it for him. He produced 5,600,000,000 bushels of cereals—about one-third of the world's production of cereal. The number of head of cattle was increased to 43,000,000; swine to 71,000,000; sheep to 49,000,000; meat, pork, and mutton was increased to nineteen and one-half billion pounds.

Notwithstanding the discrimination and the sacrifices made, will you who vote against the repeal say to your farmer constituent, "I, as your friend and Representative, voted to continue the burden, the discrimination, so that the joy rider, the city chap, might spend an additional hour on the golf links"? Will you say to him, "My vote is recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD July 18; I stand upon my record; I renew all my previous campaign promises and assure you, as I have in the past, of my sincere affection for you and a deep interest in your welfare"? Will you who voted against the repeal say, "You have accepted my promises in the past and have so generously given me your loyal support, if I merit your confidence and a continuance of your support, as a reward for what I have done for you in this matter, kindly continue to rise earlier, forget the President's veto, my vote against the repeal of the daylight-saving law, and vote for me"? According to the sentiment expressed by the hundreds of thousands in communications received, the indications are that he is not likely to forget.

One reason given in the veto message for the vetoing of the repeal of the daylight-saving act is "that in other countries similar legislation has resulted in substantial economy." Society has fallen into the practice of patterning their dress after Paris fashions. Others buy goods made in foreign countries. Has it come to this, that our laws, too, must be patterned after European law?

Another contention is, now that the President has vetoed the bill, there is nothing left for Congress to do but to pass it as it comes back to us. I concede the President's right to veto bills, but I still reserve the right to vote as my conscience dictates. It can never be charged that I am a "rubber-stamp" Congressman. To the contrary, I have always contended against autocracy in this country. Thousands of lives have been sacrificed, hospitals are filled with maimed and wounded, millions of dollars have been spent and millions more will be required to cancel the debt—all to stamp out autocracy across the seas. Our forefathers fought and died that there might be freedom of thought, action, and personal independence. Shall autocracy be tolerated here, or even suggested? Shall it all have been in vain?

I have always supposed that the declaration that this is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people meant just what it implies—a representative form and not a one-man government. With all due respect to those who believe in the concentration of power, who believe that the interests of the people can best be served thereby, I am absolutely opposed to the concentration of legislative power in one man. Mind you, there can be no curtailment of a Member's right and personal independence without invading the rights of the people whom he represents. I believe it is our duty to assert our own right as well as the rights of those whom we represent and to shun unbecoming, unstatesmanlike, and un-American practice. Let us do our sworn duty, vote as our conscience dictates, and assert our rights granted under the Constitution.

I have a right to exercise the privilege of voting for or against the repeal at this time. I propose to exercise it. I do not concede you the right to say that you are for the measure and then do everything you can to defeat it, everything you can to delay action, giving as an excuse that the President has vetoed it and that you must now take his order as it comes.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. SEARS. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, having the responsibility upon you for this legislation, if the President should veto it again, then what would you do?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will continue to do my duty as I see it, to expedite the consideration of this legislation. Much has been said about the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules is responsible to the party for legislation. In order that the passage of the bill might be expedited and that every Member of the House might be given an opportunity to vote upon this all-important question, the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I requested a rule, and the rule is here. Every vote cast against the rule on that side has been a vote not only to delay the passage of the bill but to defeat it.

The question of repealing the so-called daylight-saving law has been discussed and voted upon first when it passed the House as a separate measure by a vote of 232 for and only 122 against the repeal; second, on the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill without a dissenting vote; third, against sustaining the President's veto by almost a two-thirds vote, or 248 to 135.

In view of that I shall not take up further time, except to avail myself of the privilege granted me to extend my remarks by appending telegrams and extracts from communications just received.

One from the chamber of commerce of the capital of my home State, which goes to show that not only the farmers but practically all the people of Iowa are for its repeal:

Good luck to you in your protest against daylight savings. You not only have backing of agriculture and labor but some large organizations. You can't change the law of nature by a statutory law. This best argument against daylight savings.

One from New York State Dairymen's Association:

The dairymen, forming the largest industry in New York, demand the repeal of the daylight-saving law.

One from the Southern Ruralist, Atlanta:

Disappointed at not seeing you yesterday. Wish to assure you farmers of South are almost unanimous in favor of repeal of daylight-saving law. Believe measure and President should have another chance. Industrial interests can adjust themselves to statute law. Farm operations are inevitably controlled by natural law. Farmers have suffered seriously under present law as war measure, and in justice now demand repeal.

One from an Iowa minister:

I notice, with intense regret and chagrin, that Mr. Wilson vetoed the Agricultural bill, in his eagerness to retain the daylight-saving bill. Is it possible that he is to be supreme dictator of our Nation, regardless of the will of the people? Is he going to continue to make a football of Congress? Truly his head must have been turned by the flattery of Europe, that he defies our lawmaking body and aspires to usurp the legislative, judicial, and executive prerogatives of our land. The champion of beer, the peace advocate, and now catering to a few idle rich in the matter of the daylight-saving law. He totally ignores the farmer and the majority millions who proclaim daylight-saving matter a rank fake, dividing country and town and literally ruining the work of the church. Are not our laws to be based upon the "consent of the governed?"

He would imperil the Nation and agriculture, the very heart of the Nation, to satisfy the whim of the idle rich. Put the matter to a universal vote, if necessary, and put up a death struggle to repass it. The principle of all government is involved in this matter. Write the ministers of America; they know the sentiment of their people. He has thrown down the gantlet, now let the Republican Party rise up in its might and put this thing across and also sweep the Nation for a new and a Republican President.

The Nation will be behind you. Millions are tired of one-man rule.

One from a professor at Mercer University, Macon, Ga.:

I am writing to commend you for the renewal of the fight for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. I feel that you will be more successful this time.

A large majority uncomplainingly accepted the law as a temporary war measure, believing that it would be promptly repealed after the close of the war. Hence we are well-nigh astounded that President Wilson should by his veto undertake to make permanent this temporary war measure over the wishes of about two-thirds of his people.

Here in Macon churches have changed services from 11 to 12 a. m. and 8 to 9 p. m.; banks have changed opening hours from 9 to 10 a. m.; schools and colleges have also made changes in opening hours, but have failed to satisfactorily adjust matters.

One from the Public School Teachers' Club, New Brunswick, N. J.:

For some unaccountable reason the public press is advocating putting the clocks one hour ahead of honest time. We teachers know that it is undesirable for the pupils and teachers in our public schools, for the children in the elementary grades particularly. Please do what you can to get us honest time all the year round.

About a month ago the National Federation of Labor Unions, at its annual convention held at Atlantic City, N. J., passed a resolution by a large majority condemning this "daylight-saving law." Scores of mothers have told me that all the potentates on earth can not make their children go to sleep an hour earlier than honest time, but it would seem that the law of "the majority rules" does not work in this case. The advocates of this daylight saving seem to think it is more important to conserve money than to conserve nervous energy. This Republic is dependent upon the welfare of the rising generation. The children need the regular hours of sleep. May you be successful in your efforts to secure honest time for the children and workers of the United States.

Three from the National Grange, Washington, D. C.:

JUNE 7, 1919.

The National Grange, representing more than a million producing farmers, has asked the Congress of the United States to repeal the so-called daylight-saving law.

All agricultural organizations are united in demanding the repeal of this measure, which has caused hardship to all workers, farm workers in particular, every day since it went into effect.

JULY 14, 1919.

In voting to repeal the daylight-saving act Congress met the wishes and had the approval of the farmers of the United States as expressed through their principal organizations, including the National Grange and the National Board of Farm Organizations, the latter including as constituent members the National Farmers' Union, the National Milk Producers' Federation, and others.

All of these combined represent the organized farmers of America.

Such daylight-saving act has resulted in a distinct and material loss to farmers, which loss is reflected in both increased cost to consumers and decreased production. No sufficient reason has been advanced for such a change in the custom of generations.

We urge its repeal.

JULY 17, 1919.

The fight for the repeal of the daylight-saving law has not been abandoned, in spite of the President's veto and the failure by a few votes of the House to override it.

President Wilson has been in Paris, busy and out of touch with the real sentiment of the American people. He is hearing things from the farmers and their representatives just now. He will continue to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Farm Management: One chief of office, $5,000; 1 assistant to the chief, $2,520; 1 executive assistant, $2,250; 2 clerks, class 4; 2 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, class 2; 8 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,100 each; 4 clerks, at $1,080 each; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,020; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; 18 clerks, at $900 each; 6 clerks or map tracers, at $840 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $720; 1 messenger boy, $660; 3 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 charwoman, $480; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; 1 library assistant, $1,440; one library assistant, $900; one photographer, $1,400; 1 cartographer, $1,500; 1 draftsman, $1,440; 1 draftsman, $1,200; 2 draftsmen, at $900 each; in all, $84,430.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Under the rule, as I understand it, no section of this bill is open to amendment except the last one.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. WINGO. The statement has been made to the House that the bill is the same as that which was agreed to in conference. How are we going to correct it where we find that the bill is not the same, and where one matter is entirely left out? How is the House going to correct it under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. On the face of the bill——

Mr. WINGO. To give a concrete illustration, the "soft pork" proposition is entirely left out of this bill. When the conference report came in the gentleman from Iowa gave me assurances that it was taken care of, by reducing the item of $40,000 provided by the Senate amendment to $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WINGO. How are you going to reach that?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in the bill. There is a proposition in the bill to cover that. I refer the gentleman to the gentleman on that side who is responsible for the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. There is no "soft pork" item in this bill. Either the gentleman was incorrect in the assurances he gave me or else he is mistaken now.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inspection and quarantine work, including all necessary expenses for the eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle, the inspection of southern cattle, the supervision of the transportation of live stock and the inspection of vessels, the execution of the 28-hour law, the inspection and quarantine of imported animals, including the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations and repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to buildings thereon, the inspection work relative to the existence of contagious diseases, and the mallein testing of animals, $525,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the daylight-saving item. When will be the proper time?

The CHAIRMAN. When that paragraph is reached, such a motion will be in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was not here when the rule was read. I have been advised that the reading of the bill should first be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry, discussion on this item and amendments thereto will be in order when that item is reached in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918, is hereby repealed, effective on the last Sunday of October, 1919, after the approval of this act, when by the retarding of one hour the standard time of each zone shall be returned to and thereafter be the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone as defined in section 1 of said act approved March 19, 1918.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 102, line 8, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this amendment would mean the elimination from the bill of the daylight-saving repealer. I am offering it at this time for the purpose of giving to those who desire to retain the existing law upon the statute books an opportunity to vote. I am quite sure that our friends from the country, who are enthusiastic for the passage of the repealer, will give to those of us who come from other geographical sections and who are in favor of daylight saving an opportunity to express ourselves at this time. I do not object to the appeal coming up from the farming sections of the country, where they seem to think that the daylight-saving law has worked an injustice to them. That is not so much a political question as it is a question of environment. But I assume that our friends from the farming districts, who are always strong and potential in this House, will give to those of us who come from congested centers, who know something about the value of time, who appreciate a little extra daylight and an opportunity to use it, a chance to express ourselves in like manner. Therefore, in order that the issue may be squarely met, I offer the amendment striking out of this bill the daylight-saving repealer. It came in as a rider; it is one that can fairly be knocked out, because the bill already passed by this House—the Esch bill—is more comprehensive, though it has not yet passed another body. Many of my colleagues have expressed the desire, since we passed the rule giving an opportunity for consideration of this entire question, for which rule I voted, to express themselves, and I have taken the opportunity to offer this amendment and give them this chance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have voted in favor of the daylight repeal. To do that again and vote to keep it in the bill will only result in its being vetoed again, will it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be. If we take the word of our friends on the other side of the House, the President will probably adhere to his previous action and veto the bill. If in doing that he offends the farmers of the country, that is neither the gentleman's concern nor mine; that is the concern of the President of the United States.

We have passed a daylight-saving repeal, which is now in the Senate. Gentlemen on the other side have been insisting that the President had it within his constitutional right to veto the bill. Many of them represent farming constituencies, and they are responsible in the votes they cast this day when they predict that the President will adhere to his previous action and still do that thing which it is evident the farmer does not want; that is for them to deal with as they view the situation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman says that he offers the amendment so that Members may have the opportunity to register their desire on the matter, but the gentleman offers it in good faith, so that the provision may be stricken from the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, I am for daylight saving. My constituents expect me to vote that way. In another place than this I did vote with the majority of my colleagues to bring this matter on the floor—that was to afford consideration—but I reserved the right to vote as my constituents would have me vote on the question. We should meet an issue like this squarely and have it over.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to strike from this bill the section which would repeal section 3 of the daylight saving act. As one of the Committee on Agriculture, I strongly opposed the inclusion of this section in this bill, believing that it was unwise to do so and not proper here, in view of the fact that the President had vetoed the bill on account of the inclusion of this provision.

I have been somewhat inconsistent with respect to this daylight-saving matter. I voted against the Esch bill, because I believed in daylight saving. Later, however, as one of the conferees of the House, consulting with the conferees of the Senate, in the trading and dickering that was necessary for us to do in order to reach an agreement on the large number of Senate amendments, I agreed to accept the Senate amendment to repeal the daylight-saving act, and when the bill was returned to the House I voted to adopt the conference report which contained the repeal provision. When the bill was returned to the House, having been vetoed by the President, I voted to pass the bill over his veto. My later votes were in keeping with the large majority sentiment of my committee and in keeping with the action of the conferees. In order to reach an agreement with the Senate it was necessary for us to accept the amendment repealing the daylight-saving law. But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the matter should have rested there and that neither the Committee on Agriculture nor the House itself should have given further attention to the matter. Some of the Members resent the President's action. I have differed from him in his method of trying to influence legislation. I have at times resented his interference because I believed that he was doing it improperly and in an unwarranted way. But respecting this matter, he has proceeded entirely in keeping with the Constitution and has been entirely within his right. After the vote was taken in the House to pass the bill over his veto, and the effort to override the veto failed, my judgment was and is now that we should respect it, and that it was not becoming of us to reinsert this matter and throw it back in his face again. [Applause.]

I am led to that opinion also because of the condition in which the Department of Agriculture is and will find itself on account of the delay in the passage of the bill. Until this becomes a law there is no provision carrying authority or money for any of the activities of the Department of Agriculture. These activities are numerous and many of them are very important, and because the bill failed to become law before the beginning of the new fiscal year many of them have been, and still are, suspended.

The department is very seriously embarrassed and will be more and more so as time goes on until this bill or some bill shall be passed. This condition is very much to be regretted, and I should very much regret to see the House responsible for continuing the trouble. As was said a few minutes ago by a gentleman speaking of this matter, many of the employees of the department, unable to obtain their semimonthly salaries on the 15th, were obliged to borrow money, and they find themselves seriously embarrassed and have suffered loss. This unfortunate condition must not be permitted to continue, as I believe it will be continued, if this repeal section is included in the bill again sent to the President and again vetoed by him. Having availed ourselves of the privilege the Constitution gives us of trying to pass it over the veto, and having failed, in my judgment it is not becoming in us again now, without any change whatever of facts or circumstances respecting the matter, to try to pass the bill in the same form. [Applause.]

Another thing that moved me to oppose the inclusion of this paragraph is that this House in an orderly way a few weeks ago passed what is known as the Esch bill, which repeals section 3 of the daylight-saving law, or will repeal it if it shall become a law. That is the section that provides for the turning back and the turning forward of the clocks. That is the section and the operation under it that it is said is so much objected to by the farmers of the country. That bill is now in the Senate. It can be taken up and passed at any time in short order. In 15 minutes, if the Senate will give consideration to the bill, it can be passed and will go to the President. That is the orderly way for Congress to proceed. This section we are now considering is a "rider" on an appropriation bill, always an objectionable feature in legislation, something that we inveigh against, something that the country disapproves. This ought not to be the manner of attempting to deal with so important a matter. In my judgment we would be moving with decent respect for the opinion of the country, with proper consideration for the Department of Agriculture, and with proper respect for the President of the United States if we should eliminate this section. [Applause.] There is a decent and orderly way to proceed; let us take that way. There is a becoming way to treat and to do business with the Executive, widely as we may differ from him; let us pursue that way.

The responsibility for delay and for the unfortunate condition in the department thus far is upon the President. He is evidently willing to assume it. If further delay shall occur—and I feel sure it will, a serious delay—the responsibility will be on us, and I for one am not willing to assume it; and I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in opposition to this amendment. No one can doubt the right of the President to exercise his judgment in vetoing the recent Agricultural bill. I take issue squarely, however, with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], who says that if we include this in the bill under consideration and another veto should follow, the responsibility will rest upon us. It will rest where the responsibility now rests for delay in the passage of this bill to supply the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.] Congress passed the recent Agricultural bill in due time. If the man who had the constitutional right to veto that bill had been on the ground, where he was expected to be, in the discharge of official duties, that veto could have been here and the whole thing disposed of long ago. [Applause.] We are now called upon to consider this question anew. Two hundred and forty-eight Members of the House voted to override that veto and one hundred and thirty-five Members voted to sustain it. Count up the population according to the ratio of representation in this House. Where do you have the expression of judgment as to the comparative strength of the voting population of the Nation in regard to the retention or repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law. Fifty-two million people against it and only twenty-eight million for, according to the census of 1910. There it stands, almost 2 to 1.

The farmers of the country are united in demanding the repeal of that law. No one on this floor, no one in a veto message, has yet pointed out any valid reason that will override the objections presented by the agricultural interests of the country with relation to this matter. I challenge you to study the whole record of the debate, and put the volume of population that voted by representatives in this House for the repeal over against the population of the country that voted to sustain the law. Some seem to think that there is no special inconvenience for a farmer to be called out at 3 o'clock in the morning instead of 4, in the busiest time of the year, in order to make trains with his dairy products and in order to carry on the regular demands of farm life.

Many have suggested in this debate that it is far more desirable that a few men shall have the pleasure of an automobile ride at the latter end of the day, while the farmer takes the inconvenience of an hour at each end of the day.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I have not the time. It is absolutely impossible for us to place this so-called daylight-saving law in keeping with the convenience and interests of the agricultural sections of the country. Men may think that by statute the Congress of the United States can change the nature of the rooster that crows at the stated time in the morning, but when the rooster crows and looks at the clock and sees that he is an hour ahead of time, he says the clock is a liar, and that the man who voted for that law was not quite so wise as the rooster himself. You enacted it as a war measure and promised that you would repeal it at the close of the war. That assurance was given here and also at the White House.

Will you now turn your backs upon that pledge and repudiate that promise?

There is no doubt as to the serious inconvenience to the agricultural interests of the country. Will you stand against them? Will you stand against the united judgment of the farmers of the Nation and say that this so-called daylight-saving law shall be perpetuated? Have we not a right to reconsider and send it back to the President with a request that he likewise reconsider rather than stand against the interests of the farmers of the Nation? I think we should do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To speak to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is exhausted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I agree with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] that the President had the right to veto this provision which is under consideration, but there are many things which the ordinary citizen and which even the President of the United States has a right to do that he ought not to do under the circumstances, and this is one of them. [Applause.] If there is any privilege, if there is any right, that the ordinary citizen of the United States has it is to say what time he shall get up in the morning. He knows best when he ought to commence his duties. The President of the United States, no matter how great his knowledge, how great his skill, no matter how much information he may have acquired over in Europe on this subject, can not give him any information on that line.

The representatives of the people, the men who know the opinion of the people of the country, the men who know what the people want, by an overwhelming majority have said that the people of these United States want this law repealed. The demand comes from the farmer, from the laborer; and who are opposed to that demand? The golf player and the joy rider.

Those are the principal parties who are opposed to the repeal of this law.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to yield. I have only five minutes. Every man in this House who has worked on a farm—and there are many of them, including myself—knows that the farmer can not properly carry on his work under such regulations that this present law imposes. He knows that this is a matter of justice to the farmer; it is a mere matter of pleasure and convenience to those who are opposed to it. The farmer's hours are long at best, his work hard and toilsome. For a long time conditions of work have been so much easier in the cities that there is a constant drift toward them, a tide that ought to be turned, if possible.

The laborer, too, realizes, that this new time is no benefit to him. He loses the cool early morning hour for sleep. He can get no more done and is not so comfortable. The merchants of the small town almost unanimously voted the new time to be a nuisance.

That is the situation here, but they tell us if we submit to the veto of the President everything will go on nicely with the Department of Agriculture. Why is it that the employees of the Department of Agriculture are not getting their pay? It is not because of this House—this House voted their pay long ago—but because the President stubbornly, ill-advised, uninformed, insisted on opposing the wishes of the people, and determined that these employees should not receive their pay. Of course, we could always give up our rights. Congress can surrender any right that it has and submit to one-man rule, but the President of the United States has no more right to demand that of us than we have now to insist that this question shall again be put up to him for his decision. We hope by this time that he has remained in this country long enough to be better informed upon the situation. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. KINCHELOE rose.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, have not I the right to recognition in opposition to the amendment before a new amendment is offered by a gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky, the Chair understands, is in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think there has been more inconsistency indulged in by the Republican side of this House on this amendment to-day than any I have ever heard since I have been here. As far as I am concerned, I voted against the enactment of the daylight-saving law originally in war time, I voted for the repeal of the daylight saving, I voted to override the veto of the President, and I am still for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. But here is the situation: You who say that you are consistently in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law have voted on that in a separate bill that was brought here from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for its repeal. It passed this House on the 18th day of June. It is now pending in the Senate. Then how can you get this bill repealed any sooner by voting to keep this rider on the Agricultural bill when the bill that passed the House June 18 is now pending in the Senate? It is a question that when you vote to retain this rider you vote to embarrass the President. You know if you vote the retention of this rider in this bill it is putting it up to him in the same form it was before; and you are not going to back him off the boards on this proposition, and you need not be uneasy about it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a question of petty politics, and you are going to get the hot end of it so far as playing the President off the boards is concerned and delay the enactment of this great Agricultural appropriation bill, which involves great agricultural activities throughout the country. Why do you want to keep this in here when a bill has already been passed by the House repealing the law, when the question was met squarely in the face and not as a rider on an appropriation bill but as an original proposition itself?

I am frank to say that while I voted against the law when it was originally enacted, while I was in favor of the repeal of it, while I voted to override the President's veto, yet I do not propose by my vote now to let go unenacted this great Agricultural appropriation bill. As said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], the Senate can pass the House bill over there in 15 minutes. So it is a question with us as Members of this House that by voting against the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania—and I am as much for the repeal of the daylight-saving law as any of you—we are voting to hold up this great Agricultural appropriation bill which will paralyze the great agricultural activities of this country simply to play a petty game of politics and undertake to play the President off the boards. You will find yourselves badly mistaken in that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], the gentleman made a statement a few minutes ago that he had been deceived by the chairman of the committee. I desire to call his attention to the fact he has not been deceived. First, I call his attention to the report made by the conferees, and if he will turn to page 1 he will find this language:

> That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$327,680"; and the Senate agree to the same.

If he will turn to page 17 of the bill, he will find that the amount is increased from $307,680 to $327,680; that $20,000 was added to the appropriation for the investigation. If the gentleman is not satisfied, I refer him to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is satisfied and had this matter in charge.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this question has been discussed at various times and passed on by the House. It is getting pretty late. Is it not possible that we can reach some agreement as to the conclusion of the debate? I move that all debate on this question close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to close debate in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina and myself, to be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in my opinion the whole gamut and range of discussion on the daylight-saving law has been exhausted, and yet it appears to me most unfortunate that there has been an element engendered in the debate which really is something that we do not desire to be said of ourselves. Reference has been made to the why and wherefore of the President in vetoing the Agricultural bill; the psychology of his mind has been gone into, and yet we are jealous of a great prerogative which is ours, namely, not to be questioned on or reprimanded for any vote or attitude we may take in this great lawmaking body in regard to the enactment of legislation. Without going further to cite instances, it seems to me that this procedure is a great mistake. I believe we should consider this matter independent of the personal attitude of anyone and solely on its merits.

There was some discussion during the debate in which the charge was made that the great financial interests of the country were back of the objection to the repeal of the daylight-saving law, because if repealed they would lose a few hours' profit on interest charges. It was ludicrous. It was the essence of simplicity. It was almost imbecility. Yet it was seriously propounded by a Member in good faith.

I do not think any one Member can speak for the great American public on this most vital subject absolutely and in toto. There are men here who proudly expand their chests and who figuratively decorate themselves with distinguished-service medals for having acquired that knowledge and belief. In my humble opinion we but reflect the sentiment of our several districts and our several communities. The sentiment of the district I represent is overwhelmingly in favor of the retention of the daylight-saving law, but yet we are told that the farmers are, or should be, by divine right or otherwise, the principal class to be considered, and as they demand the repeal it should be enacted.

Since the beginning of the debate I observed in the RECORD of the 15th instant a communication from the Massachusetts Tuberculosis League to Senator DAVID I. WALSH, of that State, relating to this subject, which strongly appeals to me. If there is a reason of superlative import that appeals to all genuine and humane Americans for the retention of this beneficent law, it is the reason given in this communication, which is as follows:

MASSACHUSETTS TUBERCULOSIS LEAGUE,
Boston, June 30, 1919.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: This letter is written on behalf of the executive committee of the Massachusetts Tuberculosis League for the purpose of urging you to use your influence to secure the veto of the repeal of the daylight-saving law, which is now in the hands of the President.

At its meeting on June 27 the committee unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the Massachusetts Tuberculosis League has always advocated the use of a maximum amount of sunlight and fresh air as a means of prevention and cure of tuberculosis; and

"Whereas the said league considers the present daylight-saving law an aid in preserving the general health of the country, and in particular a great help in the prevention of tuberculosis: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts Tuberculosis League views with concern the present effort to do away with the daylight-saving law, and hereby urges the President to veto the repealer now in his hands.

"VINCENT Y. BOWDITCH, M. D.,
"EDWARD O. OTIS, M. D.,
"ROGER I. LEE, M. D.,
"DONALD B. ARMSTRONG, M. D.,
"VANDERPOEL ADRIANCE, M. D.,
"GEORGE L. SCHADT, M. D.,
"Miss LOUISA P. LORING,
"Executive Committee."

Earnestly hoping that you will take any action which may seem to you to be possible and expedient under the circumstances, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

R. V. SPENCER,
Executive Secretary.

Gentlemen, if we wish to get an ascertainment of a genuine, earnest reason for the retention of the daylight-saving law on the statute books, I know of no stronger advocacy, I know of no stronger or more potent reason, that transcends all the slush, all the hypocrisy, and all the insincerity that has been advanced in argument by the opposition in behalf of the farmers, than to give more opportunity for the enjoyment of daylight and sunshine and the hope of aspiration and restoration to health and energy to those stricken with the insidious germs of the devouring white plague. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FESS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill H. R. 7343, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the statement is repeatedly made by our good friends on this side of the House that the Republicans are playing politics in again putting before the President this question.

Now, gentlemen, let us see whether or not that is a justifiable accusation. The President, when he vetoed this message, had returned from Europe only a very few days. He could not have ascertained with any degree of certainty the sentiment of the people of this country. And yet, gentlemen, listen to what he says. In closing the veto message the President used this language:

It, moreover, served the daily convenience of many communities of the country in a way which gave all but universal satisfaction.

Is any gentleman on this floor able to say that the President knew the truth when he claimed that this law was giving "all but universal satisfaction"? Let us see what he further said. I read:

And the overwhelming testimony of its value—

That is, of the daylight-saving law—

The overwhelming testimony of its value which has come to me convinces me that I should not be justified in acquiescing in its repeal.

The overwhelming testimony that was given to the President was all one way, and the President was grossly and egregiously deceived. That is the fact in regard to the matter. There is not any question about what the people of the United States think about it. Instead of the overwhelming testimony being opposed to the repeal of this law, it is the other way.

And now, gentlemen, is it unwise for you, or is it unwise for us, to say to the President, "You were mistaken when your advisers told you that the overwhelming sentiment of this country was against this repeal. You have had time now to know better. We are giving you this information. We put this up to you now again, respectfully, for your consideration. The overwhelming testimony is for its repeal." There is no politics in that, gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Now, gentlemen of the House, I hope to have your attention, especially on this side.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Now, gentlemen, let us take a practical, commonsense view of this matter. This rule in its nature is revolutionary. It is assuming that the President was not well informed or was not sincere in his veto to now bring in the identical legislation, in effect if not in words, and put it up to him again.

Let us see what we are going up against. Suppose we pass this appropriation bill with this rider in it and the President vetoes it, and the veto is again sustained. Then there is just as much common sense and just as much practical sense and just as much reason in bringing in another bill and having a rider on it as there is to have it on this bill.

I did not dream that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] or anyone else on that side was going to offer the amendment that he did. This amendment solves the whole problem. If this amendment is agreed to, the appropriation bill is passed on its merits.

This repeal rider is not in support of any provision in the appropriation bill. This is not the last day or the last week of an expiring Congress, and the law itself in this rider does not take effect until the last Sunday in October, so that there is no emergency about this matter, not a particle. Why should you pursue a course which might never end, because you can repeat the same thing from now until the 1st of January? The President can veto this bill. Under our parliamentary rights we can bring in a new rule to cover the same old question over and over. Why do you want to invite such a thing as that?

The idea of gentlemen telling me of the President being now rightly informed and changing his mind! I want to ask: How in the world do you know? Have you been talking with him? Have you had anything from him that warrants such a conclusion? If so, he will not veto the other bill passed by the House in the proper way when it is passed in the Senate. No; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] proclaims that the President will not veto this bill. If he is correct as to this bill, we can rest assured that he will not veto the other. So you are driven into a hole and are playing small politics in a small way. I do not mean to say that you have not the right to do it, but this farce can and will continue just as long as the bill is passed, vetoed, and returned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am earnestly in favor of the repeal of the daylight-saving law. I voted for its repeal when it was under consideration sometime ago, and I also voted to pass the bill to repeal this law over the President's veto.

I am always glad to follow the leadership of the President when I can do so and at the same time follow the light of my own convictions and the wishes of my constituents; but when this can be done only by stifling my convictions and running counter to the expressed desires of the people whom I have the honor to represent, then I prefer to follow them rather than the President of the United States [applause], though I have great respect and admiration for him.

In my opinion the people of the United States are extremely desirous of getting back to normal conditions and getting away from the irritating, disturbing, and vexatious conditions that were made necessary in order to win the war. They submitted to these war-time regulations patiently and uncomplainingly while necessary, but now that the war is over they are tired of such regulations and their patience is becoming rapidly exhausted. Since the veto message was received I have had numerous letters and petitions from the people of my district urging that I do all in my power to bring about the repeal of this law, and I feel that I should be derelict in my duty and not responsive to the sentiment of my constituents if I did not, even in the face of the President's veto, do all in my power to stand by and reflect the views, sentiments, and desires of the people of my district. [Applause.]

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that a large majority of the people of the entire country favor the repeal of this legislation. The President, having been abroad for several months dealing with great international problems in his efforts to better world conditions and reach an agreement with the other great nations whereby wars in future will be minimized or made impossible, has not had the opportunity Members of Congress have had of ascertaining public sentiment in regard to this very important matter. I feel that the repeal of this law, which was enacted especially to meet war-time conditions, would meet with the approval of the majority of the people of this country, and I am certain that in casting my vote for its repeal I am reflecting the sentiment of the people of my district in their desire to have repealed a law that has accomplished the purposes for which it was enacted. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have heard some talk here of evidence in this matter as to whether the daylight-saving law has been valuable or not. I am for the amendment. I think we ought to retain the daylight-saving law until some evidence is shown against its value. It is said that 1,200,000 tons of coal have been saved by the daylight-saving clause in one year. I understand that the evidence given to the President the other day was that $520,000,000 worth of vegetables were raised in war gardens by the people of this country in one year because of that hour of daylight saving. To show that those who express a desire to have this daylight-saving law repealed now are not in earnest about it, I only wish to say that if there is a real desire to have this law changed, if there is any reason why it should be changed, why can it not wait until next winter, why can it not wait until we have some evidence on the other side? Gentlemen talk about evidence. What is the evidence? They say the farmers want the repeal of this law. I worked for five years on a farm when I was a boy, and a farmer's hours are from the early crack of daylight until the last wagging of the tail at night. The hired man said to the hired girl, "John stayed till 1 o'clock this morning." "How do you know?" "Why, he was here when I got up to do the chores this morning." [Laughter.] That is an evidence of how they work on the farm. [Applause.]

There should be hearings held if this law is to be repealed and careful investigation of the value or nonvalue made. The element of moral value in people working what is known as war gardens, and the health derived as well as the value in food products, would be enlightening and fruitful.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to my beloved friend, the Congressman at large from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND], in order that you may know that there is far from entire accord and unanimity in Pennsylvania favoring the retention of the so-called daylight law, I wish to say that while I have never been a farmer, like Mr. GARLAND, I expect some day to be one, and that is one reason why I want this daylight-saving law repealed. But there are other reasons, and many have been given here to-day. It has been said here that the farmers alone are interested in this matter; but that is far from the fact. I was very much surprised this morning to find in my mail an observation on a criticism made by a very dear friend who happens to be a Democratic editor and a great admirer of the President of the United States. Dr. John B. Griffith, an eminent physician of Lewistown, Pa., wrote me a letter, which I incorporate below. Lewistown is the center of great manufacturing establishments, and, following the course I have always pursued toward the workingmen, I would under no circumstances vote for the repeal if such action could possibly work them injury. While they can be subjected to no loss or inconvenience, the repeal of the law will be of inestimable value to the farmer, who should be encouraged to produce more rather than less, and to second the force of this argument I need but call attention to the high prices prevailing for food, which, to bring down to normal, every possible expedient should be employed. [Applause.]

[Dr. Griffith's letter.]

LEWISTOWN, PA., July 17, 1919.

Hon. B. K. FOCHT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The attached clipping from our daily paper is not my understanding of the sentiment in this locality. The sooner you get the absurd law repealed the better.

Cordially, yours,

J. B. GRIFFITH.

The clipping to which the above letter refers is as follows:

[From the Lewistown Sentinel.]

Congressman Focht is desirous of reflecting the sentiment of his district, but I doubt if he did it when he voted to override the President's veto of the daylight-saving repeal. The opposition to the daylight saving was very largely in the West and South. It seems to me that the change of an hour in that time is eminently satisfactory to the people of this section. It gives them so much more daylight every evening either for enjoyment or for home work and gardening. It is claimed that the farmers are against this daylight saving, but their position seems more selfish than anything else. The farmer can go to work and quit when he pleases, as he has always done. I would think that our Congressman's vote was a purely political one, moved by his implacable opposition to anything that comes from Wilson. A majority of Pennsylvania's Congressmen were more considerate. Eleven voted to override the veto, but 19 voted to sustain it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7413, the Agricultural bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7343. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send representatives to the World Cotton Conference to be held at New Orleans, La., October 13 to 16, 1919, inclusive.

ARMY AND NAVY PROMOTIONS (H. DOC. NO. 153).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I take the liberty of calling your attention to a matter which I am sure is at the heart of the whole country, and which I have had very much in mind throughout all these months when we were trying to arrange a peace that would be worthy of the spirit and achievements of the men who won the victory in the field and on the sea. After mature reflection, I earnestly recommend that you give the permanent rank of general to John J. Pershing and Peyton C. March, expressing the law in such a way as to give precedence to Gen. Pershing; and that you give the permanent rank of admiral to William S. Benson and William S. Sims. I take it for granted that I am only anticipating your own thoughts in proposing these honors for the men upon whom the principal responsibilities devolved for achieving the great results which our incomparable Navy and Army accomplished.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 18 July, 1919. WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to amend by making Woodrow Wilson permanent President of the United States? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman. [Applause; Members rising.] Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would be without the semblance of feeling if my heart did not overflow at the beautiful nonpartisan reception you have just tendered me. It is all unexpected, for I rose with the intention of demonstrating beyond peradventure the awfulness of those who sit to my left. It is likely that this is the last time that I shall ever address the membership of the House of Representatives. The position to which I go was tendered to me, and I go to it untrammeled by any thought save that of the best interests of the country. I have served in this body for nearly 18 years, and yet I am a comparatively young man. I felicitate myself that I am a more or less close observer and a good judge of men, and I want to say that there has never been gathered together on the face of the earth a body of men who more nearly represented the Christian and patriotic character and courage of their people, such as the people of the United States, as now faces me. [Applause.] There is more ability brought together here than in any similar body that assembles on the face of the earth. [Applause.] I believe there is more patriotism. [Applause.] It seems to me during my many years of service that while we have our political differences and our fun and our frolics, when we reach a period of seriousness the one thought is the best interest of those we serve. [Applause.] There is not a man in this body to-day that I would not trust to the very limit, even to the keeping of the honor of my family and of my home. [Applause.] As I leave you soon, I want everyone of you to know that I shall carry with me the profoundest respect and admiration for you as a body and an affectionate and tender regard for every Member of you personally. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I need not say that it is with universal regret to every Member in this House that the distinguished Member from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is to leave this membership [applause.]; that we are no longer to have the benefit of his good counsel. He is a man of industry and intelligence; he has performed his duty with fidelity, rectitude of purpose, and with a firm determination to do justice and right. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the committee's attention to this proposition. I do not believe there is anything in the argument made to this House that the House by passing this bill demanded by the farmers of this country, the Agricultural bill, is mistreating anyone. Who is the Agricultural Department in the interest of? Who is it for? The clerks over here? Is that all—to appropriate money to pay the heads of the department and their clerks? The farmers, it is said, constitute a little over one-third of the people. The gentleman from Illinois said that all the farmers of the United States are demanding this legislation. He calls our attention to the fact that only one-third are farmers. The other two-thirds are willing to use what the farmer raises or produces for them, but they are not willing that they shall have anything to say about the law on the subject. [Applause.] The proposition for this side of the House is who will you obey, your constituency or some one else? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired, and all time has expired. The question is on the motion to amend offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, on a division there were—144 ayes and 125 noes.

Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. SNELL and Mr. BLANTON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. HAUGEN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 165 ayes and 123 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7413, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule which the House has adopted the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendment to final passage. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CARTER. To ascertain what is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated explicitly that the amendment is before the House, the only one adopted. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 171, not voting 56, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORRECTION OF A REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask unanimous consent of the House to reconsider a reference which was made a few minutes ago, and refer that part of the President's message which refers to the Army to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that part which refers to the Navy to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. WINGO. I make the same request.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6810.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to make that motion.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think the motion to adjourn would be in order.

The SPEAKER. If anybody wishes to make a motion to adjourn——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, July 19, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 19, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With renewed faith and confidence, O God, our Heavenly Father, in the overruling and inward ruling of Thy providence, help these, Thy servants, with true devotion to duty, to go forward with the business of the hour, assured that if they are true to themselves as light is given them all will be well; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. LEE of Georgia, for two days, on account of illness.

To Mr. KRAUS, for two days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BRINSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Thomas E. Delvin, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. IGOE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the cases of Esther C. Vernell, Sixty-fifth Congress, and Edward Flannagan, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse reports having been made thereon.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the cases of George C. Peterson (H. R. 1631), Albert Damon (H. R. 12963), William H. Le Baron (H. R. 11045), Cora F. Withell (H. R. 10687), Annie Casey (H. R. 13094), Peter Black (H. R. 9213), Hodges W. Drayton (H. R. 12978), Sylvester D. Phinney (H. R. 1628), Luther F. Thayer (H. R. 12979), William Johnson (H. R. 12980), and Carrie C. Washburn (H. R. 1630), all of the Sixty-fifth Congress, no adverse reports having been made thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that yesterday they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bill:

H. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send representatives to the World Cotton Conference to be held at New Orleans, La., October 13 to 16, 1919, inclusive; and

H. R. 7343. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the prohibition-enforcement bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, owing to the fact that there are so few people here, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Echols	Kreider	Riddick
Andrews, Md.	Edmonds	Layton	Riordan
Anthony	Elston	Lee, Ga.	Rouse
Ashbrook	Fairfield	Linthicum	Rowan

Dooling	Kettner	Purnell	Wilson, Ill.
Dupré	Kiess	Radcliffe	Yates
Eagan	King	Randall, Calif.	Young, N. Dak.
Eagle	Kraus	Reavis	Zihlman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that further proceedings under the call be suspended. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement, not to exceed five minutes in length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. What about?

Mr. GOOD. I wanted to get unanimous consent in order to bring up a resolution to make the appropriations that have been approved since July 1 available from July 1. They are not retroactive. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. WINGO. It is a matter of public business?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that the Senate is not in session to-day, and therefore no action that the House might take to-day would become effective. I therefore feel obliged to object.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I shall be compelled to ask for a rule, and it will take more time to get a rule and put this matter through in that way than the five minutes that would be required to put it through at this time.

PROHIBITION OF INTOXICATING BEVERAGES.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Under the rule the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6810, prohibiting intoxicating beverages, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6810, with Mr. GOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6810, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries.

The CHAIRMAN. Several amendments are pending.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is only one amendment pending. I want to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Missouri to the amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: After the words "a record and report of sales" strike out the words "If the commissioner shall find that any article can be successfully and economically manufactured so as to contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, he shall, by regulation, forbid the manufacture and sale of any such article containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. Such regulation shall take effect six months after the date it is promulgated, and thereafter it shall be unlawful to manufacture and sell any article so forbidden. Any finding under this paragraph shall be subject to court review as in said section 5 provided."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept that.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I want to be heard, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment for a moment, because if given time I think I may be able to throw some light on other provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much afraid that the members of the committee who are supporting the drastic provisions of this bill are losing sight of the fact that there is a very great difference between the enforcement of a prohibition law by the Federal Government and the enforcement of a similar law by the State government. A great many gentlemen have justified their support of some of the most severe, drastic, and, to me, at times unreasonable measures of this bill by the declaration that they have had great and unusual difficulties, and sometimes did not meet with success, in enforcing even the most severe provisions of State laws. That may be true. I have always entertained a serious doubt whether or not State prohibition would be effective. I have never entertained a doubt that Federal prohibition would be effective, if reasonable enactments or provisions to enforce the law were passed by the Federal Congress. I have no such doubt now, and for that reason I believe that it is not necessary to write a bill which is so drastic and unreasonable and, I might almost say, fanatical as to drive away from it those who desire to support and vote for it and who are, in fact, anxious and ready to write a reasonable law to carry into effect the constitutional amendment when it becomes operative on January 16 next. There are some who object most seriously and rightfully to a bill that violates many of the heretofore established rules of criminal procedure; one which reverses the burden of proof; one which eliminates the presumption of innocence and establishes the presumption of guilt; and one which takes away from the Members of this House the opportunity to vote on the separate measures, one relating to war-time prohibition and the other to constitutional prohibition. These two laws are based upon entirely different reasons, grounds, and necessities, and certain it is, in fairness, that the Members of the House should be given the opportunity to express themselves by their votes upon these measures presented as separate bills. I realize, however, from the proceedings of the House and the position taken by those in charge of the bill that this fair opportunity will not be extended.

Therefore I come now to the amendment which I offered, and it illustrates by analogy the reason for carefully considering all of the provisions of the bill, to the end that great wrong and injustice may not be done. I said the other night, during a session of the House, while considering this bill, that the compounds, flavors, or artificial products presented to the Committee on the Judiciary as being flavoring extracts were not, in fact, flavoring extracts. I am prepared to say that the article my esteemed friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] carried in his pocket and exhibited to the House was not a flavoring extract, and if it had been labeled and sold as such, then, under the national pure food and drugs law, such act would have been in violation of the law, and would have constituted a crime. I want to read to the committee the official definition which has been adopted by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture:

A flavoring extract is a solution in ethyl alcohol of proper strength, of the sapid and odorous principles, derived from an aromatic plant, or parts of the plant, with or without its coloring matter, and conforms in name to the plant used in its preparation.

I stand here in the presence, Mr. Chairman, of my colleagues to say, without fear of successful contradition, that no line of flavoring extracts can be manufactured without the use of alcohol to extract the sapid and odorous principles of the plants or the parts of the plants.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I must decline to yield now until I am through, as my time is so limited. Then I shall be glad, if permitted the opportunity, to answer any questions by any of the gentlemen of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I want to present the serious result if this particular amendment offered by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee should be adopted in its entirety. If so adopted and if by some process not unknown to science and chemistry the flavoring extracts could be manufactured without the use of alcohol by some secret process it would result in building up in this country, under such condition, a monopoly which would be protected and perpetuated by this amendment, and which would prey upon the people by exacting prices to be fixed and determined at its own pleasure, and I am sure, under such opportunity, these prices would yield enormous and unreasonable profits.

I do not believe that a line of flavoring extracts will ever be manufactured without the use of alcohol as a solvent to extract the properties of the plants or parts of plants. I know, beyond question, it can not be done now. I know, too, that the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture and the eminent chemists of this country will bear witness to the correctness of this statement. The very definition by the Bureau of Chemistry, which has been issued for the guidance of the public and for the enforcement of the national pure food and drugs law to the dealers and for the purpose of controlling the marketing of flavoring extracts, shows you the position taken by the highest authorities who have in hand the enforcement of the national pure food and drugs law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have three minutes more.

Mr. IGOE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, there is only one method within my knowledge which can be pursued in the manufacture of flavoring extracts, and that, as I have stated, is with the use of ethyl alcohol of proper strength. The other preparations which I have mentioned are made by the following process: The coal-tar synthetic flavors which must be labeled as "artificial" under the national food and drugs law are made by combining the coal-tar products. It is possible from coal-tar products to make almost all if not all of the odors of perfumes and almost all if not all of the flavors. From these coal-tar products are also made habit-forming drugs, such as veronal, sulfonal, medinal, and almost an infinite variety of others. The synthetic flavors are not the real flavoring extracts made in accordance with the definition which I have heretofore read but are artificial and must be so labeled. There are other flavors, such as orange, lemon, and vanilla, made as emulsions from the oils of the lemon, orange, and vanilla, and so forth, and by vegetable oils or mineral oils in combination with oils of lemon, and so forth. When made in combination with the vegetable oils these preparations become rancid and, to the best of my information, are not fit for the trade, and are only sold to a very limited extent. The same may be said with reference to the coal-tar synthetic flavors. Flavoring extracts made as I have heretofore described are necessary to modern civilized life. In fact, have been used by the housewives from almost time immemorial.

The emulsion flavors, as I understand it and to which I have referred, made from the oils do not distribute themselves uniformly when cake or pastries are manufactured with such flavors contained, nor do such flavors distribute themselves uniformly in the manufacture of soft drinks and other like articles. For these reasons, and I could name others, it seems to me clear that nothing should be done by this body which would remove from the homes of this country or prevent the legitimate use of flavoring extracts to render palatable and pleasant the foods and the harmless drinks sold at the soda fountains throughout the length and breadth of the land.

If my conception is right, whenever any legislation is enacted by this body it should be enacted in the interests of the 107,000,000 people of this great Nation. Unless amendments are made the effect of this bill will be to modify the national formulary, the United States Pharmacopœia.

I went to a drug store this morning on my way to attend this session and secured hastily, as I was behind time, some labels. Let me read some of them:

Aromatic spirits of ammonia; alcohol, 68 per cent. Dose, from 30 to 60 drops in water.

Tincture of vanillin, U. S. P., containing 61 per cent absolute alcohol by volume.

Tincture of peppermint; alcohol, 85.5 per cent. Dose: Two years old, 6 drops; 5 years old, 15 drops; 10 years old, 20 drops; adults, one-half teaspoonful. To be taken in a little sweetened water.

Extract of witch-hazel; alcohol, 14 per cent.
Essence lemon; absolute alcohol, 90 per cent by volume. For flavoring jellies, custards, ice creams, and cakes, etc.; avoid boiling; use to suit taste.
Sweet spirits of nitre; each fluid ounce contains alcohol, 92 per cent; ethyl nitrite, 4 per cent, or 18 minims. One month old, 5 drops; 6 months old, 10 drops; 1 year old, 12 drops; 5 years old, 25 drops; 10 years old, 50 drops; adults, 1 to 2 teaspoonfuls.
Spirit of camphor; absolute alcohol, 89 per cent by volume. Dose for adults, 5 drops to a teaspoonful, first added to sugar, and then mixed with water.
Elixir valer ammonia, contains about 25 per cent alcohol.

There are many other articles the labels of which I might have obtained if I had time, like tincture of gentian, which contains about 50 per cent alcohol; tincture of quassia, about 50 per cent alcohol; bay rum, etc., and which I might enumerate. Every one of these articles are drinkable, although not palatable. They are drinkable, if one's stomach does not rebel, and will produce exhiliration and even intoxication, but they are also remedies, and, as I have said, there are many others which are prescribed by the medical fraternity.

I may even go to the extent of saying that right here in Washington denatured alcohol is taken internally if the information which I have secured as a response to my inquiries is correct, and it is a well-known fact that around refining plants quantities of gasoline are taken as a drink or a beverage and produces a species of intoxication. I mention these matters to emphasize this proposition that the real test is not whether an article is fit or unfit to be taken internally in quantities and to the extent of producing intoxication by the moral pervert, but the proposition that should be applied is this: Permit these household remedies to continue and the useful and remedial agents to be made and used legitimately and provide to punish or incarcerate the moral pervert not only for the protection of society but for his protection when he persists in the misuse of these preparations and impose a punishment of severe character upon the dealer who sells the same as a beverage or has reasonable and just cause to know that the same are being purchased for use as a beverage. In this connection I want to say that the abuse of these useful and necessary preparations by the small percentage of moral perverts or users thereof should not deprive the 107,000,000 people of this country of the legitimate and rightful use of these preparations. Many provisions of this bill seem to disregard these people and would indicate that some of the supporters of the bill do not take the larger and broader view, but limit themselves to the narrow view that the legislation must be in the interest of the few who persistently, willfully, and wrongfully are willing to violate the sane and reasonable enactments of law.

In conclusion I wish to say that I am not now speaking in opposition to the enactment of a law which will render effective constitutional prohibition which the people have overwhelmingly declared themselves in favor of, but I am simply endeavoring to challenge the attention of the members of the committee to the proposition that we ought not go to utterly extreme lengths and legislate in a manner which may, and will in some cases without amendments, result in great injustice to legitimate industries and to the inconvenience and injury of the general public.

There is one concluding thought, and that is that unless this bill is made more reasonable in terms within the brief period of one year following the time it becomes a law, 90 per cent of the adult population of this country stand a good chance, whether advertently or inadvertently, intentionally or unintentionally, of being guilty of a criminal act. The housewife who extracts the juice of the fruit, if it later ferments, the farmer who makes his cider, if it later ferments, and I could enumerate many, many other instances of persons innocent of wrongful intent becoming guilty under the terms of the law as it was presented by the Judiciary Committee, because all of these preparations will in fermentation contain more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol.

Mr. DYER. In view of the statement of my colleague and of his knowledge of this matter because of his long experience, and the statement of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that it is agreeable to that committee, I do not see any necessity for further argument, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference to me how many agreements people make about these amendments, I have my views on this subject, and I want to state my position.

The gentleman calls attention to the fact that I produced here before this body a bottle that did not contain an extract. It is labeled "flavor." I asked the gentleman, before I produced the bottle, if he did not mean that they had to have the alcohol to produce the extract, instead of meaning that they had to preserve it in alcohol and put it on the market in a condition in which it could be used and drank as a beverage, and that is what I supposed he meant, and that is the truth. They do need the alcohol to produce it, but it does not have to be put on the market in a condition in which it can be used as a beverage. If this amendment prevails, it will be permitted to go on the market in that condition.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Not until I finish my statement. Then I will yield. I say to you that they are preparing flavors for cooking to-day and selling them on the market that are just as good and better than those preserved in alcohol. They are doing that with every one of these flavors, and they are being used in the dry States to-day. I had a conversation with my friend yesterday in which he said I was radical because I wanted to legislate to protect the depraved man, that no one but a depraved man would use an extract as a beverage. That is possibly true, but there is no question that alcohol creates a thirst and creates a hunger for it. That has been conceded.

I have in mind a case that happened in Oklahoma some 15 years ago, the first jury case that was tried at Cherokee, Okla., the county seat of one of the greatest counties in the State. A man was tried for murder. He had murdered a young man, 28 years old, who had a wife and two children, who had gone there, a progressive, upright, and industrious young man. The murderer's name was Jacobs. The man who was murdered was named Strohl. Jacobs shot Strohl in cold blood. I was called in to assist in the prosecution. I am not going to tell any imaginary, startling stories. The evidence disclosed that Jacobs had drank 28 bottles of lemon extract the day he committed the murder. Jacobs was probably depraved, but Strohl was not. There was no one in Strohl's family who was depraved, but Strohl and his family were entitled to the protection of the law. The history of enforcement has been that when these extracts could be sold with a solution of alcohol in such form that they could be used as beverages they were so used, and the very class of people who ought never to touch liquor were the people who used them. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is talking now about dry States?

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the Constitution contemplates that we are to have a dry Nation. [Applause.] I am talking for a dry Nation. I am doing my duty as a Representative of my people who expect me to help to enact a law to enforce the Constitution and make the Nation dry. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I had some more things that I wanted to say, and I will not yield for a moment. I want to say that there is a disposition here to inject technical objections which will tend to hinder enforcement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 114, noes 48.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for tellers on that.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Tellers were refused; one Member rising to second the demand.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. When I am right I am willing to be alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment of Mr. VOLSTEAD's as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr HUSTED: Page 10, line 13, after the word "purposes" strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert a period.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the object of my amendment is to strike out the requirement on page 10, line 13, that the quantity of alcohol by volume shall be printed on the bottle or package in which the toilet, medical, or antiseptic preparation is contained.

I submit that this provision can serve no useful purpose whatever in the enforcement of prohibition. On the contrary, it may be positively detrimental, because it will call the attention of men who seek to use preparations of this kind for beverage purposes to the fact that they contain alcohol. It will also make it very easy for a druggist who wants to evade the law to sell these things for beverage purposes, and simply point to the bottle, and the bottle will speak for itself and show that the preparation contains alcohol.

Now, under the pure food and drugs act Congress excepted flavoring extracts from this requirement. Congress excepted it from that requirement simply because flavoring extracts were frequently used for beverage purposes. It excepted them in the interest of temperance. I submit there is no reason why these preparations should be required to show the alcoholic content any more than flavoring extracts. On the contrary, they are in exactly the same class, and if one is excepted the other ought to be excepted in the interest of temperance.

As I understand, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has the same view. People who make these preparations are very much opposed to the requirement, because they fear it will get them into trouble under the following section of the bill, which gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the ability to hale them before him in case of a violation which may result in serious trouble and inconvenience in the carrying on of the business.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Does the gentleman understand that these requirements in the food and drugs act are in order to control the sale of liquids that carry alcohol?

Mr. HUSTED. The pure food and drugs act requires it in medical preparations, but there is no reason why it should be required in cases of this kind. It is proper that the Government should have the information, and the Government has the information, for whenever an application is made by the manufacturer of a preparation the manufacturer has to state to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the quantity of alcohol contained in the preparation. There is no good reason why the information should be lodged anywhere else, and there is good and sufficient reason why it should be conspicuously printed on the label, so that a degenerate can know what it contains and so that the crooked druggist can point his finger at it when a man comes into the drug store looking for something of that kind.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that the druggist could point at the article just as well if it is not printed on the label, and is not he subject to two penalties—one for not showing the alcoholic content under the national food and drugs act and the other for selling it as a beverage punishable under this act—and both of them are reasonable?

Mr. HUSTED. I know and I believe that every man in the House recognizes that it would be very much more easy for the druggist to get it into the hands of the man looking for it, and much more easy for him to evade the law, if the quantity of alcohol was conspicuously printed on the label. If you leave it in here you are going to increase the sale of these articles for an improper purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not a substitute to perfect the original text a preferential amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Perfecting amendments have priority.

Mr. WINGO. How can a substitute perfect the text of an amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. A substitute to perfect the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair answer my inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair answered the gentleman. A perfecting amendment will be put before an amendment to strike out.

Mr. BLANTON. When the time comes I have such an amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was thrashed out there quite fully. The committee refused to strike out this provision. There are some Members on the Judiciary Committee who had a part in framing the act under which medical preparations, patent and proprietary medicines, are required to be labeled in this fashion, and they insisted that it remain in the bill. Personally I do not think there is much advantage in it, but their judgment was that there would be, and the committee deferred to their judgment. I ask that under the circumstances it remain in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 14, preceding the word "printed," insert the word "correctly."

Mr. BLANTON. As has been stated, this provision is required by the pure food and drugs act, and I think in accordance with the statement made by the chairman of the committee it ought to remain in the bill. But I think the amendment I offer should be adopted in order to make it mean something. If my amendment is adopted, it will read:

(d) Toilet, medical, and antiseptic preparations and solutions that are nonpotable and unfit for use for beverage purposes, contained in bottles or packages, upon which are correctly printed conspicuously and legibly in English the quantity by volume of alcohol in such preparation.

What is the use of requiring anyone to print on the label the purported quantity unless they are required to correctly do so? I think the word "correctly" should be put there, because otherwise it is not required, and they could put on any formula they please. But the law as it stands now, as I understand, would not reach it. I think it should be clearly stated that it is the purpose of Congress to require and hold responsible every manufacturer of these medical and toilet articles, and that they shall print on the label the correct amount or volume of alcohol contained in that preparation.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask if he means by the word "correctly" that the truth shall be stated or that the printing shall be correct and not misspelled. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I mean both.

Mr. VAILE. I submit that the gentleman's amendment does not convey that idea.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it does. There are 435 Members of the House, and sometimes there are about 435 different opinions on questions that come up.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman from Texas think the word "correctly" is necessarily implied, because if the amount of alcohol is incorrectly stated, then the amount of alcohol in the material is not printed.

Mr. BLANTON. My answer to the gentleman will answer the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE]. There might be a typographical error offered as an excuse. I want to make it plain to the manufacturers of these articles that they must see to it that the labels upon their articles must show correctly the amount of alcohol that is contained in such bottles.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. The section as it is written requires the printing on the receptacle of the correct amount of alcohol by volume. That is already provided for, and failure to do that is made a crime. The gentleman would require that the manufacturer shall correctly print, and, as I see the matter, the only difference which the gentleman's amendment makes to the section is that he makes it a crime if a word is misspelled.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I would make it a crime if the manufacturer does not see to it that it contains a correct representation of the volume of alcohol.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to agree on some time for debate. It seems to me that we ought to, if there are no further amendments to this section——

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that when we come down to the real gist of this language that appears on line 14, page 10, in order to correct the matter and have a thorough understanding, the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the word "true" be inserted before the word "quantity," so that it will read:

Upon which are printed conspicuously and legibly in English the true quantity by volume of alcohol in such preparations.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It seems to me it is exactly the same, whether we use the word "correctly" or "true."

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman does not offer it, I will.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I think under the national food and drugs act it is absolutely required that the exact quantity of alcohol by volume be printed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is a new provision of law that the gentleman has reference to and applies to paragraphs (b), (c), and (e). Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify that by making it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his motion by making it five minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. The RECORD shows that there are a number of amendments which were read and which are supposed to be pending to this section, appearing on page 2808 of the RECORD. I want to know whether the chairman of the committee desires that there be no debate on any of those amendments, or whether they shall be open for discussion and information?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My impression is, if the gentleman will turn to the RECORD, that he will find that all of these amendments have been debated. They are simply made necessary to correct the text.

Mr. GARD. They have not even been offered. They were submitted by the gentleman for the purpose of being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They are treated as offered.

Mr. GARD. I think we should have a fair opportunity to discuss these amendments, which have been presented in the RECORD but have never been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to close debate. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to modify that again by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota again modifies the motion that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman modify his motion after the Chair has put it without unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not modify his motion except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the gentleman's motion by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to amend the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, that the time be fixed for 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments that were read for information be considered pending, so as to save the time of reporting them over again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the amendments which were read in the RECORD be considered pending. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the amendments can not be considered pending until they are reported. The other night they were reported for the simple purpose of having them printed in the RECORD. If the gentleman will ask to have them reported, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that can be done by unanimous consent, but only in that way. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Unless they are reported I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that they be reported and be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendments offered and printed in the RECORD be reported. Is there objection?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the time consumed in reading these amendments be taken out of the 15 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be taken out of the time for debate. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The amendments will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 19 and 20, after the word "the" in line 19, strike out the words "purchase, sale, transportation, importation, exportation, and use of the."

Page 11, line 4, after the word "in," insert the words "paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of."

Page 11, line 4, after the word "purposes," insert "or any extracts or sirups for intoxicating beverage purposes."

Page 11, line 7, strike out the word "beverage" and insert "such."

Mr. BARKLEY. That section has not been read.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, can we not have the section of the bill read as amended? In other words, I want to know how the bill will read with these amendments in it.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is an amendment and a substitute pending. His amendment can be offered later. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood under the order of the House that there had been agreed upon 15 minutes of general debate, following which all pending amendments including my own would be voted upon. The gentleman from Massachusetts was then recognized by the Chair to present an amendment and to speak for five minutes. I then absented myself for less than two minutes by stepping out in the hall only momentarily, during which short absence the Chair placed before the committee the amendment I had previously offered. Was that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It was in order. Debate may be had at any time until the conclusive action of the committee on the entire section.

Mr. BLANTON. Could the gentleman from Massachusetts be taken off his feet after being recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. He was not taken off his feet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the only practical difference was one vote as against no vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that sometimes one vote, when it is a correct one, is more vital than numerous incorrect votes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 10, line 14, after the word "the" insert the word "exact."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 10, line 4, strike out the word "medical" and insert in lieu thereof the word "medicinal."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 10, line 11, strike out the word "medical" and insert in lieu thereof the word "medicinal."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 10, line 7, after the word "are" strike out "nonpotable.'

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, according to the dictionary the word "nonpotable" means nondrinkable. Now, it seems to me it is perfectly ridiculous to put in this bill section 4, providing that certain kinds of liquors may be manufactured and sold that contain alcohol and then put in the word "undrinkable." Now, it seems to me the word "unfit" which follows answers every purpose. Every patent and proprietary medicine and every medicinal preparation is drinkable and can be drunk.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, the gentleman will then move to strike out the same word in lines 10, 12, and 16?

Mr. DALLINGER. I have the amendments prepared for that purpose. And it seems to me the word "nonpotable" practically takes out the whole purpose of this section, and I trust this reasonable amendment will be adopted.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe those words ought to be stricken out. This question has been submitted to the attorneys appearing interested in these preparations, and, while they would prefer to have them stricken out, they admitted that those words will not prevent them from making their legitimate products. They have submitted them to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he has, as I am told, assured them that there is not anything in these words to prevent making the products now on the market.

And we ought not to liberalize this proposition any more than is necessary. What is a beverage? It is not simply something you can drink. A beverage is something you drink for the pleasure of drinking it. That is the definition of the courts. And, in view of that fact, it is not necessary to strike out these words.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or anyone connected with the Department of Justice told him that these words ought to be used?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The attorneys told me they were willing to let them stay, though they would, of course, be glad to have them go.

Mr. DALLINGER. The attorneys for whom?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The attorneys for the patent-medicine proprietors——

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to ask the gentleman if he himself consulted with the Collector of Internal Revenue and the Department of Justice in regard to these words?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I consulted the assistant commissioner in regard to them, and he said that they could make these articles under this legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman willing to substitute the word "nondrinkable" in the interest of clearness, so that the people can understand it, instead of the word "nonpotable"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think the word "nonpotable" is much more favorable to the men making this class of goods than the word "nondrinkable."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to defer to the wishes of the people of the country rather than to the makers of these beverages.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] moves that all debate on this amendment——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I had not intended to take up any of the valuable time of the committee on this very important measure. However, as two of my colleagues from North Carolina have spoken rather in opposition to the pending bill, I am unwilling that this debate shall close without anyone from my State raising a voice in its favor. [Applause.]

The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes have been prohibited by constitutional mandate and the eighteenth amendment ratified by practically all of the States of the Union, and this in itself is sufficient evidence that a majority of the voters of this country are opposed to the manufacture and sale of liquor for beverage purposes; and it now becomes the duty of Congress to enact suitable legislation for the enforcement of this law and make effective the declared will and purpose of the people.

There can, in my judgment, be no valid defense made by anyone for either the manufacture, sale, or consumption of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. I am a prohibitionist by sentiment, habit, and practice, and the matter with me is a deep, settled conviction. The State that I have the honor in part to represent had the wisdom to adopt prohibition 10 or 12 years ago, and it has more than justified itself.

I was somewhat surprised when I read in the RECORD the remarks of my able colleague from North Carolina [Mr. POU], for whom I entertain the greatest respect both as to his ability and integrity. I quote a portion of his remarks as found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2282, as follows:

> * * * When you put this law on the statute books your troubles will begin, because at this minute, while I am standing here, there are in a dozen States which have already adopted prohibition more illicit stills in operation than there ever were saloons at any time in the history of those States. * * *

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, that while bearing testimony in a general way as to the failure of prohibition laws in various States, not named, my colleague is very cautious not to allude to the effect of prohibition upon his home State of North Caroline; and I venture the statement that he will not testify on this floor, or elsewhere, that the law has been a failure in our State. [Applause.] On the contrary, I believe he would be forced to admit, as every fair-minded man must do, whether he believes in prohibition or not, that it has been, generally speaking, a great benefit and blessing to our State, and that at the present time there is not consumed in that State one-tenth of the liquor that was consumed there before prohibition was adopted. And it would have been even less had it not been for the amount of liquor that was brought into the State from Maryland and other wet States. Also, the business of the criminal courts has proportionately decreased in North Carolina since the prohibition law was put in force, and no State in the Union is making greater progress along moral, educational, and industrial lines, and a large part of the credit for this great beneficial change in the social and material welfare of the people is due to the driving of the distilleries and saloons from our Commonwealth.

Many fair-minded men who strongly opposed prohibition at the time it was adopted in our State have since been converted and are now among its most ardent supporters and defenders solely on account of the great benefits which have accrued to the State by its adoption. Should a referendum be held there to-day on the subject I am satisfied that not 10 per cent of the electors would vote to return to the old conditions when the liquor business was legalized by the State and was one of the industries sanctioned by law.

It is frantically contended by the opponents of this measure that it is too drastic and should be radically amended. Now, it may be that some minor amendments are advisable and even necessary, and I myself may vote for some of these amendments when offered, but I want it to be amended by its friends and not by its enemies. [Applause.] If you trust those who are opposed to national prohibition to shape this legislation, when it is enacted you will find that the very purpose for which the law was intended will have been defeated and that you will be giving the people a subterfuge. Only by drastic and stringent legislation can the purpose sought by the constitutional amendment be secured. The law must not only have teeth to punish those who would violate it, but must also have eyes with which to locate its violators. [Applause.] If you attempt to handle the lawless element of society with gloves on our efforts will be a failure from the beginning. The measure we enact, if it is to accomplish the purposes sought, must be firm and unequivocal, and the punishment provided must be sure, swift, and far-reaching; and the lawless element, who will desperately attempt to override or evade this law, must be brought to a certain realization that prohibition is an accomplished fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow a question there?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have not the time. I have only five minutes. If you will give me more time I will be very glad to answer any question I can.

Already in some territory where prohibition has been adopted by the States the manufacture and sale of liquor is shifting, in many instances, from the ignorant and worthless element to men with a higher order of intelligence and of greater financial ability. The profits are so great, and as liquor becomes scarcer and the demand for it greater, unscrupulous men are lured into the business by reason of the exorbitant profits.

In a few cases in my own State a combination of circumstances would indicate that the officers of the law are blind to their duty and, for some mysterious reason, are unable or unwilling to locate and break up the moonshining and bootlegging activities. The men engaged in this business have lost all respect for law, have no regard for the welfare of society, neither fear God nor regard man, and will only be deterred from their nefarious business by the most rigid and stringent legislation. This can not be accomplished in any other manner.

The great degree of efficiency in our Navy at this time affords a striking example of what can be done by handling the liquor question with an iron hand, so to speak. When our Navy was put on a bone-dry basis several years ago, principally through the instrumentality of the present Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels, of North Carolina, he was criticized and scoffed at from all sides, both within and without the service, and held up in the public press as a visionary, whose theory of having a dry Navy could not be put into practice. But these criticisms did not deter him from following the light of his convictions; prohibition was enforced in the Navy, and the results speak for themselves. And those who were at first loudest in their condemnation of his action are to-day among his most enthusiastic and ardent supporters.

So, Mr. Chairman, the same drastic measures must be taken in enforcing prohibition throughout the country at large as were enforced in the Navy, if the intention of the law is to be accomplished.

Let us stand up, therefore, like men and resist the impious plea of those who would thwart the expressed will of the people. The people are expecting and demanding that the greatest of all evils and the worst of all curses be placed in chains and cast into outer darkness. The liquor business has brought its own condemnation, and its funeral knell has been sounded; it has proven itself the worst curse the world has had to battle with, and the most potential instrumentality of the devil. Business men in every important industry have outlawed it, and say it must be banished from the land; the railroads have placed a ban upon it; the large mercantile establishments all over the country will not employ drinking men in their business; the banks will not trust the handling of their money, or the people's money, to men who use intoxicating liquors; the medical profession has practically eliminated liquor from its list of remedies; the Army and the Navy have set their disapproval on it, and it has been banished from their midst; the millions of homes in our fair land cry out in anguish for its extinction, and every good mother in our beloved country rejoices that this great Government no longer harbors, but will fight to the limit, the worst enemy of the home. We should, therefore, Mr. Chairman, make this legislation sufficiently drastic to banish forever from our midst the greatest detriment to American life, happiness, and prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman ask for time?

Mr. BAER. I moved to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to make the inquiry, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's time will come out of the 15 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. All time will be taken out of the 15 minutes. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I understood from the Chair a moment ago, when the gentleman from North Carolina asked for recognition, that there were nine minutes remaining. He used five. Under that calculation there would be only four left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair was mistaken. Four minutes remain.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of prohibition. My record will show I have voted for every prohibition bill. We have prohibition in our State—North Dakota—and it works very successfully. I would not want to raise my three boys in any State where they do not have prohibition. [Applause.] But I want to say that those reformers in the country who are trying to do away with cigarettes, tobacco, pickled peaches, and things of that kind do not have my sympathy. I am not going to vote to take away from the people any more personal rights. There is an enterprising firm out West making a brand of near beer, and legibly and conspicuously printed on the bottle is the notice, "Do not mix the contents of this bottle with yeast because it will make it intoxicating." [Laughter.]

Now, if you have cases like this some people will begin to agitate for the enactment of a prohibition law to prevent the sale of yeast, and this will have a serious economic effect upon the farming industry. I am going to stop with the prohibition of intoxicating liquors. I am whole-heartedly for a dry nation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. I will yield to the genial Member from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to know if there is any connection between the two facts that your State is prohibition and your State manufactures yeast? I notice the gentleman has this formula in his mind very accurately, and the question arises if there is any connection between the two things? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAER. We raise very few hops and manufacture little yeast, but there are many legitimate industries that might be interfered with. The gentleman may be more familiar with it than I am. I want to say, however, that I am not an expert on intoxicating liquor.

I would like to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from Judge Charles A. Pollock, one of the most noted authorities on prohibition. He has written a history of prohibition in North Dakota, and he has decided many liquor cases. In this letter he states many of the difficulties that we have had in trying to define what is intoxicating and what is nonintoxicating. I thank the Members of the House. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman ask leave to extend his remarks beyond publishing this letter?

Mr. BAER. No. I just want to add this letter.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman does not want to extend his remarks by publishing a book?

Mr. BAER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

FARGO, N. DAK., May 15, 1919.

Hon. JOHN M. BAER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday about the necessity of having a suitable definition of intoxicating liquors placed in the law covering war and constitutional prohibition, will say:

In November, 1889, North Dakota was admitted to the Union carrying in its constitution a prohibitory clause. At once the legislature was called upon, as Congress now is, to pass a prohibitory law looking toward the enforcement of the plain terms of the constitution, it not being self-enforcing. Our constitution, like that of the United States recently adopted, permitted sales of liquor for certain excepted purposes, viz, "medicinal, mechanical, scientific, and wine for sacramental purposes" in a manner as provided by statute.

The committee intrusted with the duty, and I may add the privilege, of framing the law, after considering the matter very carefully, proposed the following definition, which was thereafter adopted:

"All spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors or mixtures thereof, by whatever name called, that will produce intoxication, shall be considered and held to be intoxicating liquors within the meaning of this act." (N. Dak. Laws, 1890, p. 316, sec. 6.)

This definition was the same as used in the Kansas law prior to that time and upon the construction of which Mr. Justice Brewer, in 1881, then being on the supreme bench of Kansas, wrote the decision in the celebrated "Intoxicating liquor cases (25 Kans., 524). In that case, however, he was dealing mostly with the word "mixtures."

When we began enforcing our act of 1890, the courts were at once called upon to define the words "intoxicating liquor." Evidence was taken from physicians and pharmacists. Questions arose like these: "Will liquors containing less than 2 per cent by volume of alcohol intoxicate?" The answers were many. Some would say "No; in the average of cases." Others would testify that it would depend a good deal upon the time of day the liquor was drunk, or the state of the stomach of the person drinking, whether intoxication would follow. Many witnesses would ask, "To how much intoxication do you refer; do you mean to make a man drunk, tipsy, or just feeling good?"

As a court, trying to solve these problems, I was put to my wits end. In that state of mind I drafted an amendment to the law and asked friends in the legislature to have it adopted in the interest of clearness and certainty. The amendment consisted in adding a proviso clause to the law of 1890, which reads:

"Provided, That fermented and alcoholic liquors, and mixtures thereof, shall not be deemed intoxicating if they contain less than 2 per cent of alcohol by volume." (Ch. 74, Laws 1895, N. Dak.)

Within three months after the passage of that act we found ourselves in a horrible condition. The brewers of malt liquors made a beer containing about 1.90 per cent of alcohol by volume, and placed therein, as a preservative, such poisons as cocculus indicus, copperas, opium, extract of logwood, and many other ingredients calculated not only to make the drinker drunk but crazy besides.

At the next session it did not take me very long to appear before a committee of the legislature and ask for a change. It was made, and the following definition was adopted:

"All spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors or mixtures thereof, by whatever name called, that will produce intoxication, or any liquors or liquids which are made, sold, or offered for sale as a beverage and which shall contain cocculus indicus, copperas, opium, cayenne pepper, picric acid, Indian hemp, stryehnine, tobacco, darnel seed, extract of logwood, salts of zinc, copper, or lead, alum or any of its compounds, methyl alcohol or its derivations, amyl alcohol, or any extract or compound of any of the above ingredients, shall be considered and held to be intoxicating liquors within the meaning of this chapter." (Ch. 96, Laws N. Dak., 1897.)

This law put a stop to the use of poisons, but our difficulties were not at an end. Several times have amendments been made trying to fix a reasonable limit to the amount of alcohol which could be used in beer without the same being classed as intoxicating. We once used the words "or any mixtures of such liquors as, retaining the alcoholic principle or other intoxicating qualities as a distinctive force in the compound and may be used as a beverage and become a substitute for the ordinary intoxicating drinks * * * shall be deemed intoxicating," etc. (Ch. 191, Laws N. Dak., 1907.)

The last amendment was made by chapter 231, Laws of North Dakota, 1911, and the section, which is the same as section 10105 Comp. Laws, 1913, reads as follows:

"The following liquors are hereby declared to be intoxicating and their intoxicating quality shall by all courts be presumed, viz: All spirituous, malt, fermented, and vinous liquors (except unfermented grape juice in hermetically sealed bottles), alcohol, whisky, rum, brandy, beer, ale, porter, wine, hard cider, and malt, or mixtures thereof, by whatsoever name called, or any liquor that will produce intoxication of any degree, or any liquor or liquids which are made, sold, or offered for sale as a beverage and which shall contain cocculus indicus, copperas, opium, cayenne pepper, picric acid, Indian hemp, strychnine, tobacco, darnel seed, extract of logwood, salts of zinc, copper, or lead, alum or any of its compounds, methyl alcohol or its derivatives, amyl alcohol, or any extract or compound of any of the above ingredients, shall be considered and held to be intoxicating liquors within the meaning of this chapter."

Notwithstanding all these attempts to permit a "trace" of alcohol to be permitted in the beverage known by the name of beer, or a liquor resembling beer, we have had constant trouble. We have about decided that the only way in which evasions of the law can be prevented is to prohibit the use of any alcohol whatsoever. A large number of the brewers seem to be without a conscience in the matter, as is evidenced by the foisting upon our people poisonous preservatives, when the temperance folk were trying to be as moderate as possible in their demand for the extinction of the beverage use of alcoholic stimulants.

Trusting the foregoing may give you the desired historical experience of our State covering the 30 years since prohibition took effect, I have the honor to remain,

Very sincerely,

CHAS. A. POLLOCK.

Mr. SNYDER. For one Member of this House, I would like to know what we are going to vote on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no amendment has been offered except that some have been offered to be considered pending.

Mr. DYER. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments as they were offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 7, strike out the word "beverage" and insert the word "such."

Mr. DYER. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, after the word "in," insert the words "paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, after the word "purposes," insert the words "or any extract or sirup for intoxicating beverage purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 19 and 20, after the word "the," on line 19, strike out the words "purchase, sale, transportation, importation, exportation, and use of the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whenever the commissioner has reason to believe that any article mentioned in section 4 is capable of being used as a beverage, he shall cause an analysis of said article to be made, and if, upon such analysis, the commissioner shall find that said article is capable of being used for beverage purposes he shall give not less than 15 days' notice in writing to the person who is the manufacturer thereof to show cause why said article should not be dealt with as an intoxicating liquor, such notice to be served personally or by registered mail, as the commissioner may determine, and shall specify the time when, the place where, and the name of the agent or official before whom such person is required to appear.

If the manufacturer of said article fails to show to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the article is not capable of being used for beverage purposes, it shall be treated as liquor. The manufacturer may by appropriate proceeding in a court of equity have the action of the commissioner reviewed, and the court may affirm, modify, or reverse the finding of the commissioner as the facts and law of the case may warrant, and during the pendency of such proceedings may restrain the manufacture, sale, and other disposition of such article.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 11, lines 10 and 11, to strike out, after the figure "4," the words "is capable of being used as a beverage" and inserting in place of that "does not correspond with the descriptions and limitations therein provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 11, line 10——

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. It is for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Does the gentleman intend to offer it there or on line 13?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is another amendment on line 13 to make it correspond.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 11, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "is capable of being used as a beverage" and insert the words "does not correspond with the descriptions and limitations therein provided," so that as amended the line will read:

"SEC. 5. That whenever the commissioner has reason to believe that any article mentioned in section 4 does not correspond with the descriptions and limitations therein provided, he shall cause an analysis of said article to be made."

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRINSON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman is in order to move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate has been had. The gentleman is entitled to recognition without a motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRINSON. Mr. Chairman, my purpose principally in addressing the House for five minutes is to read a letter which I have received from a very prominent member of a labor union in my home town of New Bern, N. C.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRINSON. The gentleman from Texas will not be offended by the letter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Texas ought not to object to the truth.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not proceeding in order and is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will proceed in order to discuss the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. BRINSON. The gentleman whose letter I have before me is an honored and very active member of a labor union in my home town. When he read the report of a meeting held here in front of the Capitol a few weeks ago, protesting against prohibition, he wrote me this letter, which I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will not object to.

Mr. BLANTON. All right.

Mr. IGOE. Does the gentleman from Texas say it is all right now?

Mr. BRINSON. He has not seen it, but he knows it is all right. The letter is as follows:

Hon. S. M. BRINSON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A few days ago organized labor made a demonstration in front of the Capitol at Washington in order that it might influence Congress to repeal the war-time prohibition measure in so far as light wine and beer are concerned. Now, I am a bona fide member of a labor union, and I want you, as our Representative, to know that not all organized labor is backing the liquor traffic; and I hope you will use your influence and vote to see that this or any other measure that would tend to give our people relief from the dread liquor traffic is not repealed, but, if possible, may be strengthened.

Very truly, yours, G. S. MATTHEWS.

[Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where is that letter from?

Mr. BRINSON. New Bern, N. C. I want to say that this letter reflects the sentiment of the vast majority of the laboring people of my own community and of the State of North Carolina as well. In every movement for prohibition in North Carolina, whether State wide or local, the laborers of that State have stood almost unitedly in advocacy of this movement; and in every movement for its enforcement the strongest and most sustained support has come from members of the labor unions. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is not at all unpleasant to me that my first appearance in debate on this floor is in behalf of a measure which seeks to effectuate the will of a vast majority of the people of this Nation on this great question. [Applause.] I want to say that when 45 out of 48 States of this Union have with emphasis, and in many States overwhelmingly, passed affirmatively upon this constitutional amendment, it means that the people of this land want that law, and they want it rigorously and honestly enforced. [Applause.]

It may be, as has been suggested here, that some provisions of this law are slightly harsh and ought to be modified, and in those cases I shall vote for modification; but whether modified or not I shall vote for the bill, and in voting for it I know I voice the sentiment of the people of my home State and of a vast majority of the people of this Union. [Applause.] My friends, a ban has been put upon the liquor traffic. The people of this country want no more of it. They want to be freed of it and its blighting influences and its baneful effects upon the institutions of this land. I can not believe that the American Congress will disappoint the expectations of a vast majority of the people. I can not believe that the American Congress will prove recreant to the trust put into its hands, or that it will deny to the people the fruitage of their victory. We must, if we would respect the obligation which comes to us with the passage of the constitutional amendment, put upon the statute books laws necessary to effectuate the end sought in the amendment. This I feel sure will be done, and effective enforcement will be found. [Applause.]

Utopia will not be reached at once. There will be many violations of the law, many evasions.

Ridicule will be heaped upon the lawmakers. This should not deter us. The future citizens of this country, the men and women of another generation, will look back to this as an epochal period—a milestone marking substantial progress in social and political and physical evolution.

With curious and inquiring minds the men of a later day will search for the explanation of an enlightened Nation tolerating for so long a period such a demoralizing institution as the saloon.

We are coming into better days. We are more concerned for the welfare of our fellows than ever before. The question of Cain finds instant answer from us. We are our brother's keeper. Our strength must supply his weakness. Our light must dispel his darkness.

Our arms shall be thrown around him, and together we shall tread the paths of community and national honor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, after the word "article," strike out "is capable of being used for beverage purposes" and insert "does not so correspond."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 11, lines 23 and 24, strike out "is not capable of being used for beverage purposes" and insert "corresponds to the descriptions and limitations provided in section 4 of this title."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of directing the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in line 5, page 12, the word "proceedings" is misspelled. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the spelling.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to add after the word "beverage," on page 11, line 11, the words:

"Provided, That nothing in this act or any title thereof shall prohibit or make unlawful the making or possessing by any person at his own home wine, beer, or cider for his personal use or for the use of members of his immediate family."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I raise the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman wants to offer that in line 21. The word "beverage" has been stricken out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact has been called to my attention that by an amendment the word "beverage" has been stricken out. So I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia that the amendment come after the word "appear," in line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD moves to amend, page 11, line 21, after the word "appear," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act or in any title thereof shall prohibit or make unlawful the making or possessing by any person at his own home wine, beer, or cider for his personal use or for use of his immediate family."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts that it changes the law in regard to war-time prohibition. This bill simply provides machinery for enforcing that law. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to 5 minutes, but I shall to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who took his seat a few moments ago, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BRINSON], referred to the position that was taken by the labor bodies here in Washington a few weeks ago. As I was present at that meeting I wish to say that that meeting did not pretend to speak for all the labor in the United States. It met here in response to the Atlantic City convention, where, according to the record, the delegates against prohibition represented more than 2,000,000 men. I am aware, as every sensible Member of this House is aware, that all organizations of labor do not stand against prohibition. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and many other Members of the House have emphasized that fact. But it is our contention that labor, speaking generally, in the eastern section of the country is against this bill. I think it is only fair to Mr. Gompers and other men who have spoken on the subject that this fact should be recognized. Mr. Gompers has never pretended that he spoke for every labor man in this country.

A great deal has been said about the character of the opposition to this measure, particularly in eastern cities, and a great deal has been said of the foreign element of the country that lives in congested sections of the country, as though these people lacked character and ability and brains and morals—those things essential for the well-being of this country.

I have an official document, printed at the expense of the Government, which shows the record—and perhaps this document ought not to be looked upon as conclusive of health conditions, but it is one of the many documents that have been brought to the attention of the country by the Government of the United States during the war—indicating the physical condition of some of the men called into the Army. This report refers to the results of examinations at mobilization camps. It tells a story of the morals of a large part of the Army, and it should convince some of those who have been criticizing our large cities in the East as sinkholes of corruption that they do not know what they are talking about.

The record of the Army shows that in venereal diseases the great big city of New York has the best record, with a percentage of 2.44, whereas Fort Worth, Tex., has a percentage of 18.67. Boston is second, with a percentage of 2.64. Strange to say, the smaller communities, towns, and cities have the worst record in this respect. Wilmington, N. C., has a percentage of 14.56, as against Waltham, Mass., with only 1 per cent. Des Moines, Iowa, a strong prohibition community, shows a percentage of 4.88; Omaha, 5.16; Kansas City, Kans., 6.57; Wichita, Kans., 4.95. These communities, which have had prohibition for years, and whose percentage of venereal diseases among their soldiers is twice as large as the big cities of New York and Boston, certainly can not lay the blame at the door of the colored population.

Mr. BRINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I can not yield unless the gentleman will get me more time. Macon, Ga., a city of between 40,000 and 50,000, has 18.43, while Woonsocket, R. I., has 1.62 and Salem, Mass., 1.64. The great State of Massachusetts, with 70 per cent of the people of foreign extraction, has a majority of its cities with the best record in the whole country. There may be good reasons for the high percentage of venereal diseases in many of these communities which I have mentioned, and undoubtedly some of the Members representing them will make a proper reply. My principal object is to call the attention of this House to the wonderful showing of New York over Boston, with their teeming millions of all classes and races, white, black, and yellow, as a sufficient answer to veiled charges against the morals of the people of these communities.

I think the country ought to know this thing because of the insinuation that has been sent abroad that the morals of the people who live in the great hives of industry are bad, and that the lives that the young men lead in these communities are rotten, and that they should be corrected by constitutional methods put upon the people of the whole United States by a group of faddists who would do well to look into the rotten moral conditions disclosed in the report issued by the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did not Massachusetts and New York both vote for this constitutional amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Massachusetts Legislature voted for prohibition under the lash of the prohibition lobby. If the people of Massachusetts could vote on this measure to-morrow, they would defeat it overwhelmingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that his time be continued three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida rose.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if we are to be throttled in this way, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-nine Members present, a quorum.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to amend by making it 15 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—57 ayes and 33 noes.

So the amendment to the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. What is the amendment pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 5 is pending and any amendment thereto.

Mr. DYER. But is there not an amendment pending now?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending at this time.

Mr. GARD rose.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, what I intended to do was to correct possibly a misapprehension on the part of the Chair. My motion was that debate upon the pending amendment be limited to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there was no amendment pending.

Mr. GARD. There was a motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from North Carolina is first entitled to recognition. He was on his feet, and the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have been on my feet for half an hour.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the position of any one Member of this Chamber is of small importance, and yet no man would wish his position misunderstood.

I have fought on the side of temperance all of my life. Many years ago my father led the fight against the saloon in my own State, when there were only a handful of supporters to aid in the forlorn fight he was leading.

When it was proposed to adopt prohibition by a vote of the people of my State I did what I could to promote success. I stood for prohibition in North Carolina at a time when it required far more courage to do so than is required now. Everybody in the community where I live knows this is true.

As a Member of Congress I supported the Webb-Kenyon bill. Indeed, I reported to this House the rule which made that bill in order and which, of course, created opportunity for its enactment into law.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have at all times insisted that prohibition was a question which should be dealt with by the States. After all is said and done, no law is stronger than the public sentiment which is the support of all law.

Surely it is not necessary to say I have no quarrel with the patriotic men and women who during many long and weary years have fought for national prohibition. They are sincere. They are unselfish and they are doing what they believe is best. I respect them and admire them, and I hope the result of this legislation will make men and women better throughout America.

My objections to this bill, Mr. Chairman, are several in number, and I am going to say also that my views are just as sincere as those of the gentlemen who favor the legislation. First of all, the bill is not constitutional. The eighteenth amendment does not give to the Congress the power to put people in jail for making and selling a nonintoxicating drink. Now, I do not believe there is a solitary Member of this body who will rise in his seat and say that in his opinion one-half of 1 per cent alcohol constitutes a drink which is intoxicating. If the eighteenth amendment had given to the Congress the power to deal with alcohol, treating alcohol as a poison, as many insist, this bill would be constitutional, but the new amendment confers no such power. It does confer on the Congress power to legislate in respect to any "intoxicating" liquor or drink. But when we attempt to prohibit the manufacture of a drink which everybody admits is not intoxicating the amazing thing is that a majority of this Chamber is willing to go on record in favor of such legislation. You have no more right to make unlawful the manufacture of beers containing, for instance, three-fourths of 1 per cent alcohol than you have to prohibit by law the manufacture of any one of the numerous soft drinks dispensed in the drug stores. You have just as much right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of Coca-Cola, coffee, tea, persimmon beer, or buttermilk as you have to do what you are attempting to do by this bill. The Supreme Court of the United States, in my humble judgment, will declare the bill unconstitutional. That would be reason enough, but there are other reasons which make it impossible for me to vote for the bill.

I can not support a measure with such drastic and far-reaching provisions. When I was a young lad I heard a great debate between two intellectual giants in my State, Zebulon B. Vance and Thomas Settle. In that debate I heard the great Vance give a definition of Democracy. He said the Democratic Party believed in a government of few functions, with just as little restriction as possible upon the liberty of the citizen. Of course, I can not quote his exact words, but I remember their substance very distinctly. That is the principle I am standing for here and now. Shall the Federal courts put on trial and send to prison the man who makes cider for his own use from the fruit of his own orchard? That is what this bill proposes, and nobody will deny it. Think of that, if you please. When I was a boy almost every farmer in the community made cider. We had it frequently in our home. It never caused any drunkenness unless some one drank a whole half-gallon pitcher full after it became hard. [Laughter.] Now you propose to make that harmless practice a crime, and a crime not against the State law but you propose to take the criminal who makes cider from his own apples for his own use away from his own county, perhaps put him on trial before a United States judge, who has power to send him to a Federal prison. Mr. Chairman, I say I can not support such a provision in the bill. It would be in violation of every principle of my political belief to do so, and I do not believe any considerable number of my constituents wish any such drastic provision placed in this bill. I do not believe a majority of this Chamber really favors such provision.

Now, another objection: It has long been a custom in my State to make wine from blackberries. Such wine has been used from time immemorial as a medicine. My sainted mother, now with God's angels in heaven, often made such wine. It never made anybody drunk, but was often used in dysentery and similar diseases. Now I am asked to make that custom of my people a crime. I am asked to vote for a law which would subject many a housewife to indictment in the United States court and upon conviction to fine or even imprisonment. Again, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I can not, I will not, vote for any such law.

Here is another provision in your bill: Any person who in a private place takes a gill of liquor, if he is on a train, a trolley car, or any other public conveyance, may be taken to the Federal court, tried, and sent to jail. One gentleman tried to tack on an amendment by which the taking of liquor "publicly" would have been a crime; but no; the extremists in this Chamber voted the amendment down, and as the bill is now written any person on any public conveyance who takes liquor, even if that person does so in private and as a medicine purely, commits a crime, and the offender can be tried in the United States court.

Wine can not even be used to commemorate the supreme sacrifice of our Lord and Savior, except in the manner set forth in this bill. We have talked about Russia and the Russian Czar and the slavery of the Russian people; we have heard about blue laws and the burning of witches; but I venture the statement that no civilized nation has ever passed a law more far-reaching than this, making criminal so many acts of the citizen heretofore considered harmless and by most people entirely proper.

Mr. IGOE. Originally there was a provision in this bill about sacramental wines. I will say to the gentleman we have now provided in this bill that no one can use or give away sacramental wines except as provided in the bill, and there is no provision for doing it.

Mr. POU. Of course the bill is extreme, but that prohibition of which my friend has just spoken goes further than I supposed anyone would be willing to go. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper can not be celebrated, if wine containing alcohol is used, without first consulting some representative of the Government. I do not care to discuss this phase of the subject. Let us hope the bill will be amended. The necessity would seem to be apparent.

On a former occasion I mentioned the discriminating character of the bill. The man who makes cider for his own use from his own fruit violates the law. The housewife who makes blackberry wine for medicine violates the law. The citizen who takes one swallow of spirits, even in private, on a train or trolley or other public conveyance violates this law. There are a dozen acts at this time considered harmless for which the citizen can be sent to jail, but the rich man who has thousands of dollars' worth of all kinds of drink can go on drinking and can not be touched under this bill. In many communities light beer is almost universally used. The man who acquires a bottle of beer after the passage of this bill can be sent to jail, but his rich neighbor who filled his cellar with whisky, wine, beer, ale, champagne, and so forth, can go on drinking and can not be touched by your law. Just how you defend that provision in your bill is hard to understand. It is said that certain rich men throughout the Nation have expended thousands of dollars in the purchase of liquor. I heard of one man who at one time bought more than $20,000 worth of liquor and stored it away in his cellar. That man can not be touched under this bill, the title of which should read, "A bill to prohibit drinking by all except the rich." I wonder that anyone can support a provision so unjust, so unfair. To my mind the provision exempting the stock of the rich utterly should damn the entire measure, and yet everyone seems to agree the exemption will stay in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I mentioned the other day the large number of places where liquor could be had even in prohibition States. Of course, I was only expressing an opinion. On yesterday I was able to get statistics which are interesting. In two States during the fiscal year ending June 1, 1919, 1,906 illicit stills were captured; just how many were not found by the officers of the law must be left to conjecture. One thing is reasonably certain: The officers did not find all in those two States; and yet you expect to enforce this law with its unheard-of provisions. You vainly expect to enforce a law which violates the right of the citizen as no law has ever done before. If there were 1,900 illicit stills in those two States during the last fiscal year which the officers were able to find, how many do you suppose will spring up during the first fiscal year after this bill becomes a law?

One word in conclusion: The new amendment gives to the Congress control over the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquor. The States have ratified that amendment. It is now a part of the Constitution, and I stand ready under my oath of office to support a measure enforcing the provisions of that amendment. I am ready to vote to make it unlawful to manufacture, sell, or transport intoxicating drink. It is not hard to draw such a bill; indeed, such legislation is pending before the committees of the two Houses. Why go further? Why pass a law which will require the services of a large army to enforce? Why not leave to the citizen a few things to decide for himself? Our forefathers fled from the tyranny of too much law, too many laws, too severe laws. Now we go far beyond the nations of the Old World in attempting to regulate the habits of the people.

From my heart I hope and pray you have not gone too far, that only good may follow, and I am as sincere as you are when I say this.

But I can only follow the dictates of my own conscience and my own judgment. For a good many years I have tried to serve my people and my country faithfully. You can not say anything against the evil of drunkenness which I will dispute. You can not paint the poverty and distress of the drunkard's home any darker than I believe it to be. But you can not make your drunkard a sober man by such legislation as this. There is a better, a surer, way. In your efforts to make men sober you had better beware lest you strike a blow to liberty herself. America is hailed as the champion of liberty throughout the world. Wherever men live, to the uttermost ends of the earth, they do homage as never before to America as the champion of human liberty. In this glorious hour, when America is being acclaimed wherever men believe in freedom, shall she herself, through her Congress, strike a blow at the liberty of her own children? If that blow is struck, if liberty is wounded, no part of the responsibility shall be mine. Unless the bill is amended, I shall vote against it. In doing so I can meet my Maker with a clear conscience. I am doing what I believe to be my duty.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. I shall not take five minutes. I want to say just a word or two. I had intended originally just to give a reason or two for being in favor of this bill, and did not intend to say anything along any other line until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] submitted his remarks a few moments ago. I am not now going to be drawn into any particular discussion about that matter, but I can not sit here quietly and allow the people whom I represent to be put in the position in which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to place them. When he reads statistics showing that certain diseases caused by immoral practices are more prevalent in my section of the country than in his he knows that the reason for it is that a very large proportion of the population afflicted with that disease in my section of the country do not belong to my race or to his.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not the time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Those figures are not figures of people generally but show the condition of the health of the men who were drafted in the particular localities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I so stated.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and the gentleman knows that in the city of Wilmington, N. C., that he referred to, the vast majority drafted were negroes, and that a large percentage of negroes throughout the land are afflicted with that disease.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This same statement speaks about the West——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman had his say. But I did not get up to talk about that. The people of New York, the people of Massachusetts, are no more moral, no more virtuous, than the people in my section of the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I claim they are just as good.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And I do not claim they are not. I say they are just as good, and I think they are just as good in one section as in another, so far as the people belonging to my race and his are concerned, but it is unfair and unjust to count as against us in the computation all the drafted negro soldiers, and all negro soldiers were drafted.

I want now to say a word as to why I am in favor of this bill. I think it does make people more moral, and I think it makes for enforcement and obedience to law. I want to tell you that some of the crimes that have been committed in my section of the country have been committed by brutes whose brain, what little they had, was inflamed by liquor, and the courts are crowded with people brought there to be tried on account of liquor, and that is why I want to get rid of it more than for anything else. I desire to banish liquor for the protection of the youth of the country and for the elimination of the crime that it is directly responsible for in all sections of the country.

It has been responsible for the commission of more crime and more infamous crime than any other one agency in all this land. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, the sale of intoxicating liquors, in my opinion, is a prolific breeder of crime. Overindulgence in liquor does at times create a false courage which nerves the weak criminal to commit those crimes which shock the community. Many times have vicious brutes nerved themselves to commit murder and rape by an overindulgence in the vile poison within their reach, when if it had not been obtainable these crimes would not have disgraced the State. I confidently believe that a very large percentage of the cases where innocent women have become the victims of the brutal rapist and lynchings have followed in consequence would never have occurred had it not been for the indiscriminate dealing out of this devil's brew called "whisky." With us in the South I am quite sure this is largely true, and I am also sure that no greater blessing could come to the negro race in the South than to forever place intoxicating liquors beyond their reach. The average negro in the South is law-abiding and docile as long as he remains strictly sober, but let his brain once become inflamed with the vile, cheap liquor usually sold him and he becomes a perfect demon, and is liable to commit the most vicious of crimes. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to some views I lately expressed on this subject of "mob rule and lynchings" by presenting a letter written to me by Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and my reply, as follows:

WASHINGTON, July 7, 1919.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Permit me to bring to your attention the following resolution adopted by the thirty-ninth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, expressive of the sentiments of the organized labor movement of America in opposition to mob rule and lynching:

"Whereas President Woodrow Wilson issued from the Capital City of our Nation on July 26, 1918, a personal statement addressed to his fellow countrymen, defining mob-spirit action, called upon the Nation to show the world that while it fights for democracy on foreign fields it is not destroying democracy at home; and

"Whereas, while the President referred not alone to mob action against those suspected of being enemy aliens or enemy sympathizers, he denounced most emphatically mob action of all sorts, especially lynchings; and

"Whereas in all wars, where our country and its interests were at stake, the colored race, with their white brothers, fought, shed their blood, and died in defense of Old Glory and over there gave their all that others may live in peace and happiness ever after; and

"Whereas lynching, cowardly and unjust, is also a blow at the heart of ordered law and human justice; and

"Whereas the colored people, their workers, their breadwinners, throughout the Nation look with hope and anxiety in their hearts to those in the struggle for better conditions, for better homes, and for the good things of life, as well as protection from mob rule and for a surging popular opinion behind that will not tolerate a laxity in upholding the laws of our land; and

"Whereas the hope of civilization is in democracy; the hope of democracy is in justice; the only hope of justice in the tribunals, through which justice can be secured, and the only hope of the functioning of these tribunals is in the sentiment which demands that they within their departments shall be supreme, and that any effort to incite mob violence shall be regarded as an attack upon the very foundations of society itself; and

"Whereas the American labor movement, American Federation of Labor, knows no race, color, or creed in its stand for the toiling masses to get justice; and

"Whereas through its representatives in convention assembled at Perth Amboy, N. J., week of August 19, 1918, the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, with a membership of over 90,000, indorsed this resolution; and

"Whereas the great American labor movement through its conventions, city, State, and national, is the very medium through which popular and public sentiment can best be expressed against mob rule and for proper enforcement of the laws of our land: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That copy of the same be sent to our Representatives in Congress and the United States Senate and Speakers of both Houses, and to the press and to the President of our Nation, Hon. Woodrow Wilson."

I have the honor to remain,
Respectfully yours,

SAM. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1919.

Hon. SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your favor of the 7th instant, covering copy of resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor in its thirty-ninth annual convention, lately held, which you state is "expressive of the sentiments of the organized labor movement of America in opposition to mob rule and lynching."

Of course, all good citizens everywhere are, and should be, opposed to "mob rule and lynching" and should exert every possible effort for the punishment of crime through the ordinary legal channels and the orderly administration of justice. Good citizens of every section of the country will undoubtedly agree that this course is the ideal one under a Government such as ours. But, my dear sir, have you ever thought that if organizations of people who are constantly passing resolutions condemnatory of lynchings and denouncing as barbaric and uncivilized communities in which they sometimes occur would devote a modest portion of their time in efforts to let the inhuman brutes who commit the usual crime which incites the people to take the law into their own hands understand that punishment will be speedy and sure it might result in lessening the tendency to "mob rule and lynching"?

Of course, the resolutions are aimed at the South, although it is not so stated in specific language. I am a southern man nearly 60 years of age, and have lived in the South all of my life. I know conditions in the Southern States, and I know the negro fully as well as any living man of my age. I not only have never participated in a lynching, but I never witnessed one in all my life and sincerely trust I never may. Brutes, both white and black, are sometimes lynched in the South, but they are generally thus disposed of for assaults on women, such, as I believe, on three distinct occasions have been committed within the past few days almost within the shadow of the National Capitol. However, the record will not show that any white man, or negro man either, has even been lynched or shot down like a dog in the South because he wanted work, as negroes were shot down in East St. Louis, in the State of Illinois, a few short years ago. The negro in the South is privileged under the law to work out his destiny, as fully enjoying all his legal rights as does the white man, and the industrious and law-abiding among them are accumulating property, educating their children with funds mostly raised by taxation of the property of white people, and are content, if only let alone by agitators who either know nothing of conditions or whose hatred of the South inspires them to create trouble.

The men of no country or section of country, in my opinion, are worth a "tinker's dam" if they do not respect and protect, at any and all hazards, the virtue and chastity of their women, and my humble judgment is that both white and negro brutes will cease to be lynched in the South when they cease to make assaults upon women, and not before. Those who seem to be so bitterly opposed to the summary execution of these brutal assailants of innocent and defenseless girls and women, with great unction, say: "Let the law take its course." What does this mean? It means that the brute is to be incarcerated in a jail and fed and fattened for several months, and when the trial is held the wretched victim of the hellish lust of the inhuman scoundrel must appear and detail all the shocking facts and circumstances of her shame and degradation in the presence of the gaping crowd assembled in the court room. To any refined, innocent, virtuous woman death would be much preferable to the passing through such an ordeal as this. When your organization is so solicitous of these brutal, bestial creatures do you not think it would be well to not waste all your sympathies on them, but rather to give a little thought to the pure young girl or the virtuous young wife and mother who has fallen a victim to the hellish lust of the beast? These victims have suffered more than a thousand deaths, and their families have suffered with them. A mad-dog or a rattlesnake is shot down on sight, and how much better is the rape demon than the mad-dog or the rattlesnake?

While, as I have said, I have never taken part or even witnessed a lynching, I am quite sure that in the South they have always got the right man, and the swiftness and certainty of punishment has undoubtedly deterred other brutes from the commission of this crime. Right here at the very doors of the Capitol three white women, according to the city press, have been ravished by a negro brute or brutes within the past two weeks and the criminal or criminals are still at large. The victims, robbed of virtue, suffering the tortures of the damned, with their lives forever blighted, while this brutal beast still travels the public highways seeking to satiate his infamous lust. In this community, where they "let the law take its course," innocence and virtue are prostrate at the feet of the hell-born lust of the beast, while the officers of the law are busily engaged in an united effort to see to it that no contraband whisky invades the sacred precincts of the Capital.

I sincerely trust that your organization and others may turn your attention toward lessening the need for summary punishment. Let us not forget the victim when we are deploring the fate of the rapist.

Yours, very truly,

FRANK CLARK,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman [applause], I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina because he voiced an attitude that has been expressed heretofore on this floor, by him, and others namely that they favor a reasonable enforcement law. None of the gentlemen who have given expression to this attitude, have aided us in anywise to frame a reasonable enforcement law, or indicated what in their judgment, a reasonable enforcement law would be. [Applause.] The gentleman asks us to come back to our senses. We should maintain our senses at all times whether dealing with this, or any other subject matter. This body is not passing a prohibition law. We are enacting a law to enforce the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution declares that the manufacture, sale, exportation, importation, and transportation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes is absolutely prohibited.

How is it proposed to pass a reasonable enforcement act, unless we make effective these constitutional inhibitions, these explicit declarations of the organic law of the land? [Applause.] What would these gentlemen have us to do? Do they mean that we should pass an enforcement law which will allow a measurable amount of transportation, exportation, importation, manufacture, and sale? Is it their idea of a reasonable enforcement law that it should deal in part only with these inhibited things? Rather ought we not to enact an enforcement law which will seek to make effective in good faith an amendment which is to-day a part of the organic law by virtue of the almost universal action of the States? [Applause.] I repeat my question. What do these gentlemen have in mind as a reasonable enforcement law of a constitutional amendment which declares that the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation, and transportation of intoxicating spirits for beverage purposes is absolutely forbidden? Is a reasonable enforcement law one that would allow a measure of transportation, or sale? Is that what these gentlemen have in mind? If sale is forbidden, do you think that some sales for beverage purposes ought to be allowed? If so, to whom, when, and where? If exportation is forbidden as it is, do you think that we ought to wink at transportation, if so when and where, and under what circumstances ought we to wink?

Now, so far as manufacture by the housekeeper is concerned, there is nothing in this law that forbids the manufacture of domestic wine except for beverage purposes. It may be made under regulation for other purposes. We have that right not only under the State constitutions, but under the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. In legislating we can not go further than to exercise the powers conferred by that amendment. There is no police power afforded to Congress by any provision of the Constitution.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. With pleasure.

Mr. IGOE. Section 3, as we have adopted it, does read, however, that liquors for nonbeverage purposes and wine for sacramental purposes are forbidden except——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Except as provided by this law. I asked the chairman on a previous occasion what that language meant, because if this law in any section undertakes to prohibit the doing of something which the Constitution does not forbid, I will agree with the gentleman from Missouri to strike that section out. There are some sections of this bill——

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman agree further to insert a proviso that if the defendant can show on the charge that the liquor is not in fact intoxicating——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It devolves upon the prosecution to make good that charge. The prosecution must establish the allegations of the indictment or warrant.

Mr. IGOE. If the gentleman will permit me further, the definition does not only cover what shall be intoxicating, and the chairman expressly states in putting it in, it was put in——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is a matter that has already been discussed and settled. That is behind us. The committee has agreed that we ought to define what are intoxicating spirits. I am not going to be drawn into a repetition of the arguments on that subject. As I have said that matter is behind us, it has been settled.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information, at least for my information. If this law is passed as has been reported now and it becomes a law, will the farmer and his wife be permitted to make grape wine for his own family use on the table?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For beverage purposes.

Mr. DENISON. I do not know of any reason for wanting wine except to drink.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will read the constitutional amendment, it will answer his question.

Mr. DENISON. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are not passing a prohibition statute. The amendment announces the positive law relating to intoxicating spirits. It declares that the manufacture of intoxicating spirits for beverage purposes is forbidden. That is what the Constitution says and that citation I think answers the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. There is two and a half minutes remaining of the time. [Cries of "Read!"]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee, has an amendment to this section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 11, line 25, strike out the word "liquor" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "an intoxicating beverage."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRAMTON). The gentleman from Ohio offers the amendment which has been reported. The gentleman is recognized for two and one-half minutes.

Mr. GARD. The purpose of the amendment as offered by me is to carry out what must be manifestly the intent of the section. I take it that section 5 has for its purpose the very good one, that where one is manufacturing an intoxicating beverage under the guise of one of the exceptions set out in section 4 the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has the power of regulating or prohibiting that and of treating it as a thing which is prohibited. Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] just a moment ago said that it is undoubtedly true the constitutional amendment made provision for manufacture, sale, exportation, and importation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. That is the constitutional definition. That is the definition which we must carry out here by our legislation for enforcement.

The chairman of the committee in the bill presented——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I have not very much time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would allow liquor that might contain 2 or 3 per cent, would it not, provided it is not intoxicating?

Mr. GARD. No; it would not. My amendment is that it shall be treated as an intoxicating beverage. No matter what it is, it is treated as an intoxicating beverage. I want to make it stronger than you have it here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You change it radically by using those words, so that it does not confine it to liquor that only contains one-half of 1 per cent, but it may be a liquor that contains considerably more.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no. This is my amendment, that if the manufacture of said article fails to show to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the article is whatever your language says, if put in there, it shall be treated as an intoxicating beverage.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Would the gentleman insert the words "intoxicating liquor" instead of "beverage"?

Mr. GARD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired under this section.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in further answer to the question of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to amending it so as to change the word "beverage" to "liquor."

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I want to explain the amendment. If you will ask for an additional minute, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will change his amendment——

Mr. GARD. I had in mind that the term "beverage" was broader than the word "liquor."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Beverage is not defined. Intoxicating liquor is defined. If you change it to "intoxicating liquor"——

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD (continuing). Then I will have no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment that the word "beverage" may be changed to "liquor."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as modified, and the Clerk will report the modified amendment.

Mr. GARD. I ask to offer a new amendment, to insert the word "intoxicating."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 11, line 25, after the word "as," insert the word "intoxicating."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to add after the word "liquor" the words "as defined in this title."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY: After the word "liquor" in line 25 on page 11 insert "as defined in this title."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That no one shall manufacture, sell, purchase, transport, or prescribe any liquor without first obtaining a permit from the commissioner so to do, except that a person may purchase and use liquor for medicinal purposes when prescribed by a physician as herein provided.

All permits to manufacture, prescribe, sell, or transport liquor shall expire on the 31st day of December next succeeding the issuance thereof. All permits to purchase liquor shall, among other things, specify the quantity and kind to be purchased and the purpose for which it is to be used, and shall not be in force more than 10 days from the day of its issuance. No permit shall be issued to any person who within one year prior to the application therefor or issuance thereof shall have violated any permit issued under this title or any law of the United States or of any State regulating traffic in liquor. No permit shall be issued to anyone to sell liquor at retail unless such sale is made by a pharmacist designated in the permit who is duly licensed under the laws of his State to compound and dispense medicine prescribed by a duly licensed physician. No one shall be given a permit to prescribe liquor unless he is a physician duly licensed to practice medicine and actively engaged in the practice of such profession. All permits shall be in writing, dated when issued, and signed by the commissioner or his authorized agent. It shall, among other things, give the name and address of the person to whom it is issued and of those who are permitted to do the authorized acts. It shall designate and limit the acts that are permitted and the time and place when and where such acts may be performed. No permit shall be issued until a verified, written application shall have been made therefor, setting forth the qualification of the applicant and the purpose for which the liquor is to be used, together with such other facts as shall show that the permit may properly be granted.

The commissioner may prescribe the form of all permits and applications and the facts to be set forth therein. Before any permit is granted the commissioner may require a bond in such form and amount as he may prescribe to insure compliance with the terms of the permit and the provisions of this title.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in order to correct some of the grammar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 12, line 14, after the word "thereof," strike out "all permits" and insert "every permit."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard all of the discussion on this bill. I want to vote for it if I can. But there have been certain statements here this afternoon that have somewhat aroused my fears. For instance, the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]—and I am accustomed to paying considerable attention to statements made by the gentleman from North Carolina—was to the effect that under the provisions of this bill it would be unlawful for a person to make cider at home. Now, I do not know whether that is true or not, but as the gentleman from North Carolina stated it I give a good deal of weight to it. And the thought was suggested to me as to whether or not the bill defined the words "beverage purposes" as used in the constitutional amendment. I consulted the chairman of the committee, and I understood from him the bill does not define the words "beverage purposes," although it defines other language used in the constitutional amendment.

Another thing I would like to know is what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, understands by the words "beverage purposes" and why that term is not defined in this act? Is the definition of those words omitted purposely?

I have never understood that if a person at his home makes cider for table use it could be said to be made for what is called "beverage purposes," or if a person makes a little grape juice for family use at his own table, that that would be for "beverage purposes." If I am wrong about that, I would like to be corrected by the gentleman in charge of the bill, who is supposed to know all about these questions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Why should he be allowed to make cider containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol any more than whisky containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol?

Mr. DENISON. If he makes it for his own table use, is that made for use as a "beverage" or not?

Mr. WALSH. They do not wash in it; they drink it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Then is water a "beverage"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Is milk a "beverage"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Then we are to understand that anything we swallow as a liquid and do not have to chew is a "beverage"? Do I so understand my friend from Massachusetts correctly?

Mr. WALSH. Under the provisions of this bill, that might include soup. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether soup is a "beverage"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some people eat soup.

Mr. GARD. I would like to know from the gentleman from the Cape Cod district whether clam chowder is a solid or liquid food?

Mr. WALSH. It depends on how it is made. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the best chowder in the world.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Anything you can eat with a sponge is a "beverage."

Mr. DENISON. I have always supposed that the words "beverage purposes," as used in connection with this kind of legislation, meant that it must be in some way connected with intoxicating liquors. I do not consider pure water as a beverage. I think this bill ought at least to contain some definition of "beverage" or "beverage purposes." I do not approve of a bill which will make anyone liable to prosecution simply for taking the juice out of apples for use by his family at the family table, or taking the juice out of grapes, so far as that is concerned, for use at his family table. Out in Illinois many people raise their families sometimes on apple juice or grape juice; and I would hate to see the time come when the farmers out there may not be permitted to let their children drink apple juice or sweet cider at the family table.

Mr. BARKLEY. How about corn juice?

Mr. DENISON. I have no objection to letting them use corn juice if it is not intoxicating. I fear some of the provisions of this bill will be so drastic as to defeat the very purposes of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, for the last half hour we have not made any progress but have indulged merely in general discussion. We already had 12 hours of general discussion on this bill. There would be ample opportunity to put stuff of this kind in the RECORD. I hope we can make some progress now.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] should not be characterized as "stuff" but well merits the intelligent answer of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We have had too many speeches of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the farmer permitted to make cider or not? That is the question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section be now closed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that motion to have debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman want to offer an amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I want to offer a pro forma amendment. I want to ask a question. I think I can get through in three minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move, Mr. Chairman, that in 10 minutes the debate be closed on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the debate be closed on this section and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The Chair is not advised as to the apportionment of the time under this motion.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can get through in a very short time. Certainly I shall have to get through in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a limit of 10 minutes, and several gentlemen are to speak. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman for whom I have high respect in conversation with me touching buttermilk, for instance, and touching cider and grape juice, said that he believed if it were made in good faith the law would never be enforced in such cases. I said, "When would it be enforced?" "Well," said he, "if it is used as a beverage to evade the law, I think it ought to be and will be enforced." I said, "There is just perhaps one objection to that," and I do not make it as an objection. I agree with the gentleman who spoke to me that it will not be enforced if somebody gets buttermilk containing——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does not the gentleman know that buttermilk never contains alcohol?

Mr. CANNON. The chemists tell me it does. I am not an authority.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will say to the gentleman that buttermilk does not produce alcohol.

Mr. CANNON. Well, cider does, and milk does, when it ferments, and so on.

Now, I am not seeking to embarrass the enactment of proper legislation. I should have no objection if the law were enforced against a man who was a bootlegger, against a man who was hiding behind such a provision, in the event you write it in, because I suppose it ought to be enforced. But I tell you you can not enact a law and enforce it that will punish a man when he makes a barrel of cider for his own use and puts it in his cellar and drinks it. [Applause.]

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman if his amendment is an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. McPHERSON. No, sir. It relates to section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. If not, will the gentleman withhold a moment?

Mr. GARD. Is it not the usual practice, Mr. Chairman, to have the amendment reported? It will show for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McPHERSON: Page 12, line 8, strike out the words "or prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will withhold for a moment until we can dispose of the amendment first offered, as his amendment is not an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand, though, that the committee has decided to limit debate on all amendments to this section to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold until we dispose of the other amendment. His amendment will then receive consideration.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will be recognized to speak upon his amendment as soon as the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has been voted upon.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose somebody wanted to discuss the pending amendment after the gentleman from Missouri got through?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is anyone among the gentlemen who have been listed to speak in this 10 minutes who desires to speak on the amendment to the amendment, the Chair will be glad to recognize him at this time.

Mr. WALSH. The practice is, under circumstances of this kind, that the amendments are all voted on after the time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Minnesota allowed me two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 13, line 4, strike out the words "all permits" and insert in lieu thereof "every permit."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will state it.

Mr. GARD. Is it not the proper procedure to have all the amendments before the Chair, and then after the debate is exhausted to vote upon the amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not appear material to the Chair——

Mr. WALSH. That is the way it has always been done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McPHERSON: On page 12, line 8, strike out the words "or prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for two and a half minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution gives us the only authority we have to pass an act to enforce prohibition, and that is the kind of prohibition that we can enforce and no other. This word "prescribe" as used here is a word that gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authority to go beyond and to exceed the power he has or that this Congress can give him under the eighteenth amendment. This is an attempt to regulate the practice of medicine. Congress has authority to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquor as a beverage. It has the authority to prohibit its sale as a beverage. It has authority to prohibit its transportation as a beverage, and to prohibit its importation and exportation as a beverage, and no other authority. All these provisions that relate to the prohibition of the manufacture of extracts and medicines or the sale of extracts and the sale of medicines, unless they are manufactured or sold as a beverage, are beyond and outside of the authority of this Congress.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question as to his interpretation?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Do I understand the gentleman to construe this word "prescribe" as meaning that a doctor in Minnesota in order to give a single prescription must come to Washington and obtain a permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes; as to how he shall practice medicine. Other sections go further in the regulation of his practice.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; but in order to issue a prescription in any given instance——

Mr. McPHERSON. He must have a permit.

Mr. MONTAGUE. To prescribe any liquor?

Mr. McPHERSON. He must have a permit. Here the Congress of the United States is taking charge of and regulating the practice of medicine. It is dictating to a scientific man whose authority to practice his profession is granted by the State——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Is it not a fact that they have more trouble with doctors than with almost anybody else?

Mr. McPHERSON. That is absolutely true, but those States where they have that trouble have authority to regulate physicians. They have authority to regulate the practice of medicines, because they create those physicians, and this Congress has not that power, and it is not given in this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Unfortunately the time has been limited by an agreement, and the right to use the time has been restricted to certain gentlemen. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] for two and one-half minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct to the attention of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge what seems to me to be a defect in the bill. I agree with the chairman of the committee that one of the points of greatest difficulty in enforcing this law will be in the control of the doctors. It seems to me that this bill ought to be amended at line 1, page 13, by striking out the words "duly licensed" and inserting "by a physician duly licensed under the laws of the State or Territory where the liquor is sold."

That will prevent a physician making a raid into some territory, if he is not licensed in that territory but in some other State, and issuing a lot of these prescriptions, which under the law druggists would be authorized to fill. There should also be a provision in this bill under which, when a physician is convicted of violating the provisions of the law, he shall not be permitted within a certain specified time to issue any more prescriptions. I am not going to offer amendments, but I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the necessity for these provisions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have only two minutes and I shall speak very rapidly. The document from which I quoted is published by the United States Government, and my object in bringing it to the attention of the House was to emphasize the cleanliness of the great cities of the East. I think every Member in this House is proud of the wonderful record of the American Army. I took the case of those who had the best records and those who had the worst records, not for the purpose of bringing out any condition of immorality among the white population in the South—that was the farthest from my thoughts—but simply gave the facts as quoted in this report. One great city of the South shows 27.45 per cent of the men that enlisted in the second draft army as afflicted with venereal disease.

When I read that Mr. Dinwiddie and his associates are going to Europe to make it prohibition when the United States has accepted prohibition, I thought I would let him know, through these statistics, of rotten morals in prohibition communities, that there is work for him in this country.

I want to say to Mr. Dinwiddie that here is your job and not over in Europe, but here in this country where the disease is rampant and where it is being disseminated among our population.

That is where these men belong and not over in Europe trying to correct the morals of the people who need not be told how to deport themselves. If the people of Europe knew of these conditions, I think they would send Mr. Dinwiddie home by the next boat.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman know what proportion of these statistics represents white people and what proportion represents negroes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not, except that the populations of Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska, which are largely country districts, where the records show 200 and 300 per cent worse than New York. I presume they are white populations.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman know whether they were all computed according to the same system or standard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think so, because these are compiled by the United States authority.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman has spoken of Fort Worth, Tex. I have a friend who is captain of a company of Texas and Oklahoma boys, who went from there to the front, and the company was personally complimented by Gen. Pershing for not having had a case of venereal disease from the time it started until the time it was inspected for departure from France. I want to defend that section of the South and take exception to the report cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The morals of our white people are not surpassed anywhere. And I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks there could be any relation of cause and effect between prohibition and the reported increase in percentage of venereal diseases?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Except in this way: Congress is trying to correct the morals of the people who do not want prohibition; and I call attention to the fact that we are getting along pretty well in nonprohibition communities. As I have said before, I do not object to State prohibition. If Texas wants it, let it have it; if Kansas wants it, the people of that State should have it; but if we in Massachusetts are getting along pretty well, and do not wish prohibition, it should not be thrust down our throats.

That is the position I take; and if we let the principle of local self-government operate in this country everybody will be satisfied and this country will move along the same lines of progress that has characterized this country the past 100 years. I am the last person in the world to make an attack on the South. The part it played in the recent struggle is worthy of the greatest praise, and I glory in it as much as any Member of this body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were 16 ayes and 59 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out of line 3, page 13, the word "actively."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That no one but a physician duly licensed to practice medicine and actively engaged in the practice of such profession shall issue any prescription for liquor. Such physician shall at the time of prescribing personally make a careful physical examination of the person for whom the liquor is prescribed and shall only prescribe liquor when in good faith he believes that its use as a medicine by the one for whom he prescribes will afford relief to him from some ailment specified in the prescription. Not more than a pint of spirituous liquor shall be prescribed for use by the same person within any period of 10 days and no prescription shall be filed more than once. Any pharmacist filling a prescription shall at the time indorse upon it over his own signature the word "canceled," together with the date when the liquor was delivered, and then make the same a part of the record that he is required to keep as herein provided.

Every physician who issues a prescription for liquor shall keep a record, alphabetically arranged in a book prescribed by the commissioner, which shall show, among other things, date, amount prescribed, to whom issued, directions for use, stating the amount and frequency of dose, and the druggist to whom addressed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 8, after the word "the," strike out the word "filed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "filled."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 18, after the word "addressed," add a new section, known as section 7½, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, before we leave this section I desire to offer an amendment. The gentleman's amendment is to add a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: On page 14, line 18, strike out the word "druggist" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pharmacist."

The question was being taken.

Mr. GARD. Does the chairman of the committee desire to accept that amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. GARD. Then, why do you not say so?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have had no opportunity.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says that, as chairman of the committee, he has had no opportunity to oppose this amendment. I desire to oppose the amendment, if no one else does, but I would prefer to have the chairman of the committee do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH. But we have voted on it, have we not?

The CHAIRMAN. The question was being put.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I oppose it on the ground that a druggist may not always be a pharmacist in the acceptation of the term as used, and for that reason I think the word "druggist" should remain in there. We provide for the sale by a pharmacist.

Mr. GARD. And it is not true that a pharmacist may always be a druggist.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That may be true.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that in section 6 is used the word "pharmacist" in the following language:

No permit shall be issued to anyone to sell liquor at retail unless the sale is made by a pharmacist designated in the permit who is duly licensed under the laws of his State—

And so forth.

And now we find this language:

Every physician who issues a prescription for liquor shall keep a record * * * and the druggist to whom addressed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But the word "druggist," as used in this connection, is intended to cover a person running a drug store. He may have a number of persons engaged who are not pharmacists, and no one but the pharmacist can sell it.

Mr. WALSH. Then, you may address a permit to a druggist that does not have a pharmacist, and all the good that it would do would be to have the pleasure of addressing the druggist.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 14, line 4, after the word "relief," strike out the words "to him from some ailment specified in the prescription."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do this in order to make an inquiry. I have not participated in the debate upon this bill, for I see there is not much use in doing so. Certain people seem to have decided that the bill shall pass practically as presented, and it seems to be going just about the way they have decided, so what is the use? We may as well accept it, but do not let us be any more ridiculous than we are obliged to be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman will pardon me, but I have only five minutes. This is a new kind of prescription, so far as my experience with physicians goes, where the prescription must describe what ails the person prescribed for. If it is the desire of the Congress to change the usual methods of physicians in writing prescriptions, all well and good. In such event I shall have no objection to the phraseology and will withdraw my amendment, but as it reads here in the bill you are absolutely requiring a physician to designate upon the prescription he sends to the druggist or to the pharmacist what ails the patient. That is not fair to either the doctor or the patient. The doctor may be mistaken, and the patient may be just as well off if he does not know what ails him. This compels the physician to designate on the prescription what ails the patient.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I suggest to the gentleman that the ailment might be thirst. Why should he not specify it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.
Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman's amendment be adopted, a doctor could offer a prescription for the relief of thirst.
Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Ohio makes that suggestion also, but that is within the conscientious limits of the doctor's rights.
Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.
Mr. McPHERSON. Do not the laws of most of the States forbid physicians from giving the information that this bill seeks to have them disclose without the consent of the patient?
Mr. TREADWAY. That is what I have been trying to say, but the gentleman has put it in very much better form than I have been able to express it.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TREADWAY) there were—ayes 39, noes 62.
So the amendment was rejected.
Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move another amendment. After the word "prescription" insert the words "if he knows."
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 14, line 5, after the word "prescription," insert the words "if he knows."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a perfectly fair amendment. If we are going to require a physician to specify what ails a man for whom he has prescribed, we ought certainly to give him the right to state whether he knows what ails the man. I think it is perfectly proper. If we demand one thing, we should demand the other.
Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman that if the doctor does not know what is the matter with his patient, he would better give him calomel instead of whisky.
Mr. HERSEY. And I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how a physician can prescribe for an ailment if he does not know anything about it?
Mr. TREADWAY. It is ridiculous to require a physician to say what ails a patient. He must, in order to prescribe liquor, know what ails him. Now, you ought at least to say on the prescription, giving the doctor a fair show of not knowing everything, to say, however, "that if he knows"——
Mr. YATES. If he does not know, the doctor ought to be chloroformed.
Mr. BAER. Suppose the doctor says a man has a certain trouble, and then he dies; if his wife can prove that he had something else, could not she bring a libel suit?
Mr. TREADWAY. It looks like the doctor would be in bad, and I do think the gentleman from Missouri covered the whole question here when he said that under the law in many States he can not say what ails him. You are making a new law of a very peculiar kind.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by making it 20 minutes. I have a legitimate amendment myself to offer.
Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman question my amendment as not being legitimate?
Mr. GARD. No; another legitimate amendment.
Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.
The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was rejected.
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making it 15 minutes.
The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.
On a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 49, noes 43.
So the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.
Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the amendment of the chairman that the debate now close.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for tellers on the last vote.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio.
Mr. BLANTON. I was trying to get the attention of the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves as a substitute for the motion that the debate now close.
Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SABATH. Was not the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota carried as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio that debate should proceed for 15 minutes?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not put the motion as amended. The Chair simply put the amendment limiting the time to 15 minutes. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.
The question was taken, and the Chair announced the Chair was in doubt.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 58.
So the amendment was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota as amended.
The question was taken, and the motion as amended was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section and all amendments thereto will close in 15 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].
Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?
Mr. SIEGEL. For a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SIEGEL. Has the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts been voted upon or is it still before the committee?
The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not in accord with the terms of the bill so far as we have reached a conclusion upon it, but I do not believe we ought to make it ridiculous by offering frivolous amendments. I believe the time has come when this legislation ought to be enacted into law whether we agree to it or not. [Applause.] I do not expect to vote for the bill, but I do want the people of the country to understand that the Congress of the United States is sane and that it is going to act upon any measure that comes before it with sanity. Everybody knows that this bill is going to pass, that it is going to become a law, and whether we agree to it or not while it is pending every good American will agree to it after it has been enacted into law. Now, after we have been discussing this bill for more than a week, for more than 10 days, without reaching any conclusion upon it, let us begin to be serious, let us begin to conclude that we are going to pass the bill some time in the not distant future. We have other legislation pending waiting to come before the Congress. It is important. A great many people are looking forward to legislation relieving them of some of the taxes that are already imposed upon them. Such legislation will be presented for your consideration before many days. We have legislation which we expect to bring before the House to prevent the continuation of ships flying a foreign flag engaging in American coastwise trade. We have other important legislation which the people are looking forward to have enacted, and the only way we can reach that legislation is to enact this, for it has the right of way. Now, why delay? We know it is going to pass, and although I am opposed to the legislation I want it enacted without a moment's delay or without any frivolity. [Applause.]
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.
The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. Does the gentleman offer it as a substitute?
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARD. Does the Chair intend to dispose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?
Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment reported.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 14, line 3, after the word "medicine," strike out the language in lines 3 and 4 and including the word "specified," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the words "is necessary," so that as amended the line will read: "And shall only prescribe liquor when in good faith he believes that its use as a medicine is necessary in the prescription."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of what must appear to everyone to be sensible in the phrasing of an amendment of this kind. It is hardly reasonable to write in the statute that a man should prescribe something which in his belief will afford relief to a person for some ailment specified in the prescription, and it is reasonable to say that the physician shall be required to state or to make the prescription only when he in good faith believes this is necessary for use in the medicine mentioned in the prescription.

Now, to continue this phrase, "will afford relief to him," will speedily make doctors the most popular people in the United States, because almost anyone can conjure up something from which he might be afforded relief, but if you write it in that it is necessary in that prescription to use this liquor after an examination is made, then you will have written a sensible law.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Congress should go so far as to say that a physician must obtain a permit every time he attempts to prescribe liquor for some one whom he says is in need of it. That imposes a burden which I want the country to understand, since it places upon the great healing and curative agencies of the country the necessity of applying for a permit every time they make any prescription containing alcohol. I do not think that is contemplated by the law. But we passed that. This committee has said that it is the law. So now I want to say that when a physician does write a prescription the law is that he must say that he believes its use as a medicine makes it necessary to be put in the prescription.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think either one of these amendments ought to be adopted. There is nothing in the contention that a doctor must have a permit for every prescription. He only has to get a permit once a year. That is what this provides. We who have lived in sections where attempts have been made to enforce prohibition laws have found this to be true: That doctors are among the most difficult of any class of our people to control. There will always be somebody here or there who will undertake to license the community by issuing prescriptions for alcoholic liquor. I do not mean to say that doctors are generally lawless, but there are black sheep among them.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman believe that the language of my amendment, making it necessary for him to afford relief, would do that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My understanding is you strike out of the prescription the necessity for specifying the ailment from which he is suffering.

Mr. GARD. I do not care about that. What I particularly object to is the language "will afford relief."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It seems to me that shows the necessity, and we require him to show the necessity, by pointing out the ailment from which a patient is suffering. Now, we have this same provision in a number of statutes, and it is of great value in showing that the doctor is acting in good faith. Men who are entirely well will go to a doctor and pretend they are sick. If the doctor knows anything about medicine, he will know—and you can prove almost conclusively that he did know—that he was not prescribing in good faith, because he was not prescribing for an ailment. But if you leave it blank and say it is not necessary to specify the ailment, and without pinning him down to anything definite, he will be sure to issue the prescription, if he is reckless, and we have found in a great many instances that many are exceedingly reckless.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I not ask the chairman if he does not think that the condition to which he refers could be taken care of by requiring that every physician should specify in the book which he is to keep, included in lines 13 to 18?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is a book that he keeps under his own control.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not necessarily. It is open for the commissioner and is prescribed by the commissioner.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But the prescriptions go on file in the druggist's office, and the prosecutor can examine them there, and it is a good deal easier to make an investigation in that way, because you do not have to give the physician any notice. You simply go to the drug store and find the prescriptions, and from them you can determine, in connection with other facts, very largely whether a doctor has been honest or not. That is the object of this class of statute, and I think we ought to have the law in substantially the form it is in the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The idea of putting it on the prescription is to protect the public against unscrupulous physicians?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes, sir.

Mr. TREADWAY. Now, they could also require a physician to keep a book that is open to the commissioner or his agent. There is the place to detect the dishonesty of a physician, is it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is a thing he can change almost to suit himself from time to time. But in the other way it can not easily be changed.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield? Do I understand a physician will not be able to prescribe any wine for a patient?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no prohibition against it. It depends on whether it is necessary for him to do so or not.

Mr. SIEGEL. You use the word "liquor" here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It includes intoxicating liquors, whether beer, wine, or anything else.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to strike out the word "will," in line 4, page 14, and substitute in lieu thereof the words "is necessary to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 14, line 4, strike out the word "will" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is necessary to."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I think probably the gentleman is undertaking to accomplish the same purpose that I have in mind.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the substitute amendment met the views of the gentleman from Ohio, and also the criticism of the gentleman from Minnesota, in that it left in there the provision with respect to specifying the ailment in the prescription and at the same time substituted the word "necessary" for the language as it stands.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will further yield, what I want is to make the physician find it necessary to use this intoxicating liquor in the medicine, to find that as a fact. If the gentleman's language is better than mine, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the gentleman's amendment will it not be much easier for the doctor to certify that a certain amount of liquor is necessary to relieve a man than it would be for him to say it will relieve him? Under the language now he has got to certify that in his belief it will relieve him.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think that the word "necessary" strengthens it, because the use of intoxicants might afford relief in that it might intoxicate and thereby lessen the pain with which he might be suffering.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The difference between the gentleman's amendment and that of the gentleman from Ohio is that the prescription must show that it is necessary to afford relief and also specify the ailment?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Ohio in his amendment leaves out the various ingredients necessary in this prescription, namely, the kind and character of ailment for which this prescription is given, which is in the prescription given to the druggist and also retained by the doctor in his records, so that you may find what the prescription is given for as specified in the document itself?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. I am of the opinion that that provision ought to be retained.

Mr. RAKER. Surely.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. And that is the reason why I offered the substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I will agree to accept the gentleman's substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for one minute.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, many gentlemen on the floor of this House have very glibly discussed the medicinal properties of alcohol.

I believe the attitude of the medical profession of America toward this subject might be of interest at this time.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OPPOSES USE OF ALCOHOL.

Two years ago the American Medical Association adopted the following strong resolutions:

Whereas we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and
Whereas its use in therapeutics as a tonic or stimulant or as a food has no scientific basis: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Medical Association opposes the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further

Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent be discouraged.

Last year the retiring president, Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan, called upon the doctors of the country to take an active part in the propaganda in favor of prohibition as the greatest single factor they could control in the interest of the public health. These declarations of Dr. Bevan called forth hearty and virtually unanimous applause and approval by the association.

Let me say, further, the National Pharmacopœia is the official and recognized list of useful medicinal drugs and chemicals of the United States. It is the same to the medical profession that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are to the legal profession. This United States Pharmacopœia has been rewritten by the highest medical, chemical, and pharmaceutical authorities in the United States every 10 years during the last 90 years. It has also been revised every 5 years, and in every case is finally approved by act of Congress.

The last Pharmacopœia, revised by the representatives of the scientific societies of every State in the Union in September, 1916, does not regard whisky, brandy, wine, or beer as of any value whatever in the treatment of any disease; hence they are all omitted, and alcohol is not mentioned as a drug but only as a chemical. We thus reduce all alcoholic liquors to the status of habit-producing narcotic poisons, and should deal with them accordingly.

The contention has been made on this floor that Congress has not the authority to specify the alcholic content of alcoholic beverage drinks. I believe my friends who made this contention have forgotten that alcohol, speaking scientifically, is a narcotic poison, and that a previous Congress enacted the Harrison antinarcotic law, which specifies that certain drugs are "narcotics," and specifies in what strength or in what dilutions they are injurious narcotics and in what dilutions they may and may not be sold without a physician's prescription.

If the Congress has the authority to so legislate in regard to one narcotic, then, undoubtedly, it has the authority to so legislate against another narcotic.

FIXING THE ALCOHOLIC CONTENT OF BEVERAGES.

The gentlemen who oppose this bill contend the country is not behind it, and on that ground objection has been raised because this bill fixes the alcoholic content of beverage drinks at not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol; and yet I am informed that 33 dry States and 13 wet States have already enacted equally stringent stipulations. I contend that in enacting this legislation we only echo the overwhelming sentiment that has already been expressed by the great body of American people and rewrite a law their State legislatures have already written. [Applause.]

The Christian Science Monitor, in a timely and forceful editorial on "Enforcement of Prohibition," says:

The prohibition law in the United States must be vigorously and thoroughly enforced. That should go without saying, and it is not at all surprising, although it is reassuring, to find the Attorney General, A. Mitchell Palmer, saying, as he did the other day, that legislation by Congress defining the maximum alcoholic content of beverages is essential to the proper administration of the law. * * *

Evidently the Attorney General wants, and certainly he or whoever is to be in charge of the work ought to have, a law definite and in every way sufficient for the need. His opinion is evidently shared by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, who recently told the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee that the friends of prohibition did not want a law-enforcement code unless it defined intoxicating liquors. * * *

Mr. Palmer, it is satisfying to learn, says that the war-time prohibition law is, all things considered, being well enforced, and that in every jurisdiction where the Federal courts have not restrained the Department of Justice the sale of beer containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol has been stopped.

By all means the Department of Justice should be saved every unnecessary handicap, and should have all the help it needs from Congress in order to make prohibition enforcement effectual. There must be no failure in this work.

The contention has been made and the threat implied that a future wet Congress may repeal this law and enact a new law permitting the sale of 2¾ per cent beer and 11 per cent wine, but I say to you the voters of this country will see to it that no wet Congress, that will throttle and annul the will of the people, shall ever be elected.

THE VOTER CONDEMNS ALCOHOL.

The astounding statement was made in this House yesterday, and has been turned over and over as a sweet morsel by the tongues of those who oppose this enforcement prohibition, namely, that the people of the United States have not fairly expressed themselves on national prohibition.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in yonder Hall of Fame stands the statue of but one woman. From all the States of this Union, in 140 years, Frances Willard is the only woman so highly honored. She had a conviction and a vision. She organized the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and gave her entire life to educating America against the liquor traffic. She it was who put into the textbooks of every State in this Union temperance chapters which revealed to all the people that alcohol is a narcotic poison whether taken in large quantities or small. Then came the great organizing efforts of the Anti-Saloon League, which gathered up the educated sentiment and by a clear majority of all the voters put 30 States dry. Thus more than 75,000,000 of free, liberty-loving Americans deprived themselves, if you please, of all the imaginary blessings and benefits of alcoholic beverages. Of 2,989 counties in the United States 2,374 of them voted out the saloon. Nobody compelled them to do it; they did it of their own free will.

In local-option and State-wide elections an ever-increasing dry sentiment has voted not only against the stronger alcoholic drinks but against wine and beer as well. And then after 8,000,000 of voters had petitioned the Congress and the Congress had debated the questions for years, pursuant to Article V of the Constitution of the United States, the eighteenth amendment was, by more than a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress, submitted to the legislatures of the various States for rejection or ratification.

The ratification by 36 State legislatures would have made the amendment a part of the basic law of our Nation, but the sentiment in favor of this amendment was so universal that 45 legislatures ratified it in an incredibly short time. Even Massachusetts, including the city of culture, baked beans, and booze, which has for years and years debauched the semi-civilized natives of Africa with strong drink, fell into line along with the home States of the great wet cities of New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Detroit, and Cincinnati, until to-day only the three small States of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Jersey have failed to ratify.

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States were ratified by 11 States, and three—Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Georgia—failed to ratify.

The eleventh and twelfth amendments were ratified by three-fourths of the States.

The thirteenth amendment was a prohibitory amendment, and specified in section 2 that Congress should have power to enforce that article by appropriate legislation. That is the kind of legislation and that is the precedent we are following to-day. That amendment was ratified by 27 of the 36 States.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the fourteenth amendment, which provides for your seat and mine in the Halls of this Congress, was alternately approved and disapproved by many of the States, and never was approved by several of them, and yet I hear no complaint from any Member of this House against the fourteenth amendment.

The fifteenth amendment was ratified by 30 of the 37 States. The sixteenth amendment was ratified by 36 States, while 12 failed to ratify.

The seventeenth amendment was ratified by only 36 of our 48 States; but the eighteenth, or national prohibition amendment, was ratified by 45 States within 13 months after it was submitted, leaving only 3 States which have to this date failed to ratify.

Gentlemen, I submit to you that this eighteenth amendment, the enforcement of which we are now providing for, has been ratified by a larger number and a greater proportion of States than any other amendment that has ever been submitted, and yet gentlemen have the temerity to propose that it be nullified by lack of enforcement.

If we may believe the history of our land, no other constitutional amendment was ever backed by public sentiment as this one is.

It is too late for the foreign brewer, who would destroy our institutions, to cry out for help and sympathy. The country is saloonless to-day. The people have spoken. The fate of John Barleycorn has been decreed; the death knell is sounding. There is no turning back.

The little woman who occupies a niche in our sacred Hall of Fame has done her work too well. She has educated the school children, the parents, and the citizenship of this fair land to the dangers of alcoholic beverages of whatever strength, and they in turn, through school, church, and home, are to-day demanding an enforcement law that will forever end the beverage liquor traffic in America. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 14, line 18, after the word "addressed," add a new section to be known as section 7½, as follows:

"SEC. 7½. No physician authorized to issue any prescription for liquor under this act shall have or keep his office or shall examine any persons with the purpose in view of prescribing liquor or issue any such prescription in any drug store, pharmacy, or place where liquor is sold under authority of this act in any room, apartment, or place immediately connected therewith, except that such physician shall have had his office in such drug store, pharmacy, or place for a period of at least one year immediately preceding and prior to the going into effect of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. MILLER. This is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to a former section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But it is not offered as an amendment to the former section.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is offered as an amendment to the former section.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman can not take the gentleman from Washington off his feet.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Washington is through.

Mr. MILLER. I am not through, and you can not take me off my feet.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, he offered it as a new section and not as an amendment to the other section.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is a new section. We have concluded the consideration of section 7. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment to insert a new section, section 7½.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the Chair should sustain the right of the gentleman to offer his amendment as a new section, unquestionably; yet when other gentlemen are seeking recognition to perfect the existing section they ought to be recognized before a gentleman is recognized to offer a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. However, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER], if entitled to recognition at all, has already been recognized.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the House will be in order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Washington has been recognized and has the floor, and can not be taken off.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. As to that, the Chairman recognized the gentleman who said he offered an amendment to the section. As that amendment could not be debated, what good would it do for the gentleman to undertake to maintain that recognition?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman has lost his recognition, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. Now, the gentleman offers it as a new section, and inasmuch as others are seeking recognition to offer amendments, I insist that he is entitled to recognition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Was not the time limited to 15 minutes, Mr. Chairman, on section 7 and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. TREADWAY. Section 7 was completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offered an amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I beg the Chair's pardon. He offered a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. Time had been fixed for debate on section 7 and all amendments thereto to 15 minutes. That time has expired. Any amendment in the nature of a new section, under the former ruling of the Chair, has been held to be an amendment to that section, and therefore all debate on section 7 has been exhausted. The gentleman from Washington will be permitted to have his amendment put as an amendment, but it is still an amendment to section 7, and the debate on section 7 has been concluded.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Regular order!

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not reserve the right to object when the regular order is demanded.

Mr. RAKER. It will save time. I want to know——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized later. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, let me understand how this situation is. Is the gentleman offering an amendment to this section and asked unanimous consent to debate it for three minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. He is.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not object to that.

Mr. DYER. I do not understand that the gentleman from Washington offered his amendment to the preceding section. He offered it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The only way it can be offered is as an amendment to the preceding section. It certainly can not be offered as an amendment to section 8, which has not been read.

Mr. DYER. He offers it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this section is leveled at the scalawag doctor. Every Member of this body who has had any practical experience as a prosecuting officer or, much more, has had experience in the executive department of a large city, knows that there are a certain number of scalawag doctors located in every city. The practical workings of the prohibition law in my State and in my city were in this wise: Some 800 or 1,000 saloons were put out of business. Eighty or a hundred new drug stores started up, authorized to sell liquor on a doctor's prescription.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. No; I have only two minutes. These new drug stores were authorized to sell liquor under a statute similar to this. These drug stores would employ a doctor, whose office would be in the drug store. The doctor would receive his office rent free. He would prescribe liquor, and it would be sold in the drug store in which the physician had his office. It made a perfect farce of the law. These doctors could be dealt with only by the medical associations of the State—a long and tedious process, which often allowed the doctor to escape discipline for such miserable and scoundrelly conduct. I know that if you put this provision into this bill it will eradicate this kind of a doctor. It will put some teeth and some hobnails into this bill in that particular. My experience has been that this was one of the most troublesome points in an honest administration of a prohibitory law in the State of Washington, and I submit to this committee in all good faith that there is a necessity for some such a limitation as this upon the place where doctors shall keep their offices.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I do not. I have only a minute left. I provide in this bill for that class of country druggists who have been operating for one year prior to the going into effect of this act, where the proprietor is a physician living in the same building. If any proprietor of a drug store who is a practicing physician has had his office there for one year prior to the going into effect of this act, this law is inoperative as to him. I suggest the wisdom of some such provision as this. It likewise prohibits bootleggers from trafficking in drug stores, as they frequently do when State laws have similar provisions.

Mr. SABATH. How will this operate as to the thousands of physicians who are coming back from the other side and who have had no offices in the last year or two?

Mr. MILLER. Those men do not want to open their doctor's offices in drug stores where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Mr. SABATH. Their offices are mostly in drug stores.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no; they are not. If there should be one in Chicago or anywhere else, he better get another place for an office besides a place where liquor is sold.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER) there were—ayes 68, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 14, line 4, after the word "prescribes," to insert the words "is necessary and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as fololws:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRIGGS: Page 14, line 4, after the word "prescribes," insert the words "is necessary and."

Mr. SIEGEL. I make the point of order that we have passed that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] was to section 7, and any germane amendment to section 7 is in order.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that this amendment——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order that there is no further debate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 50, noes 10.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment to strike out the section, but since the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] was carried I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has no amendment pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the commissioner shall cause to be printed forms of the prescriptions herein required, and he shall furnish the same, free of cost, to physicians. The prescriptions shall be printed in book form. Each shall be numbered with consecutive serial numbers from 1 to 100, and each book shall be given a number, and stubs in each book shall carry the same numbers as and be copies of the prescriptions. The books containing such stubs shall be returned to the commissioner when the prescriptions are used, or sooner, if directed by the commissioner. All unused, mutilated, or defaced blanks shall be returned with the book. No physician shall prescribe and no pharmacist fill any prescription for liquor except on blanks so provided.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been directed to line 22 on page 14, where it says:

Each shall be numbered with consecutive serial numbers from 1 to 100.

Does that apply to the books or to the prescription blanks? Does that mean that the book shall have a serial number or that the prescription shall have a consecutive number from 1 to 100.

Mr. TREADWAY. Read the next line.

Mr. GARD. These books shall have a number and the numbers in the book range from 1 to 100.

Mr. WALSH. I think instead of the word "each" we should say that the prescription blanks shall be numbered and then each book shall be given a number.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will yield, would it not make it clear to strike out the period and say that the prescriptions shall be printed in book form and shall be numbered in consecutive serial numbers?

Mr. WALSH. That would correct it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend after the word "form" line 22, page 14, strike out the period and strike out the word "each" and insert the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALEXANDER: Page 14, line 22, after the word "form" strike out the period and strike out the word "each" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We are now considering the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I want to tell this committee that every representative in the house and every member of the senate in my State, most of whom were elected with my assistance, voted to make this amendment a part of the Constitution of the United States. One of the firmest purposes I have here, if I know myself, is to pass a sensible, reasonable law in good faith, to enforce the great benefits that that amendment will give to the people of this country.

Criticism has been made by some gentlemen that the defects in this bill are not pointed out. I would like to vote for this bill, because the people of my district, and I believe the people of the United States, want the saloons suppressed and the sale of liquor stopped in this country. But if this bill ever becomes a law in the state it is in now the prohibition cause will receive the greatest injury, and it will come from this senseless bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must proceed in order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am speaking to the motion to strike out the last word. Every time one of these provisions is called to the attention of the committee, objection is made.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I again make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am doing so, because the proposition is to strike out the last word. Whenever a provision that will injure the cause of prohibition is sought to be amended or corrected the chairman has cited the fact that the States have a code and that these things are being done in the States.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman is diverging somewhat from his amendment. The point of order is sustained, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. In what way is the gentleman out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not confining himself to the amendment. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, the proposition in this clause which has just been read is to regulate the prescription blank, to regulate the practice of medicine, and the gentlemen who come forward and speak here say that the bill is designed to strike down the practice of an illegitimate physician. What authority has this Congress to regulate the practice of medicine?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. I must decline to yield. What right have we to put a ban on the sale, the manufacture, or the importation or exportation of drugs that are brought in for medicines, sold for medicine, manufactured for medicine, or extracts which are made for household use? Will some gentlemen who favors this senseless clause in this bill tell what clause it is in the Constitution that gives this Congress authority to regulate disreputable physicians? In the State of Iowa the laws against the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage have been held not to cover the sale of intoxicating liquors if sold for some legal purpose, sold for drugs, medicines, and in my own State, where I have been a prosecuting officer, and in most of the States, there are laws that license these physicians to practice, and the States have authority to regulate their practice and punish the granting of bogus prescriptions or prescriptions issued not in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on this section and all amendments thereto in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. GARD. I move to amend by making it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to make it 10 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 59, noes 44.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, as amended by the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MCPHERSON]. This bill is to have one of two effects. It is to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors or it is to accomplish nothing. Those who voted against the submission of the eighteenth amendment and who are opposed to prohibition in any form are the ones who tell us this law is too drastic. They assure us we are injuring prohibition by adopting it. I think this a safe rule. If we are trying to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, and the measure we offer meets the opposition of those who want no prohibition, we are driving pretty straight at the object we have in mind. [Applause.] There is no surer evidence that this bill is going to enforce the eighteenth amendment and make the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors an impossibility than the fact that every gentleman here who is opposed to prohibition denounces the bill. Whenever you find yourself in agreement with your enemies, you know you are wrong. If this bill met the approval of those who are opposed to prohibition, it would be wise for us who want prohibition to amend it.

I am curious to know why the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors should be authorized simply because some doctor should write a prescription prescribing it. If it is true that the laws of some States, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. McPHERSON] says, make it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor as an intoxicating liquor, but if it be sold and called a medicine the sale is no violation, then you have no prohibition in those States. His statement leads to this absurdity: If I sell an intoxicating liquor in one of those States as an intoxicating liquor, I violate the law, but if I sell it as Jamaica ginger, though I am selling the same liquor for the same results, it is not a violation of law. This condition makes it all the more necessary that this act be written into law in order that we may protect the people in those States where they have that unfortunate interpretation of the law.

I am no fanatic on the subject of prohibition. I do know, however, that the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution has been ratified. I know it becomes operative on the 16th day of next January. I know we are charged by the mandate of the people to provide some means for its enforcement. If we are going to discharge that mandate honestly, we must provide a means for its enforcement that will enforce it. If the people, then, do not want it enforced, and these gentlemen who here tell us we are ruining prohibition by reason of writing so radical a bill are correct, the people can amend the Constitution again. But I venture this assertion: If these gentlemen who denounce this bill as being too radical, and thereby injuring the cause of prohibition, believe their own statements, every God-blessed one of them would vote for it. [Applause.] I know this, because it is apparent they do not want prohibition, and if they believe we are destroying prohibition they would bid us Godspeed.

Some gentlemen have sought to strike from this bill the definition of intoxicating liquor, and suggest that we should use the term "intoxicating liquor," and leave always open the question of fact, whether the liquor so offered for sale is intoxicating or not intoxicating. That plea comes from those who are the enemies of prohibition. If we are to have no further trafficking in liquor, why leave any question open to construction which can breed only confusion.

Honestly, are we to effectually enforce this amendment to the Constitution? If so, how can any law be too drastic? We aim at a complete prohibition. Any law that accomplishes that destroys the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquor. Any law that does not do that does not enforce the eighteenth amendment and fails of what the people asked us to do. For myself I know what I aim to do. If I do not accomplish that, I fail.

I aim to write a law under which the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes shall cease. I aim to write a law that will drive from this country the curse of drunkenness. Crime, ignorance, and poverty will go with its going. The world then will be a better world for those who now live and toil in it; and these, and those who come after them, will have occasion to bless this day's work of ours.

If we shall fail them, sometime, somewhere we shall have to answer to them, both those now living and those who shall live after them. I am trying not to fail them.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 14, line 21, after the word "physicians," insert the words "who have obtained permits to issue prescriptions."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not think that the committee would object to that. The provision as it is left makes it the duty of the commissioner to furnish these prescription forms to all physicians, and the jacklegs would get prescription blanks as well as legitimate physicians who have a permit. I think it ought to be limited to those who have permits. I do not think it is necessary to take up the time to discuss it further.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 14, line 19, strike out the language of section 8.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am led to offer this amendment because I think the law is complete in two provisions without this. It provides, beginning with line 8, that the pharmacist shall make an indorsement and cancel the prescription and make this a part of the record that he is to keep, and it provides that physicians who issue prescriptions for liquor shall keep a record, alphabetically arranged; and section 8 provides, what seems to me to be an unnecessary thing, a printed stock form of prescription. Now, it can not be defended unless one would say the stock forms of alcohol or liquor prescriptions are to be made popular, and if they are not to be made popular, then the other provisions which we have about prescriptions being filled and about their being canceled and about the record being made by the physicians are ample. All that section 8 does is to require the commissioner to print, at the public expense and to furnish free of cost to the physicians, a certain form of prescription, which shall be printed in book form, and slips to be numbered from 1 to 100, inclusive.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Certainly, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. How will the enforcement of this provision interfere in any way with the jackleg physician? Will the commissioner have authority to deny permits to certain physicians and issue them to other physicians? Does not the gentleman think these men whom it is sought to regulate will secure permits because it is the only business they have?

Mr. GARD. Absolutely not. This will have one effect in my mind. Reference has been made to so-called scalawag physicians. There may be such; I do not know; but if there be such, the quickest way to make them popular is not to furnish them with a book numbered from 1 to 100. This provides them with a book by means of which they may issue 100 alcoholic contents prescriptions. It affords no protection to the public. It simply affects no purpose at all but advertisement.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I do.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does not the gentleman think it would be an advantage to know how much of these prescriptions they are issuing? This will put a check upon them and show whether or not they are issuing them in large quantities.

Mr. GARD. I submit to the chairman that the language in section 7 and in other portions of the bill provides in every way for a return by the pharmacists and a return by the physicians, and that constitutes a double record.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But is not the gentleman aware——

Mr. GARD. One makes a return of his prescriptions and the other makes a return of the prescriptions as filled, and that makes the record.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that in many instances druggists and doctors would be in a conspiracy together in reference to this matter?

Mr. GARD. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the experience.

Mr. GARD. I do not think we can go so far as to say there is to be a very large conspiracy between druggists and physicians to violate the law in this respect.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is a good deal of curiosity here as to what is a jackleg physician. We do not have them in Boston, and a good many Members of the House would like to be informed as to what is a jackleg. I hope some one of these distinguished gentlemen from other parts of the country who have used the word "jackleg" physicians will advise us in the North as to what a jackleg is.

Mr. GARD. I do not speak advisedly of either jackleg or scalawag. I am simply using the words as some one else used them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the action upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio prevent other and perfecting amendments to this section?

The CHAIRMAN. If a perfecting amendment is to be offered, it must be offered at this time.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to strike out the letter "s," at the end of the word "prescriptions," in line 21, page 14, and insert it after the word "form."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understand it is agreeable to the chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 14, line 21, strike out the letter "s" after the word "prescriptions."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, you can not offer an amendment striking out letters from a word. You can strike out the word and put it in singly if you want to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want to modify his amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. With the consent of the committee, I will modify my amendment so as to strike out the word "prescriptions."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 14, line 21, strike out the word "prescriptions" and insert in lieu thereof the words "prescription forms."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "forms," in line 22, and insert the word "blanks."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am simply using the same word that has been used before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment: Page 14, line 21, strike out the word "forms" and insert in lieu thereof the word "blanks."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. MORGAN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands a division.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to move to strike out the word "of," in line 20, page 14, and insert in lieu thereof the word "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 14, line 20, strike out the word "of" after the word "forms" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for.'

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. We are going to have the forms for the prescription blanks, which is not the intention, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—yeas 37, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that his amendment having been adopted, it seems to me that on page 15, line 2, for the purpose of symmetry, the word "prescriptions" ought to be stricken out and the words "prescription forms" inserted.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on line 2, page 15, that the word "prescriptions" be stricken out and the words "prescription forms" inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 15, line 2, strike out the word "prescriptions" and insert in lieu thereof the words "prescription forms."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 15, line 4, strike out the word "blanks" and insert the word "forms."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, there is a motion pending, the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], to strike out the section.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move to strike out the word "blanks," in the last line of that section, and substitute the word "forms."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 15, line 6, strike out the word "blanks" and insert the word "forms."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That if at any time there shall be filed with the commissioner a complaint under oath setting forth facts showing, or if the commissioner has reason to believe, that any person who has a permit is not in good faith conforming to the provisions of this act, or has violated the laws of any State relating to intoxicating liquor, the commissioner or his agent shall immediately issue an order citing such person to appear before him on a day named not more than 30 and not less than 15 days from the date of service upon such permittee of a copy of the citation and of the violation charged, at which time a hearing shall be had unless continued for cause. Such hearing shall be held within 50 miles of the place where the offense is alleged to have occurred. If it be found that such person has been guilty of willfully violating any such laws, or has not in good faith conformed to the provisions of this act, such permit shall be revoked, and no permit shall be granted to such person within one year thereafter.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 15, line 18, after the word "held," strike out the language "within 50 miles of the place" and insert in lieu thereof the words "within the county."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the only purpose I have in this is to substitute the ordinarily and usually accepted jurisdiction in all criminal cases of the jurisdiction of the county for this vague, elastic, intrastate, or interstate term of "50 miles."

Under this language the hearing as authorized by the commissioner may be held within 50 miles of the place where the offense is alleged to have occurred. It may be possible for the offense to have occurred in the State of Kentucky and for the man being required to go over into the State of Tennessee or into the State of Ohio or into the State of West Virginia or some place where it would be most inconvenient, if not absolutely impossible, for him to go.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no provision in this act for the appointment of a commissioner in the various counties. The jurisdiction of commissioners under the Federal courts extends over various counties. Under the gentleman's amendment would the gentleman want the commissioner to be compelled to travel around like a circuit rider from county to county to try these cases?

Mr. GARD. It is better for the commissioner to have to travel around than to compel people to be inconvenienced.

Mr. BARKLEY. They should be brought to the commissioner's office.

Mr. GARD. No. The commissioner can not have an office every 50 miles. He will have to travel about anyhow. He is not the resident United States commissioner.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily. It may not be more than 100 miles between the two points where the courts are held.

Mr. GARD. That would be unusual. The gentleman realizes that in his State, and every State that I know of, every criminal offense must be tried in the county where the offense is alleged to have occurred.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not in the case of State offenses.

Mr. GARD. I am not speaking of State offenses.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is an offense under the Federal law. The man is brought to the commissioner for trial, not to the county where the offense is committed. I do not see why an exception ought to be made in that rule in the violation of the liquor law as differentiated from other cases.

Mr. GARD. The exception is made for the difference of 50 miles. If that exception is made, why not make it a sensible and legal exception within the county?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. The "commissioner" here means the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any of his agents or servants. It does not refer to the commissioner of the Federal court.

Mr. GARD. Yes. It refers to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and his agents.

Mr. BLACK. You are not filing this complaint with the commissioner of the Federal court, but with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I think that would make more reasonable the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio offers. There might be some good reason in the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky if it referred to the commissioner of the Federal court.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, the provision regarding 50 miles was not intended to require the commissioner to go away as far as possible. It was intended to keep him within reach, so that a person who was tried would not have to go too far. In the State of Ohio, no doubt, the county would be more convenient than 50 miles in a certain direction. But out in our western country, where you have counties that are perhaps 100 or 200 miles long, you can readily see that if he were moved from one county to another it might be very much more than 50 miles. If the limitation of 50 miles is not fair, then the remedy is not to say that it should be inside the county, but the remedy is to make the number of miles less.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this provision is that no person charged with this particular wrongdoing shall be tried more than 50 miles from the place at which the offense is alleged to have occurred.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That does not mean that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall try these cases in person, for we find on page 8, that any act authorized to be done by the commissioner, may be performed by any assistant, or agent designated by him for that purpose. Under this provision the designated assistant, or agent of the commissioner will sit in these cases, and the defendant will have a trial not more than 50 miles from the place at which the offense is alleged to have occurred.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. That is the object of it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Section 9 provides the manner of procedure when a man is charged with having violated the laws of any State in regard to liquor. Under this section is it not possible that a man charged with violating the laws of the State of Ohio may be summoned before the commissioner in the State of Kentucky, where he can not summon his witnesses to attend?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He can not force his witnesses to attend anywhere, I suppose. This will be as convenient for him, I suppose, as any other. We want to keep it near the place where he lives.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I heard the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] in regard to a man having to go across the line from Ohio to Indiana or from Kentucky to Illinois. If this provision would enable a man to be taken 50 miles, would it enable the commissioner to take a man from one State into another? If not, why not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Constitution of the United States prevents that.

Mr. BEE. The Constitution of the United States is amended in this instance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you fixing to try a man in one State for a crime committed in another State?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are not undertaking to try a man at all. It is simply to investigate his permit, the permit that has been given to him, and like all that class of proceedings, of course, it is informal. It is not a trial.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know is whether you are proposing in Illinois to try a man charged with an offense committed in Missouri?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. It is not a trial.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it?

Mr. GARD. It is a hearing to revoke his permit, and you can take him from Missouri to Illinois.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not move to close debate now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. GARD. I move to amend by making the debate close in 10 minutes. I have two amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Make it 20 minutes.

Mr. GARD. I only desire time to offer my amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves as an amendment that debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I move as a substitute 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. It would be an amendment in the third degree. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt, and ordered a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 38.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. I offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McKEOWN moves to strike out the words "in the county" and substitute the words "in the place of residence."

Mr. SABATH. I desire to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that every time any amendment is offered there are some gentlemen here who start out with the idea that it is in the interest of bootleggers, crooks, and criminals. Now, we in the wet States have not had any such experience. We do not know what experience the gentleman from Minnesota has had or if everybody in his State is a crook and can not be trusted. [Laughter.] I believe this amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Ohio should prevail, because if the law remains as it is now many violators of this law, bootleggers and illicit-still owners, will escape prosecution, because there may be no place where they can be tried within 50 miles of the place where the offense is committed.

Mr. McKEOWN. As I understand, it is a civil procedure, a proceeding by which they may take away a man's license.

Mr. GARD. It is a hearing to revoke a permit.

Mr. McKEOWN. And the purpose is to give the man an opportunity to be heard without being dragged away an unusual or unnecessary distance, or too far, when he is charged with having violated the law.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman for the explanation, but I was under the impression and still believe that it was for the purpose——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Not now—that it was for the purpose of giving these bootleggers and criminals of whom the gentleman speaks opportunity to get away from being tried, or at least that these fraudulent doctors might escape.

Mr. RAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, instead of limiting it to 50 miles, where it would take a man from one State into another, would confine it to the county.

Mr. SABATH. To the county.

Mr. RAKER. Then he would know where the hearing would be held.

Mr. SABATH. He would know where the hearing would be held, and it is for that reason that I favor the gentleman's amendment, fearing that some of these bootleggers and criminals in these prohibition sections might escape punishment, and I desire that they be punished.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio simply clarifies what the framers of the bill undoubtedly intend, namely, that a man shall not be taken over 50 miles from his home; but the 50-mile limit would permit a man to be taken from one State into another. Undoubtedly the framers of the bill did not intend that; but if you confine it to the county, then the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would hear the application in the county where the respondent lived.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the pure-food law men are required to come even as far as to the city of Washington to have a hearing as to whether a permit shall be revoked. Now, granting that in some cases——

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield for a long argument.

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a question. Granting that in some isolated case a man might have to go over a State line in order to appear before the commissioner or his agent upon a question that the commissioner would pass on, what harm would be done?

Mr. RAKER. The framers of the bill had something in their minds when they said 50 miles. It only clarifies it and makes it certain.

Mr. McKEOWN. The 50-mile limit was undoubtedly prescribed because they knew that in the Federal courts in civil cases you can summon witnesses to come 50 miles and not beyond that.

Mr. RAKER. If you pass this amendment, it will prevent trouble and hardship in the enforcement of the law. A man who has a permit to issue prescriptions under the law has a privilege that he ought to be permitted to exercise. Now, Tom, Dick, and Harry ought not to be permitted to file charges against that man without the right to be heard, and the locus should be fixed, namely, within the county.

Another thing that is not provided, but which should be: When a deputy commissioner hears a case and decides that a high-class physician is alleged to have violated the law, on charges preferred by somebody who is not worthy to be believed under oath, that physician ought to have the right of appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or some other tribunal, but here he is given no such right at all.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose this amendment carries and a case arises in the District of Columbia. Where would that man be tried?

Mr. RAKER. The District of Columbia, of course.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the last suggestion of the gentleman from California is an important thing. This commissioner is not a judge, and yet he has the power to destroy the reputation of a physician or a druggist. The druggist or the physician has no right of appeal.

Mr. RAKER. Certainly there will be complaints under the law, and any scalawag will have the power to ruin the druggist or the physician. He ought to have protection, and every safeguard ought to be thrown around the honest physician and allow him to have an opportunity to be heard if the deputy commissioner decides against him.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer two amendments in the line of the remarks of the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. There are already two amendments pending.

Mr. GARD. I desire to have mine offered at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, has time for debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes remain.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this legislation, but I want to suggest to the chairman that this section puts it in the hands of a deputy commissioner to destroy the reputation and standing of any physician or any druggist in the United States. A man under investigation has no right or opportunity to defend in the ordinary sense. It is within the power of the man occupying the position of commissioner or of deputy to put a judgment of cancellation upon the permit, and the druggist or physician has no right, no opportunity, of appeal, and he has no right of trial. I want to appeal to the chairman of this committee and to the gentlemen on this committee that no such arbitrary power has ever been exercised in the history of government without oppression and corruption, and no such power ever will be exercised without oppression and corruption. A prejudiced or corrupt commissioner could place an order of cancellation of permit against a druggist or a physician which would practically destroy him, and such physician or druggist would have no right to a public trial of any sort. There must be given that right of appeal and of trial which experience has shown is essential to justice for the citizen, and which experience has shown contributes toward official probity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McKEOWN) there were 20 ayes and 56 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were 40 ayes and 48 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the two amendments that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 9, after the word "showing" strike out the words "or if the commissioner has reason to believe."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 15, line 24, after the word "thereafter" strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That such person may by a court of equity have the action of the commissioner reviewed, and the court may affirm, modify, or reverse the action of the commissioner in revoking such permit. During the pendency of such action the permit shall be temporarily revoked."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That no person shall manufacture, purchase for sale, sell, or transport any liquor without making at the time a permanent record thereof showing in such detail as may be required by regulation the amount and kind of liquor manufactured, purchased, sold, transported, used, or otherwise handled, together with the names and addresses of persons connected with each transaction and the time and place thereof. A verified report of facts required to be recorded shall be made to the commissioner for and at the end of every three months and within 10 days thereafter. The commissioner may prescribe the form of such record and report and designate where such record is to be kept and when and where the reports are to be filed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 2, after the word "transport" insert "except for medicinal purposes upon the prescription of a duly licensed physician as provided in this act."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I realize that Members who are not on the Judiciary Committee have not had the opportunity to give this bill the thoughtful study that the members of that committee have, and it may be that I do not have in mind a correct interpretation of the section now under discussion. That is why I call the matter to the attention of the chairman of the committee.

In section 6 it is provided that no one shall manufacture, sell, purchase, transport, or prescribe any liquor without first obtaining a permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That is undoubtedly the purpose of the House, and I think is a proper provision; but an exception is made in the following language:

Except that a person may purchase and use liquor for medicinal purposes when prescribed by a physician as herein provided.

No exception is made, however, as to the matter of transportation, and it seems to me if a person goes to his physician, for example, in his home town, who has a permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prescribe liquor, and gets a prescription, but is unable to get that prescription filled in his own town—and there will be a great many instances of that kind—and he must go to an adjoining town and get that prescription filled—if he is compelled to do that, it seems to me that he ought to be able to bring the liquor back for medicinal purposes without laying himself open to arrest.

Under this law, if I understand it correctly, he would be absolutely prohibited from transporting it. That is to say, if he gets on the train and has a limited quantity of liquor which has been prescribed by his physician in his possession and transports it to his home town, he will be guilty of violating this law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose a member of his family was sick in the country, would not the same thing apply?

Mr. BLACK. It probably would, but I am using an illustration that is not so extreme as that. I do not know whether whisky is a useful medicine. I have heard some physicians say that it is and some say that it is not, but, to say the least, we are recognizing in this law the right of a citizen to have a prescription given by a licensed physician who has a permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and we ought to give reasonable opportunity for such use in proper cases. The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution permits the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes, and therefore Congress would not have the right to prohibit the transportation for such medicinal purposes. It may lawfully prescribe proper rules and regulations for such transportation, but not entirely prohibit it. The amendment that I have offered provides that no person shall manufacture, purchase for sale, sell, or transport, except for medicinal purposes upon the prescription of a duly licensed physician as provided in this act, without making at the time a permanent record thereof, and so forth.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any force in the contention, because I do not think the man would be held to be transporting liquor in the instance cited. If there is to be any exception, I think it should come at the end of the section. This does not cover prescriptions at all.

Mr. BLACK. I just want to get the correct state of facts. If a person purchases liquor and transports it under this section, even for medicinal purposes, he would have to file a report with the office of the Internal Revenue Commissioner every three months.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the commissioner required it. There is a possibility, but it seems to me that if we want to make any amendment at all, it would better come as an exception at the end of the section. We have used the word "transport" all the way through in connection with common carriers, and I do not think there is any necessity for this exception.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, if the word "transport" is limited to transportation by a common carrier, the contention of the gentleman from Minnesota would be correct, but I do not think the word has any such narrow interpretation.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We have used the word "carrier" practically all through. I do not think the courts would construe it to include anything else. I do not think any court would ever say that simply because a man was carrying something from the store to his home he was transporting it.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman knows now that under the Reed amendment if a man has liquor in his grip for his own personal use on a common carrier, he is transporting it. The Reed amendment, however, does not prohibit transportation of liquor for medicinal purposes, and neither do I think this act should do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to the wording that follows there:

As may be required by regulation.

Does not the gentleman think the proper authority can regulate the conditions arising? They may not have to make any report if the regulations do not require it. If it becomes a means of abuse, the regulations can call for a certain report. I think there is a give and take in there that will take care of the situation anticipated.

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree with the gentleman, because the language is specific:

A verified report of facts required to be reported shall be made to the commissioner for and at the end of every three months and within 10 days thereafter.

Evidently that is intended to cover a druggist and a pharmacist who are selling for medicinal purposes, and was not for the purpose of requiring such a report from a person who merely had a prescription filled according to law.

Mr. FOSTER. And why not the other fellow, if he goes into the business of bootlegging? Then he shall report as may be required.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand it, this provision is intended to cover the sale of liquor for a lawful purpose. Of course, bootleggers are amply taken care of by other provisions of this act.

Mr. FOSTER. I know; but it is intended to prevent the men from illegally abusing that privilege.

Mr. BLACK. But it is not intended to cause the man who purchases the liquor upon the prescription of a recognized physician to file all of these reports.

Mr. FOSTER. But the person who fits in between him and the bootlegger.

Mr. BLACK. Anyone would fit in, according to the apparent interpretation of the words.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the point made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] illustrates one of the things in this bill which cause Members to wonder at some of the strange provisions which are in it. We are undertaking in this bill not only to regulate intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes but we are undertaking to regulate the business in liquors, whether intoxicating or not, and whether for beverage purposes or not, and we are endeavoring to regulate every possible activity in connection with beverages. I called attention to the fact that in this bill as it stands now you can not use liquors for other than beverage purposes unless you can find the authority for it in this act, and in many instances you can go through it and you can not find authority to do certain things that are proper in themselves. In some sections of the bill it is specifically provided that the authority must be found in the bill. Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] challenged those who opposed this bill to state whether they would favor the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. I concede that question is not now before the Congress, because when we adopted the constitutional amendment we passed upon that and submitted it to the people and they adopted the amendment. It did prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. I submit that they have not ratified an amendment which prohibits intoxicating liquors for anything other than beverage purposes, and that they have not adopted an amendment which prohibits the personal use or possession of intoxicating liquors which might be held at the time when it was not a violation of this amendment. I have prepared a bill which I think will enforce the eighteenth amendment. I am in favor of enforcing it, but I am opposed to the Federal Government going into the business of enforcing police regulations in every village and every county of the United States. I am opposed to the Federal Government taking over the business of the States to enforce their own laws and in some measure to enforce this constitutional amendment, as they have the right to do. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to have the Clerk read this bill in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill of the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 1. Whoever, on and after the date when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, shall knowingly manufacture, sell, or transport within the United States, or import into the United States or export from the United States, any intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 2. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors, shall investigate and report violations of this act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who is hereby charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as in the case of other offenses against the laws of the United States; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors may swear out warrants before the United States commissioners or other officers or courts authorized to issue the same for the apprehension of such offenders. Section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby made applicable in the enforcement of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby respectively authorized to appoint and employ such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees as they may deem necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be required for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. IGOE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the bill just read can be enforced, and if the statements of the Attorney General are correct—and I am sure they are—as to the enforcement of war-time prohibition this can be enforced as well or better, and it will not take about $50,000,000 a year and an army of spies and agents, as will the bill submitted by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto now close.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Will that prevent the offering of an amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. DYER. May I offer it now?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair puts that motion may I ask a question concerning this section?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I withhold the motion.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In line 10 ought not the word "and" to be the word "or"? Now, you propose that these reports shall be made at the end of every three months at the end of the month. Then you say "and within 10 days thereafter." Should it not be "or within 10 days thereafter"? The purpose is to give, in respect to these reports, some leeway, that they shall make it at the end of every three months and still have authority to make it within 10 days thereafter.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is intended to give them 10 days after the end of the month.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But you use the word "and," which seems to contemplate they shall report at the end of the three months and then again within 10 days thereafter. I suggest the word "or" will relieve any question of any objection of that sort, if that is what is meant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DYER, Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, on page 16, line 10, I move to amend by striking out the word "and" and inserting the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 10, strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. DYER. I offer an amendment on line 2, after the word "sale," to insert the word "import."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 16, line 2, after the word "sale" insert the word "import."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend by adding the words "and export."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD to the amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 16, line 2, after the word "sale," and after the word "import," offered in Mr. DYER's amendment, insert the words "and export."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct the language. It is absolutely necessary. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. This is to correct the language and make it intelligible. On line 5, after the word "purchased," insert the word "imported," so that it will read:

May be required by regulation the amount and kind of liquor manufactured, purchased, imported, sold, transported, used, or otherwise handled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 16, line 5, after the word "purchased," insert the word "imported."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Page 16, line 2, after the word "sale," insert "or for free distribution."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Has section 11 been read yet?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 11 has not been read. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 2, after the word "sale," insert "or for free distribution"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all manufacturers and wholesale or retail druggists shall keep as a part of the records required of them a copy of all permits to purchase on which a sale of any liquor is made, and no manufacturer or wholesale druggist shall sell or otherwise dispose of any liquor except at wholesale and only to persons having permits to purchase in such quantities.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the chairman's attention to the word "druggists," on line 15. You will find on page 14, line 8, that it refers to a pharmacist who must keep a record. If you turn to page 15, you refer back to "druggist," and you use the words "druggist" and "pharmacist" without any discrimination at all, meaning at one time the same thing and at both times the same man. To make it clear, does not the chairman think we should put in "pharmacist" following "druggist"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. GARD. Is there any such thing as a wholesale pharmacist?

Mr. DYER. There may be in California, but I never heard of one.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, you can go down town and you will find them acting as pharmacists—wholesale and retail. You will find them both ways.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman evidently refers to "speakeasies." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will refer to page 19, line 12, he will find "druggists" referred to there.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. You say "druggists" and "pharmacists" just as the words strike you, when in fact you mean the same man. Let me read:

The books containing such stubs shall be returned to the commissioner when the prescriptions are used, or sooner if directed by the commissioner. All unused, mutilated, or defaced blanks shall be returned with the books. No physician shall prescribe and no pharmacist fill any prescription for liquor except on blanks so provided.

Now turn back to lines 13 to 18 on page 14. I read:

Every physician who issues a prescription for liquor shall keep a record, alphabetically arranged, in a book prescribed by the commissioner, which shall show, among other things, date, amount prescribed, to whom issued, directions for use, stating the amount and frequency of dose, and the druggist to whom addressed.

When as a matter of fact you direct your prescription to the pharmacist who fills your prescription.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no. The pharmacist is authorized to fill a prescription, but the druggist may not be himself a pharmacist. He may be the man who owns the drug store and sells the drugs. He is not authorized to fill prescriptions. There you must use the word "pharmacist." The pharmacist may be the employee of the druggist.

Mr. RAKER. That is the reason why I ask the distinguished gentleman if he did not believe the word "pharmacist" should be inserted after the word "druggist" on line 18.

Mr. BARKLEY. He answered the question by saying he did not think so.

Mr. RAKER. If he does not think so, of course that ends my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That all persons manufacturing liquor for sale shall securely and permanently attach to every container thereof, as the same is manufactured, a label stating name of manufacturer, kind and quantity of liquor contained therein, and the date of its manufacture, together with a copy of the permit authorizing the manufacture thereof; and all persons possessing such liquor in wholesale quantities shall securely keep and maintain such label thereon; and all wholesale druggists shall attach to every package of liquor, when sold, a label setting forth the kind of liquor contained therein, by whom manufactured, the date of sale, and the person to whom sold; which label shall likewise be kept and maintained thereon until the liquor is used for the purpose for which such sale was authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the chairman a question: Do you not think it is time to quit?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I thought we might be able to finish this section.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is Saturday night, and we want to get ready for church and lay in supplies for Sunday. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. We are entitled to a half holiday on Saturday.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, on page 17, line 4, I move to strike out "wholesale druggists" and insert "persons selling at wholesale."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 17, line 4, strike out the words "wholesale druggists" and insert "persons selling at wholesale."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 16, line 21, after the word "sale" insert the words "under the provisions of this title."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARD. A division, Mr. Chairman. Is not that what the gentleman wants?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio demand a division?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I suggested that.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Did not some one vote against that?

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes are 33 and the noes are 0. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of every carrier that transports liquor to secure a permit therefor and make a record at the place of shipment of the receipt of any liquor transported, and he shall only deliver liquor to persons who present a verified copy of a permit to purchase and an affidavit to the carrier that such liquor will not be used in violation of law. The form of the affidavit shall be prescribed by the commissioner and shall contain such information as he deems necessary for the enforcement of this act. The copy of such permit and the affidavit presented to the carrier to obtain such delivery shall be made a part of the carrier's permanent record at the office from which delivery is made.

The agent of the common carrier is hereby authorized to administer the oath to the consignee, who, if not personally known to the agent, shall first be identified before the delivery of the liquor to him. The name and address of the person identifying the consignee shall be included in the record.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SABATH. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. The section provides for an affidavit declaring that such liquor will not be used in violation of the law. How could such carrier make such affidavit?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The carrier does not make it. The consignee who comes there and asks to get it must make the affidavit. He has to file it with the carrier.

Mr. SABATH. That might be a wholesale druggist or a wholesaler. If he will sell to a retail druggist, how can he tell what use the retail druggist will make of it and make an affidavit that such retail druggist will not use it in violation of the law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He can make the affidavit that he will sell it for a certain purpose. He will only be required to make an affidavit such as the law requires.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Does the provision apply to deliveries made to city customers by wholesale druggists?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It refers to anyone who gets any consignment from a common carrier.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. But the wholesaler delivers by means of his own automobile or wagon. How do you provide for that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He would not be a common carrier.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That it shall be unlawful for any cosignee to accept or receive any package containing any liquor upon which appears a statement known to him to be false, or for any carrier or other person to consign, ship, transport, or deliver any such package, knowing such statement to be false.

Mr. GARD. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question for information. I realize that we have passed section 14, but I wish to ask what is meant by the words "That it shall be unlawful for a person to induce any carrier"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think that is common English.

Mr. GARD. I know, but what does it mean?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It means just what it says.

Mr. GARD. Is that all the explanation I am offered on that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it is perfectly plain.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) there were—ayes 62, noes 42.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 61.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That it shall be unlawful to advertise liquor, or the manufacture, sale, keeping for sale or furnishing of the same, or where, how, from whom, or at what price the same may be obtained. No one shall permit any sign or billboard containing such advertisement to remain upon one's premises or circulate any price list, order blank, or other matter designed to induce or secure orders for intoxicating liquors. But nothing herein shall prohibit manufacturers and wholesale druggists holding permits to sell liquor from furnishing price lists, with description of liquor for sale, to persons permitted to sell liquor. The commissioner and other officers charged with the enforcement of this title are authorized to remove, paint over, or otherwise obliterate any such advertisement from any sign, billboard, or other place, and shall do so upon the demand of any citizen who has first requested the person in charge of such advertisements, or the owner of the property on which it is located, to remove the same.

That any advertisement or notice containing the picture of a brewery, distillery, bottle, keg, barrel, or box, or other receptacle represented as containing liquor, and designed to serve as an advertisement thereof, shall be within the inhibition of this section.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, should there be any exception after the first sentence in section 17? It seems to me that is a pretty broad prohibition, that it shall be unlawful to advertise liquor. It says nothing about the purpose for which it may be sold. Now, liquor is defined to include a great many things. The only exception is in the case of druggists. I just wondered if that was not too broad.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is impossible to make any exception without practically destroying the whole law.

Mr. SABATH. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. The chairman offered an amendment to one of the sections, amending the provision relating to manufacturers and wholesale druggists, substituting the words "and wholesale dealers." Is it not the intention also to amend this provision here so that it shall comply with the previous amendment which was offered and adopted?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This covers both. Manufacturers and wholesale druggists are both enumerated here.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That it shall be unlawful for any person to permit any employee to procure liquor for or give direction or information by which liquor can be secured by any person, and no person shall solicit or receive from any person any order for liquor or give any information of how liquor may be obtained in violation of this act.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 20, in line 9, to strike out "permit" and insert the words "give permission to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMALL: Page 20, line 9, strike out the word "permit" and insert in lieu thereof the words "give permission to."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the language employed in the section is ambiguous and doubtful of meaning and might be used in such a way as to perpetrate an injustice against the citizen. This section is intended to inhibit the employer from giving permission to any employee to give information as to where liquor may be secured. In using the words—

That it shall be unlawful for any person to permit any employee—

the language, as I say, is so uncertain and difficult of construction that it might involve an injustice. I think the language—

That it shall be unlawful for any person to "give permission to" any employee—should be substituted. The chairman of the committee indicated by a question his opposition to the amendment. What is the meaning of the word "permit"? Is it an affirmative act, or will simple inaction be construed as permitting?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It means suffering it to be done. It would be possible in very few instances to prove the affirmative giving of permission, but you might perhaps readily be able to prove that he suffered it to be done having knowledge of it, and that is permitting it. I think the language in the bill should be permitted to remain, and not the language proposed by the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the position of the chairman of the committee is this: That the liberty of the citizen is to be jeopardized by the finding of an issue upon circumstantial evidence as to whether or not he suffered or permitted a thing to be done. Various circumstances may be offered in evidence, declarations made along analogous lines, various indirect actions may be testified to showing that the employer permitted a thing to be done. I submit that in drafting a criminal statute, under which a citizen may be punished, that language which simply says "if he permits a thing to be done" ought not to be used, but rather affirmative language, "if he gives permission." A person may give permission in various ways. It may be indirectly by language, the interpretation of which is to the effect that he has given permission. It may be contended that he gave permission in various indirect ways, and the evidence might be introduced to prove that he permitted and suffered a thing to be done. If you make unlawful the giving of permission to do a thing, that is something entirely different. I submit, in conclusion, that the liberty of a citizen ought not to be jeopardized; that a thing ought not to be made unlawful by language which says "if he permits" a thing to be done.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. He may be almost guilty if he did not prevent it being done.

Mr. SMALL. Certainly. I think while we are legislating about a matter which does not involve the right of persons or property, but only about a matter which is called mala prohibita, we ought to use definite language for that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor unless he states that he is speaking in opposition to the amendment. Under the rule there is five minutes for and five minutes debate against the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. But I have been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California was recognized. No one opposing the amendment was asking for recognition, and the Chair had a right to suppose that those opposed to the amendment waived their right to recognition.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I again call this language to the attention of the chairman of the committee and the committee generally. It is clearly not what they intend, that it shall be unlawful for any person to permit any employee—whose employee? His own or some one else's. Not the employee of some one he does not know. If he passes by and sees the employee of another man procuring liquor, under this provision he is guilty of an offense by which he can be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not less than so many days and not less than so many years. What the committee intended is, no doubt, that it shall be unlawful for any person to permit any of his employees to procure the liquor or give it away or furnish information where it is to be found.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. What does the gentleman understand by the word "permit"?

Mr. RAKER. That is hazy and very indefinite, but I want to raise the other question, calling to the attention of the committee that this language is unquestionably not what the Committee on the Judiciary want. I am not going to offer an amendment, but I am calling it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. VENABLE. Assuming that it is so amended and to mean his own employee——

Mr. RAKER. Then it would mean something.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will yield, I assume that anybody who wants to be reasonable would not want to adopt this general language but would adopt the language in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from California—that it shall be unlawful for any employer to permit his employee, and so forth.

Mr. SABATH. That is not the intention of the chairman.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes, it is. The chairman wants to enact a law that will be operative and effective.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask the gentleman from California to offer the amendment, as follows——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. RAKER. But I am yielding to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. But the gentleman can not yield to him to offer an amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suppose I can address the gentleman and the Chair without the consent of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order against the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RAKER. I am yielding for a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would ask the gentleman from California——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Missouri is asking the gentleman from California——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for five minutes. Half of the time has been consumed by the objections of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in my own right to offer an amendment. I move to amend by striking out the words "any person," in line 10, page 20, and inserting the words "an employer knowingly," and in line 9 by striking out the word "any" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "his."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALEXANDER: Page 20, line 8, strike out the words "any person" and insert in lieu thereof the words "an employer knowingly," and on page 20, line 9, strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "his."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend as a substitute by inserting after the word "person," in line 8, page 20, the word "knowingly," and in line 9 to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "his." I think the word "person" should remain there, because it is defined to include corporations, companies, and other associations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 20, line 8, after the word "person," insert the word "knowingly," and on line 9 strike out the word "any" and insert the word "his."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that there are already two amendments pending.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee, I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota in lieu of mine.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Missouri withdrawing his amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer. In line 10, on the same page, after the word "can," insert the word "unlawfully."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 10, after the word "can," insert the word "unlawfully."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, because the motion I had in mind is the same motion, or has the same effect, though I think it expresses it in better language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 20, line 11, after the word "person" where it appears the first time in the line, insert the words "in violation of this act."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, that is the same language that appears at the end of section 19, and I assume you want to put it in after the word "person," so as to make it more harmonious.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It reads better without a repetition in the section. The meaning is exactly the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. I move to amend the section as amended so that it shall read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to procure liquor for or cause or give direction or information by which liquor can be secured by any person—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Better put it in writing.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this section may be passed over temporarily.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this section may be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to dispose of it while it is in our minds, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take a recess for 30 minutes while the gentleman from Mississippi is preparing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to take a recess in the committee is not in order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this section be deferred until section 20 is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. A similar request has been made and objection has been made.

Mr. RAKER. Let us dispose of it now; it will take but a minute.

Mr. FIELDS. I confine it to section 20 only.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that further consideration of this section be postponed until section 20 is disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. DYER. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DYER. I ask that the Clerk read it.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUBEY. I was just wondering while the gentleman—a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEY. That while the gentleman from Mississippi—I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VENABLE: Page 20, line 8, amend the section as amended so as to read: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to procure liquor for, act as the agent of, procure liquor for, or give direction or information by which liquor can be secured by any person."

And so forth.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that amendment is this: What the section is evidently striking at is anyone acting as the agent of another in the procurement of intoxicating liquors. Now, the vice of the section as I understand it lies in this, "that it shall be unlawful for any person to permit an employee." Now, what does that mean? What is meant by "permitting an employee"? What can the employer do? What can he do to keep him from giving information? You have a host of questions that might arise in the trial of the case. The language is vague. Now, I submit that if you condemn anyone giving any information, anyone acting as an agent in the purchase and procurement of liquor, anyone, whether he be employer or employee, who takes any part in the procurement of whisky or takes any part in making the sale under the general principles of law, is guilty. Your statute is specific and clear. Otherwise no one knows what is meant by "permission." It condemns and punishes one for permitting another man to do a thing. What does that mean? Does that mean that the employer is to use physical force to prevent his employee?

Now, if he lets him go, knowing that he is going, is he guilty? How can he prevent it? If he lays his hands upon him, he is guilty of assault and battery and himself punishable. What in the world can he do? In other words, I submit to the committee that the language as drawn does not mean anything.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLIVER. Evidently the first part of this paragraph was intended to punish the party who sought information as to where liquor could be obtained or who should suffer another to obtain liquor for him. The latter part of it is intended and does punish the agent who gives information or procures it for another. I think the first part is inaptly drawn, but that is evidently the purpose of it—to punish not only the man that procures it, but also the man who suffers or permits it to be obtained for another.

Mr. VENABLE. The purpose of it, as I understand it, is to make unlawful the giving of any information or taking part in any way in the sale of liquor; in other words, for acting in any wise as the agent of the purchaser. And if you denounce that plan generally you will not need to specify the employer, because if he takes part in the act in any way in any legal sense, he is liable as a principal anyhow under the general provisions of the law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this section was designed to meet this situation: Quite often in hotels bell boys are very apt to know where liquor can be obtained. They are suffered to supply the guests of the hotel with it. Now, hotel men know all about it and are glad to have the bell boys do so, and profit by that business. To reach those people you must be able to show, and in most cases you could not, that direct authority was given. But there is no doubt that these hotels know and in almost every instance tacitly, if not expressly, give their consent to this nefarious traffic.

Mr. VENABLE. Suppose you had a hotel keeper who knew that a porter, for instance, was going out and securing liquor, and did not do anything to encourage the porter or prevent him from doing so?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are going to put that man out of business. If an employee is doing an illegal business in his employer's house, there is not a court anywhere that would make the employer suffer if he fired him.

Mr. VENABLE. I know; but you can not punish a man under the Constitution of the United States for mere passivity. You can not punish a man because he does not——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not yield to the gentleman any further. There is no doubt in my mind that we can punish an employer for this kind of an act. Men may be declared guilty for suffering a wrong where they have the power to prevent it, and it is their duty to prevent it. If a man is running a hotel, for instance, we make it his duty to see that the law is not disobeyed by his employees where he has knowledge of the unlawful act.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two persons are present, a quorum. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 2.

Mr. GALLIVAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SABATH. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The count discloses that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the count discloses that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. DYER. That is not the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The count does not necessarily establish that fact. The Chair has just counted.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. DYER. It is too late.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that the demand for tellers is not in order to verify the finding of the Chair on the question before the House.

Mr. SABATH. I am not asking for it for that reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was to close debate. For that reason the Chair thinks the vote may be taken by tellers. Those who wish the vote to be taken by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Four gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] to insert new language. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VENABLE: Page 20, line 8, amend the section so as to read: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to procure liquor for, act as the agent of, procure liquor for, or give direction or information by which liquor can be secured by any person," etc.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Are the words in the amendment "act as agent for" and "procure for" separated by commas? That is manifestly an error.

Mr. VENABLE. That is an error. I think the term "procure liquor for" is used twice. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the superfluous words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will repeat his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. VENABLE. The words "procure liquor for" are used twice. I ask unanimous consent that one of them be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the words "procure liquor for" where they appear the second time in the amendment be stricken out of the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, may we have it again reported as it is?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VENABLE: Page 20, line 8, amend the section so as to read: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to procure liquor for, act as the agent of, or give direction or information by which liquor can be secured by any person," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That it shall be unlawful for any person to drink liquor in or upon any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance. Any conductor or person in charge of any car, train, autobomile, boat, or other public conveyance may arrest any person therefor who is being conveyed in or by such car, coach, automobile, or other public conveyance, and turn him over to the proper officer to be proceeded against according to law.

Mr. VOLSTED. Mr. Chairman, on line 19, page 20, I move to strike out the word "coach" and insert the word "train."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 20, line 19, strike out the word "coach" and insert the word "train."

Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. FIELDS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee desires to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] will be recognized if he wants recognition.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; I do desire it. This change was made to correspond with the enumeration in line 15, and does not make any change, except that it applies the same language to the two sections. After the word "automobile," line 19, I offer to insert "both." That is another amendment. That is to make the two lines harmonize.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to ask if you do not think it better to qualify the word "automobile" in the two places? That would mean a public as well as a private automobile. I have an automobile, for example, and if a friend of mine should take a drink in it, and it is not a public conveyance, I do not think I should be held responsible criminally.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The words used are "or other public conveyance."

Mr. STEVENSON. That does not assume the term "automobile" to be a public conveyance. It says "any automobile."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have no objection to having that amended. I have not any objection if the gentleman sees fit to offer the amendment. My impression is, however, that this is sufficiently qualified, so that no one would think it meant anything else.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It strikes me that the language is clear. It says public conveyances, and they are enumerated. There are boats that are not public conveyances, there are cars that are not public conveyances, automobiles that are not public conveyances, but the trains, boats, and cars referred to are all public conveyances of that character.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What about airships?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. What I desire to ask the chairman is this, the provision states that any conductor or person in charge of any car, and so forth—do not the words "any person in charge" include a porter of a Pullman or a Wagner car?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He is not in charge of it.

Mr. SABATH. We have only one conductor on a train, perhaps, but the 8 or 10 cars have a porter on every one of those cars. Why not give the power also to the porters? You know the colored gentleman will watch the thing mighty close. I want to know whether that is included or not. Does that include the porters?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FIELDS: Page 20, line 16, after the word "conveyance," strike out the remainder of the section and insert the following language:

"It shall be the duty of any conductor or person in charge of any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance to report any violation of this section to the United States attorney of the district in which the offense is committed with the names of persons having knowledge of the offense."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman think that would be very effective? This is for the purpose of protecting the passengers.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, this section says it shall be unlawful to take a drink of liquor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is rather a strange contention. There is nothing new or revolutionary in this proposition. This is a provision intended to protect the people who are in these public conveyances. If a man drinks liquor in any such conveyance, anyone there can see that he is violating the law. The conductor or person in charge must, of course, satisfy himself that his passenger is violating the law. If he does, he may take that man out of the conveyance and turn him over to some officer. We have a similar statute in our State, and I know it is a common provision in a great many States. The provision suggested by the gentleman is ridiculous. Very little, if anything, would be gained by having the matter reported to the district attorney.

Mr. FIELDS. It would be the duty of the district attorney to have the witnesses summoned before the proper court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is intended to help protect the passengers in public conveyances, and that is why this power is given. You can not always get an officer. It is in line with the statutes authorizing a person to arrest anyone who commits a crime in his presence. I venture to say that is the law in the gentleman's own State. It is the law almost everywhere, that when you see a man violating the law you have a right to arrest him. I move that all debate upon this amendment now close.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to have some time on the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Then I move that all debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate upon the amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 82.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion before the House is that of the gentleman from Minnesota, that debate upon this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. GARD. I move to amend by making it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to amend by making it 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the gentleman's motion to apply only to this amendment or to the section?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. To the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that debate close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. No one wishing to debate the amendment, the question will be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments which I desire to offer, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 20, line 14, after the word "to," at the end of the line, insert the word "publicly."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to this amendment, since I suspect it is the object he has in mind. The amendment inserts the word "publicly" before the word "drink," so as to make the offense the drinking in public. I presume it is for the protection of the passengers on these boats and trains.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BAER. If there is only one person in the car, he would not be drinking it publicly.

Mr. GARD. In that event there would not be very much offense about it, but it would be public.

Mr. BARKLEY. There would be just as much danger to the passengers if a man went into a closet and drank the liquor and finally became drunk.

Mr. GARD. I think the object of this is to prevent the drinking of liquor in public.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no danger in the mere drinking of it. It is in the drinking of it in public.

Mr. RAKER. Other people would want it if he drank it in public, and it might incite a riot.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if he came out of some secret place and people smelled his breath there might be a riot, too.

Mr. GARD. I am discussing this question seriously, and am desirous of asking the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, if I may—I do not desire to protract the argument—if this amendment does not meet the purposes of the gentleman to prohibit public drinking on trains, in cars, automobiles, and so forth?

Mr. MONDELL. May I inquire of the gentleman what he has in mind when he refers to "public drinking"?

Mr. GARD. Yes. If a man gets on a train where there are men, women, and children and stands in a car and drinks some intoxicating liquor out of a bottle or any other container he has.

Mr. MONDELL. And if he got under an umbrella I suppose it would not be public drinking?

Mr. GARD. No; I would not go to that extreme, but will say while he is in the coach.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I do not think that ought to go in, because one of the objects is to prohibit men from getting drunk in these public places. It seems to me, in view of the fact that if they can prove that he has been drinking in a car, then it was done publicly.

Mr. GARD. Suppose a man or woman is overcome by train sickness and they took a small drink, a glass of brandy or something of that kind, under this law they would be punished?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, they have not any right to do it.

Mr. GARD. They have not any right? Why, it might save their lives. An occasion of that kind might arise. Brandy and whisky are prescribed for heart trouble. Gentlemen laugh, but nobody can dispute that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. If I have time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The National Pharmacopœia, which is the official recognized list of useful medicines and drugs, does not contain whisky, brandy, wine, or beer.

Mr. GARD. I am not finding any fault with the National Pharmacopœia.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am giving the gentleman the authority, the same as the decisions of United States courts are to attorneys.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I say to the gentleman the best physicians in New York reported very recently that whisky and brandy were necessities in cases.

Mr. GARD. I submit it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Absolutely that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move that all debate close on this section——

Mr. GARD. I have another amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the motion that all debate close on this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Wait a moment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Just a moment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. I want to amend the motion of the gentleman by moving that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. I desire to offer another proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 64.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order of no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Division!

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 63.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum was pending as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asked for a division. Division has just been had upon another question, which reveals that a quorum is present, and I take it that it is not necessary to have another division.

Mr. SABATH. How many gentlemen were present?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, if he will not accept an amendment to close the debate at the end of five minutes? I have been trying to get a few minutes on this section, which I think is an important one.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I can not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment that the debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion as amended. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to two features of this section which I think are worthy of serious attention. We have a like law in Virginia, and if we possess the authority to pass this section I heartily favor it with one necessary amendment.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to the fact that under this section as it is written a conductor is not limited, although the offense is a misdemeanor, to making arrests on view of the offense, but he is empowered to make arrest after the offense has taken place, on the suggestion that it has occurred. I do not think we should confer this power on the conductor.

Mr. GARD. Is it not also true as to this language, "turn him over to the proper officer to be proceeded against according to law," that there is no penalty for the crime?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand that there is a general penalty provision in this bill.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not a fact that under this provision every taxicab driver in the United States has the power to arrest?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I prefer not to take up that inquiry, but will give an illustration with respect to the operation of this section should it become a law as it is now written. Take for instance a train running from Alexandria, to Danville, Va. Suppose a man gets on at Alexandria and takes a drink, not however in the presence of the conductor. The train continues on its way, and in due course reaches Danville. At this point some one goes to the conductor and suggests to him that John Smith, who is in the act of getting off the train, took a drink at Alexandria, six hours earlier in the day. Under this bill as it now reads the conductor would have the right, although he never saw the offense, to arrest the party and turn him over to whatever authority is designated. No conductor upon the facts suggested should have the power of arrest without warrant.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman very ably argued in regard to this constitutional amendment and the fact that this was a lawful enforcement of the constitutional amendment. Does the gentleman find anything in the constitutional amendment as to this section?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman really think that this section is no part of the law?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am heartily in favor of this section with one amendment, but doubt our power to enact it. To take a drink, is to use spirits. The amendment does not forbid such use.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I object to that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes. My time has been taken up by questions. I wish to present to the chairman of the committee this constitutional question——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may have three minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am entirely in favor of the section if we have the authority to enact it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks for additional time?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I ask for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks that his time be extended for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Congress has no police power within the States. The terms of the amendment fix the limits of our authority. With respect to the sale, transportation, manufacture, exportation and importation, we enjoy concurrent authority with the State to pass a statute of enforcement making effective the inhibitions of the eighteenth amendment. But this is use. To drink on a train is use; and use is not forbidden by the constitutional amendment. What warrant of law therefore can be found for the contention that within the State lines, and in intrastate traffic exclusively, the Congress enjoys the authority to say that a citizen may not take a drink on a railway train? That query certainly merits full consideration by this body. If authority can be found in the Constitution to support this section, then I favor its enactment, with an amendment to the effect that the arrest must be made upon view of the offense.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will offer a perfecting amendment first, and that is in line 18, so that it will read "any conductor or person in charge may, in view of the offense," to make it conform to the general laws of the country.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It comes in on line 18, after the word "may." Insert the words "in view of the offense."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 20, line 18, after the word "may," insert the words "in view of the offense."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUBEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: On line 15, page 20, after the word "liquor," insert the words "as a beverage or is drunk."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Or is intoxicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. After the word "or," in the same line, insert the words "is intoxicated."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 15, after the word "liquor," insert the words "as a beverage," and after the word "or," in the same line, "is intoxicated."

The CHAIRMAN. There are two "ors" in that line. Where does the gentleman from Minnesota desire it to come in?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. After the first "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. Is debate closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the section. The time for debate has not closed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not desire to detain the committee, but I want to say that the title we are considering now is the title enforcing the national constitutional amendment, which prohibits the sale, transportation, importation, and exportation of intoxicating beverages.

Mr. COOPER. Was not all debate on this section closed after the gentleman from Virginia spoke?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mistaken. All debate is exhausted.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a proposition to enforce the eighteenth constitutional amendment. I can see nothing in this section which has anything whatever to do with the eighteenth amendment. If the chairman of this committee will show me what it has to do with the enforcement of the national amendment, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment, as follows: Strike out the period after "conveyance," on line 16 of page 20, and the word "any," before "conductor," in the same line, and add a comma and the words "and the." Then, on line 18, strike out the word "any," after the word "arrest," and substitute the word "the." On the same line and page strike out the word "therefor" and substitute the words "violating the provisions of this section," so that the section will read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to drink liquor in or upon any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance, and the conductor or person in charge of any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance may arrest the person violating the provisions of this section who is being conveyed in or by such car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance.

And so forth.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUBEY. Is the Reading Clerk a stenographer?

The CHAIRMAN. He has been compelled to be most of the day. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 16, after the word "conveyance," strike out the period and insert a comma; strike out the word "any" and insert the words "and the." Page 20, line 18, strike out the word "any" and insert the word "the"; strike out the word "therefor" and insert the words "violating the provisions of this section," so that as amended the section will read:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person to drink liquor in or upon any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance, and the conductor or person in charge of any car, train, automobile, boat, or other public conveyance may arrest the person violating the provisions of this section who is being conveyed in or by such car, coach, automobile, or other public conveyance, and turn him over to the proper officer to be proceeded against according to law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SABATH: Insert after the word "car," in line 17, page 20, the words "or any porter of any car."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in the last amendment, line 15, which I offered, there should be a modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification of amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 20, line 15, after the word "or," insert the words "to be intoxicating."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks to modify his amendment in accordance with the statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That any person who shall be injured in person, property, means of support, or otherwise by any intoxicated person shall have, in addition to the right of action against the intoxicated person, a right of action against any person who shall, by unlawfully selling to or assisting in procuring liquor for such intoxicated person, have caused or contributed to such intoxication, and in any such action the "plaintiff" shall have a right to recover actual and exemplary damages. In case of the death of either party, the action or right of action given by this section shall survive to and against his or her executor or administrator, and the amount so recovered by either wife or child shall be his or her sole and separate property. Such action may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. In any case where parents shall be entitled to such damages, either the father or mother may sue alone therefor, but recovery by one of such parties shall be a bar to suit brought by the other.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the quotation marks, line 4, page 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 4, strike out the quotation marks around the word "plaintiff."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "the plaintiff" in line 4, page 21, and insert the words "such person."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 4, strike out the word "plaintiff" and insert the words "such person."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I observe that the right of action is reserved to all that in any way may suffer damages through intoxication, which I believe in. But I desire to know whether there is anything in this bill that protects the rights and property of thousands upon thousands of our citizens who in good faith invested large sums of money, in many cases all they possess, not only in paying for the merchandise which they had, but also in paying to the Government taxes——

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order.

Mr. SABATH. I am propounding a question to the chairman. In addition to that, they had to pay large sums of money for merchandise——

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the situation, that the gentleman from Illinois propounded a question to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. That can not be; he is making a speech.

Mr. SABATH. I am propounding a question, and I will ask it in due time.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to any amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the question.

Mr. SABATH. I am.

Now these people have paid their hard-earned money for merchandise, and also have paid to the Government large sums of money in taxes. What I desire to know is whether there is any provision in this act whereby they are going to be reimbursed for the money which they have paid for the merchandise and for the money which they have paid our Government as a tax, especially in view of the fact that by the war-time prohibition we have taken away from them over six months' time within which they had the right to expect to dispose of these goods for which they paid, and on which they have paid the Government these large sums of money as a tax. Now that is my question, and I should like to know whether the gentleman has made any provision in this bill for the repayment of those sums of money; or whether, believing that he desires to be fair, as he says——

Mr. CRAMTON. I make the point of order that if the gentleman ever had the right to ask a question he could only ask it twice.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman's remarks have nothing to do with the last word.

Mr. SABATH. I have not finished my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to his amendment, which is to strike out the last word.

Mr. SABATH. Does the Chair hold that I must confine my remarks to the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is made, the gentleman must confine his remarks to the question under discussion, and the question under discussion is the motion of the gentleman to strike out the last word.

Mr. SABATH. The last word is "other." The last two words are "the other." Now, what I want to know is whether "the other" people who are not directly mentioned in this bill are going to have the same rights and the same privileges in the protection of their property as those who are mentioned in the beginning of the section. And I want to know whether these other people are going to receive justice at the hands of the gentleman from Minnesota and the other side of this House.

Mr. YATES. I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. IGOE. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-five Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. IGOE. I move that the committee do now rise.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Ask for tellers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has a perfect right to demand tellers on the count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order to demand tellers.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move a call of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move a call of the House in committee. Ninety-five Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a quorum present. Four more men have come in since the Chair counted.

Mr. IGOE. I have made a motion that the committee rise. Is that in order?

Mr. BLANTON. A roll call has been ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order. The gentleman moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the motion that the committee rise is voted down, will we then go back to the roll call? Will the automatic roll call come then?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if a quorum develops on this count, what becomes of the point of no quorum? It will do away with the necessity of calling the roll, will it not?

The CHAIRMAN. If upon this vote it should develop that a quorum is present, the committee will then proceed with its deliberations without calling the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 71.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The committee refuses to rise. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That an action to enjoin any nuisance defined in this title may be brought in the name of the United States by the Attorney General of the United States or by any United States attorney or any prosecuting attorney of any State or any subdivision thereof or by the commissioner or his deputies or assistants. Such action shall be brought and tried as an action in equity and may be brought in any court having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity cases. If it is made to appear by affidavits or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the court, or judge in vacation, that such nuisance exists, a temporary writ of injunction shall forthwith issue restraining the defendant from conducting or permitting the continuance of such nuisance until the conclusion of the trial. Where a temporary injunction is prayed for, the court may issue an order restraining the defendant and all other persons from removing or in any way interfering with the liquor or fixtures, or other things used in connection with the violation of this act constituting such nuisance. No bond shall be required in instituting such proceedings. It shall not be necessary for the court to find the property involved was being unlawfully used as aforesaid at the time of the hearing, but on finding that the material allegations of the petition are true, the court shall order that no liquors shall be manufactured, sold, bartered, or stored in such room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or place, or any part thereof. And upon judgment of the court ordering such nuisance to be abated, the court may order that the room, house, building, structure, boat, vehicle, or place shall not be occupied or used for one year; but the court may, in its discretion, permit it to be occupied or used if the owner, lessee, tenant, or occupant thereof shall give bond with sufficient surety, to be approved by the court making the order, in the penal and liquidated sum of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, payable to the United States, and conditioned that intoxicating liquor will not thereafter be manufactured, sold, bartered, kept, or otherwise disposed of therein or thereon, and that he will pay all fines, costs, and damages that may be assessed for any violation of this title upon said property.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here, which I desire to offer as an independent section, which I send to the desk.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-eight Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. BARKLEY took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 72.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote as reported by the tellers discloses the lack of a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6810 and had found itself without a quorum, that he had directed the roll to be called, and that 214 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he reported the names of the absentees to be printed under the rule.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES].

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to section 23, as an independent paragraph, to be numbered 23½.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, would it not first be in order to correct the text of section 23?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is in order, as it perfects the text.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 23 insert the following:

"SEC. 23½. That any person who shall, with intent to effect the sale of liquor by himself, his employee, servant, or agent, for himself or any person, company, or corporation, keep or carry around on his person or in a vehicle or other conveyance whatever, or leave in a place for another to secure, any liquor, or who shall travel to solicit, or solicit, or take or accept orders for the sale, shipment, or delivery of liquor in violation of this title, is guilty of a nuisance and may be restrained by injunction, temporary and permanent, from doing or continuing to do any of said acts or things and from otherwise violating the provisions of this title. In such proceeding it shall not be necessary to show any intention on the part of the accused to continue such violations if the action is brought within 60 days following any such violation of the law."

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentlemen upon this floor that I have directed my remarks heretofore toward the gentleman who is known as the "bootlegger," yet I make a mistake by calling him a gentleman. I shall not detain you, due to the lateness of the hour, but a moment or two with any question or debate I may have in my mind on this amendment. I shall take it for granted that every man upon the floor of this House understands the nature and character and the attitude of a bootlegger as well as I do; that he is the man who goes into the back alleys, either in daylight or after dark, and hands out what they call "squirrel" whisky to the drunkard and the boys, and I believe that the fathers and brothers upon this floor are as much interested in the boys of this country as I am, and if there is any gentleman upon the floor of this House that favors a bootlegger, I have not time within the limit of the time given to convince him. This law makes it possible to enjoin the bootlegger. It is copied from the Iowa statute, and, from my experience upon the bench of that State, I found that it was a most efficacious law in preventing the bootlegger from exploiting the drunkard and the boys of the community. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which is proposed is rather an innovation in Federal legislation. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES], who has graced the bench of that great State, which boasts of its prohibition views, but which found it necessary in spite of the dryness of the atmosphere to enact legislation declaring a person a nuisance, seems to me ought not to commend itself to the Congress in writing a Federal statute. This proposition was considered by the committee, and it is not in the bill as it has been reported. I do not know how they abate a nuisance in that great State of Iowa, whether it is by suffocation or imprisonment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest that the gentleman look at section 31, and he will see how they propose to abate the man who can not give bond by putting him in jail.

Mr. WALSH. I was about to state in other provisions of the bill we have provided for punishment and for restraint in case of violation of the law, but you will find in other sections of the bill that these other persons, who probably may continue to attempt to evade the law by the method known as bootlegging, I submit, can be reached. This is one of the provisions I submit in all seriousness, which I believe it would be well not to enact into law in this statute, but to leave something for the gentlemen who seek to make this country at one fell swoop bone dry by ironclad legislation. It will leave something for their future consideration. Now, I confess to being a member of the committee which has reported out this legislation, but I felt somewhat like evading or denying the soft impeachment, in view of some of the provisions of this bill. I voted to report the measure out in the full expectation that the sound, sober sense of the House of Representatives would see to it that the measure was perfected and put in such shape that it might well go on the statute books of a great Nation. But it seems that these expectations have thus far not yet been realized. I want seriously to submit, as one of those who believe that the duty rests upon Congress to enact legislation to enforce the provisions of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, that we should write a statute that will enforce these provisions, and these provisions only, and that we are not justified in writing that statute in entering into other activities and phases of the law, in conferring rights of action, and interfering with the law of dissent and the recovery of damages which are not comprehended within the provisions of that amendment, and I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will not be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this provision, or substantially the same provision, was in the bill——

Mr. OLIVER. Somewhat general.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Practically this provision was in the bill when originally introduced. As a general thing I would stand by the bill all through and not make any exception, but I said at the time it was voted out that I reserved the right to support this as an amendment upon the floor of this House. I felt that this was an important matter. Whenever this bill goes into effect the saloon will, I believe, disappear practically everywhere.

Then we will have this class of offenders to deal with, the bootleggers. It does seem to me that this kind of a remedy, which everybody acknowledges is an effective one, should be had. It seems to me it is a fair one. A court of equity can reach a man violating the law much more readily than through a criminal trial. It will be difficult to convict in this class of cases, as it always has been before a jury. And for that reason the legislatures have found it necessary to apply this particular remedy.

Now, I am not going to urge upon this House to do one thing or another, but I have felt that it is only fair that the House should understand my attitude in regard to it. Personally I believe it ought to go in.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak of what occurred before the Committee on the Judiciary, since I expect that the Committee of the Whole would like to be advised.

When this bill came to the Committee on the Judiciary it contained the amazing proposition that a man could be defined to be a nuisance. There never has been in any legislation that I ever heard of an attempt to define a man as a nuisance. Some of them may be nuisances, of course.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The courts have held that a dog is a nuisance.

Mr. GARD. Surely the gentleman does not now descend to the cavalier response that a man is a dog.

What I have to say is in all seriousness. I do not object, and no honest man could object, to the theory that every community should be purged of that person who is called a bootlegger, because I have as little regard for him as the most radical gentlemen who are in favor of prohibition. I think the bootlegger should be swept out of existence, but we should realize the limitations of law. It is utterly impossible, I say, to define a human being as a nuisance.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES] may have qualified that, and, if so, I would like him to explain, because we are engaged in writing a law. He and I agree upon the subject that a bootlegger ought to be prohibited. We have in this law a very drastic prohibition against bootleggers and punishment for them.

Now, can we—and that is what I want to know—within the law provide that a man in addition to being punished may be denominated a nuisance, because that is in the bill? I confess I can not from the mere reading of the amendment offered from the Clerk's desk understand whether the gentleman has perfected his amendment so that it would be a proper legal amendment, because I am sure he would agree with me that you can not characterize a human being in a legislative enactment as a nuisance. I would appreciate a reply from the gentleman.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not characterize the individual as a nuisance, but it does characterize the acts of the individual referred to, being in violation of law, as a nuisance. And there is no question but what it comes within the purview of the law and the power of Congress to enact this measure into law. It is the law of my State, and I have no doubt it is the law of many other States, and it has been tested; and it has not only been found to be legal but it has been found to be the best method of handling this man of whom the gentleman speaks.

Mr. GARD. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. BOIES. Yes.

Mr. GARD. In this amendment as it is stated, and more particularly in this amendment, is it necessary to find that the man first must have been convicted?

Mr. BOIES. No, sir. He may be enjoined without being convicted, but he must be found, of course, in the injunction proceeding to have violated the law.

Mr. GARD. Is not that an invasion of the law through the processes of injunction? In other words, you do not seek to convict a man of committing a crime when you seek to enjoin him from committing a crime.

Mr. BOIES. We seek to enjoin him from violating the law after it shall have been proven to a court of equity to its satisfaction that he has once broken the law.

Mr. GARD. Can you enjoin a man from the commission of burglary?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOIES. The question is not relevant.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment can be enacted into law.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] moves that all debate on the amendment now close.

Mr. GARD. I amend that, Mr. Chairman, by providing that the debate on the amendment close in 10 minutes. Certain gentlemen desire to be heard. This is a most important innovation and we want to be heard on it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, may I substitute for my motion that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], that we close debate on this amendment and all amendments to it in 10 minutes?

Mr. GARD. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I have another amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move to close all debate on this section and all amendments thereto in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARD, Mr. GOLDFOGLE, and Mr. SABATH demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is agreed to.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of no quorum myself, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am entitled to be heard, sir, on a point of order when I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The point of order is that a motion was made that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has not been made, and the gentleman has not been recognized. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes have it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, it is always in order to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. I recognize that, but no one did get recognition.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, "recognize." You could put it two or three.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I do insist on the Chair recognizing the rules of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to move that the committee rise, the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET] moved it. The Chair refused to hear it. I propose to raise the point of order, and I propose to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to make that motion?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir. I make the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is made to rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 77.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. Those who favor taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number have risen. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. OVERSTREET] will take their places as tellers. Those who favor the motion that the committee rise will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 80.

So the motion was rejected, and the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, there comes a time when a man who is elected to the House of Representatives has to realize that he has taken a sworn oath in this body, one of the greatest legislative bodies on the face of the earth, and that it is an elementary proposition that in this body certain established rules have to be observed. Those rules will be observed in this House in the future if we are to remain a deliberate body. No man or set of men exceedingly anxious to pass an act in haste will be able to prevent Members of the House of Representatives from debating a part of a bill which is the most drastic measure that has ever been presented to the House of Representatives. It is exceedingly regrettable—and I am speaking now as the first Republican elected from the twentieth district of New York for three times in all its history—that the Republican Party, which has stood for and preached free speech, liberty, and equality in all these years, should have amongst it on this floor men who would attempt in every possible way to prevent a man from getting five minutes of time to discuss the most drastic amendment that has ever been offered to any piece of legislation on this floor. The issue is whether this is a deliberate body under the Constitution, prepared to calmly consider this bill, or simply a place where the opponents of a measure are to be stifled.

What does this amendment provide? It provides a restraining order to prevent the future commission of any crime that might be committed. In the State of New York and other States of the Union I do not know of any court that ever issued any injunction restraining an individual from committing what might or might not constitute a crime. The same gentlemen who are afraid of having a jury of peers to try any of these matters in the United States courts or elsewhere exert every effort and try in every possible way to shut off debate. I ask you to solemnly consider the kind of legislation you are trying to enact. When the constitutional amendment was adopted did people think or dream that you were going to try to force through this kind of legislation which, in many respects, is unconstitutional, the kind of legislation which public sentiment will never back up, no matter how many times you may try to pull it and jam it through? As one gentleman on the floor has said, you can jam legislation through, but you can not enforce the legislation unless there is public sentiment behind it. You can force this amendment through here, you can forget every sense of right and fair dealing, but you will never get any jury or any court that weighs things coolly, calmly, and soberly to say that it constitutes law. You can try in every possible way to do it, but judges on the bench fear no man when they have taken an oath, and I appeal to you gentlemen here now to soberly weigh in the balance and consider what this amendment means. We have passed lots of amendments here to-day without sober thought or reflection.

You make it a crime for a man to take a drink within any boat, cabin, or ship, even though he is sick and has obtained a doctor's prescription. You provide further in the bill that any man can be convicted and fined and, in addition, may be put under bond for $5,000 that he will not commit any future crime of the same kind inside of a year.

Now, perchance, a salesman of a reputable house, or of a wholesale druggist, might be carrying around a sample of liquor, brandy, or wine, and you say he shall be declared a nuisance, fined, and enjoined from committing any future crime.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the American people are not in the humor or mood at the present time for such legislation. The people are asking for legislation against the profiteer. You do nothing, but are sitting on a volcano that may burst at any time, and you will be partially responsible for it, for you neglect to act on that question but instead waste days on this bill. If we flinch from speaking plainly, then the people will properly be able to say that we lack the courage of our convictions.

Mr. BOISE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read again, because the gentleman from New York seems to misapprehend the first few lines of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to call the attention of the author of the amendment to this fact. Surely the gentleman does not intend, as he says in this amendment, to make, in this bootlegging violation, a man guilty of other offenses in this act, because that is what he does.

Mr. BOIES. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARD. I ask the Clerk to read again the last few lines of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or accept orders for the sale, shipment, or delivery of liquors in violation of this title, is guilty of a nuisance, and be restrained by injunction, temporary or permanent, from doing or continuing to do any of said acts or things, and from otherwise violating the provisions of this title.

Mr. GARD. In other words you say in this act an injunction not alone restraining him from doing the things in the amendment, but for violating the other things in the title. There is no ground for the issuing of a legal judgment which would allow you to enjoin a man from doing one thing and convicting him of another. You might have a blanket injunction against all the laws on the statute books. Surely the gentleman does not intend that. I am sympathetic with the efforts to suppress bootlegging.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman believe that any court would ever enforce any such provision?

Mr. GARD. No. But, Mr. Chairman, what I rose particularly for is to offer an amendment in the time allotted to me. I desire to offer an amendment, in line 15, page 22, to strike out the words "affidavit or otherwise" and insert the words "competent evidence."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 22, line 15, strike out the words "affidavits or otherwise" and insert in lieu thereof the words "competent evidence."

Mr. GARD. In this bill as it now reads it provides that affidavits or otherwise may be the test of a man's guilt. "Otherwise" includes hearsay, rumor, and all the vague surmises that anybody may be subjected to. Now, we ought certainly to stop some place and consider things in calm reason. I know that when we reach a time like this, when men's minds are swayed by passion, they will not listen to anything, and we have now the spectacle in this House of Representatives of men under party lash and spur deliberately closing their ears to that which is nothing but the calmest and sanest reason. This spectacle in intolerance and abandonment of reason has not its parallel in the history of the House. To say, as you say here, that you can have a permanent injunction issued against a man on affidavits or otherwise to the satisfaction of the court is to open wide the door and nullify every statute of evidence that was ever enacted by a State or by a nation.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This applies only to a temporary injunction, and it is the commonest kind of proceeding everywhere.

Mr. GARD. It is at least unsworn testimony.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; an affidavit is sworn testimony.

Mr. GARD. But what do you mean when you say "or otherwise"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The court will take evidence according to legal rules. The court will take competent testimony and not take hearsay.

Mr. GARD. Then adopt the amendment that I have offered, and make it by competent evidence. If the gentleman desires to be fair—and I am sure he does—let him at least adopt the amendment I have offered, which provides for that, and let those who follow him blindly vote for it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I never knew of a temporary injunction being based on the examination of witnesses in court. It is always on affidavits.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a question for my own information. Can a commercial traveler take samples of liquor into the State of Iowa to sell in good faith to druggists or for sacramental purposes?

Mr. BOIES. He can not do that to-day.

Mr. CANNON. So that this would enjoin him?

Mr. BOIES. The gentleman will notice that the whole section is governed by the words "with intent" to do the unlawful thing. When a man starts out with the intent to violate the law, he may be enjoined, but he must have that intent.

Mr. CANNON. I am curious to know whether a commercial traveler could take his samples and sell the article to a dealer, a druggist or otherwise, in the State of Iowa. As I understand, this is a copy of the Iowa law. Assuming that this should become the law, could a commercial traveler, not a bootlegger but a man engaged in legitimate business, in good faith, carry his samples into the State of Iowa, or would he be subject to be enjoined as a nuisance?

Mr. BOIES. I do not think he would.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He could get a permit to sell. He could get a permit to carry it in under this provision. There is nothing to prevent anything of that kind, if he sells what he is legally permitted to sell under the act.

Mr. CANNON. But he must get a permit.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; that would be a permit that would run for a year.

Mr. McKINIRY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment providing for restraining by injunction, on the theory of a nuisance, anyone accused of "bootlegging" is typical of this bill.

Concealed in its phrases is a most revolutionary change that may not be appreciated by the ordinary citizen until he feels the weight of it personally. But anyone familiar with the courts and the law can see the utter disregard of many principles we have learned to hold dear.

No single judge should have the arbitrary power given by this amendment. You forget in talking of the bootlegger and the evils of bootlegging that this legal machinery can be and will be used against the man innocent of any crime. It would seem from the argument used in favor of this amendment that the prohibitionist presumes anyone charged with a violation of this law as already guilty.

I speak for the innocent man unjustly accused—for the poor man unable to hire learned counsel, and to take numberless appeals and to hire experts—who is friendless but yet innocent. Deep as is my respect for the courts, I deny that such a man under this section would always receive a fair trial. There have been and will be judges corrupt, ignorant, and prejudiced.

Now, you have stripped the defendant accused of a violation of this prohibition law of every one of those safeguards which have inured to defendants in such cases for centuries past. You have deprived him of trial by jury. You have shifted the burden of proof from the prosecution to the defendant. You have stripped him of the presumption of innocence, and now by this amendment, in what is virtually a criminal proceeding, you are taking away the final safeguard of requiring a man to be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, because in an equity proceeding a judge will simply have to determine the case according to the rules of civil cases, and a mere preponderance of proof is sufficient; and thereafter, if the court issues its injunction and the defendant is restrained, and he then violates that injunction, he may be put in jail. Thus he is stripped of the final safeguard which has been given him, namely, the right to have his guilt proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Even if I favored prohibition, I would be false to myself and to those whom I represent if I did not protest publicly against this wanton destruction of the rights of my fellow citizens—rights secured by centuries of struggle against oppression and autocratic government.

Ages of oppression and tyranny had taught our people that the safety of their lives and liberty depended on the law securing to any accused a fair trial before an impartial judge and jury. Bitter experience taught them that even with such a tribunal certain rights must be given the most humble citizen, no matter how atrocious the offense charged, and the people enacted those rights into the organic law, that they might endure for all time, and time has shown their wisdom to all, save to the reformer.

These rights are that anyone accused of crime should be presumed to be innocent until a jury of his fellow citizens had found him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and he should have the benefit of counsel and be confronted by and have the right to cross-examine the witnesses against him.

Who would dream that these simple fundamental rights should be destroyed in the name of reform?

If we really cherish the great principles of democracy, then we should fight to the bitter end against this return of autocracy—for what matters the name—be it king or prohibitionist—it is autocracy, which takes away the rights of the people. The fundamental maxims of a free government require that the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred, and no power to violate them ought to be implied from any general expression of the will of the people. Between the humblest citizen and official oppression and injustice stands the shield of the jury of his fellow citizens. No real friend of the people would take away that shield.

With regard to this particular act, I am opposed to it and intend to vote against it not only by virtue of my own personal judgment but also as the representative of a district which is overwhelmingly opposed to such legislation and to the principle of prohibition.

In the first place, it is a breach of faith with the people to whom a promise was given, as expressed in the eighteenth amendment itself, of one year to all concerned in dealing in or in the possession of alcoholic liquors.

I do not believe that the honor of the American people will permit them to condone this betrayal, especially as the violation of that promise is made legal by a forced and technical construction of the war-time prohibition act. No representative of the people can justify in good faith his action in enforcing war-time prohibition at this time, when the common sense of the people proves to them that the war is over. This, however, does not touch the real fundamental principles of my opposition to this bill and prohibition, because I am opposed to both on their merits. I believe in temperance and that the real remedy for intemperance lies in proper moral education.

Everyone who has studied the subject is familiar with the statement that alcoholic beverages in and of themselves are neither moral nor immoral; the only question of morality involved is the use or the abuse of such drinks. The very statement of that principle proves its truth. If drinking of alcoholic beverages independent of the circumstances or of the quantity consumed is so immoral as prohibitionists claim, then one must conclude that the Almighty Himself forgot to complete the Ten Commandments and should have added another in the language of this bill, "Thou shalt not drink alcoholic beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent alcohol by volume."

My opposition to this act and to this amendment is based on the ruthless violation of the most fundamental and important rights secured to the plain people of this land by the blood of those who fought to establish it as a Republic.

Primarily, it violates the personal liberty and State rights proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence and in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States. This violation of personal liberty has been brought home to the people and discussed thoroughly, but they little dream as yet of the further infringements on their long-established personal rights in the drastic provisions of this act. The people are not yet aware that government by injunction is further continued in this act, although only recently the laboring men of this country had a long struggle to abolish the vicious system of abuse of government by injunction. This act violates the confidential relation of physician and patient, a right secured and jealously guarded by the statutes of nearly every State, by compelling a physician prescribing liquor as a remedy to publish in a public record the ailment of his patient.

This act totally upsets the practice and procedure of criminal trials which were intended to secure a fair, honest, and impartial trial for the innocent man accused of crime by taking away the presumption of innocence which exists in behalf of every criminal and shifts the burden of proof by requiring a defendant under this act to prove his innocence.

It has destroyed property without compensation and will continue to destroy property without compensation and without a jury trial of the issues involved, and it further violates a constitutional protection by inflicting excessive fines and forfeitures.

One of the most dangerous and subtle provisions of this act is its interference with the exercise of his religious duties by a minister or priest of those great religions which have existed for centuries and which have been the bulwark of civilization. It places in the hands of a governmental official the control of the sacramental use of wine, and a violation of any technical provision of this act or of any State act, no matter how slight or no matter how lacking in criminal intent, can prevent such a priest or minister for the period of one year from exercising his right to celebrate the divine services required by his conscience and by his church.

Hence I must protest, even if in vain and in the knowledge that this act will probably become a law, so that the public may be informed as to the real and substantial danger and threats hidden under a cloak of reform. Those who have protested have met with the response that they do not desire to enforce the Constitution of this country, particularly this eighteenth amendment. They have been told that there must be "teeth" or "hobnails" put into this statute, and the word "hobnails" is typical of the source from which this legislation comes. The people of this country generally are waking up to the sharp line drawn between the dwellers in the city and in the country, as evidenced not only in this prohibition act but in the pending repeal of the daylight-saving law. It is very evident that the rural districts of this land intend to use their majorities in State and Federal legislatures to inflict their moral code, likes and dislikes, and to extend their influences and domination over the dwellers in the cities. For their own selfish interests they demanded the repeal of the daylight-saving law, despite the tremendous saving in the health and wealth of the country generally, because to them it was inconvenient; likewise they seem to take a malicious joy in inflicting this sumptuary prohibition legislation upon the great cities. It preserves their cider and destroys the city workers' beer.

I oppose and vote against this measure in the full confidence that I am representing the interests and wishes of my constituents, and, further, in the firm belief that before long this act and those responsible for it will meet with the full measure of condemnation of the people of the United States.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa by striking out, after the word "things," in line 10, the words "and from otherwise violating the provisions of this title."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CURRIE of Michigan to the amendment offered by Mr. BOIES: In line 10 of the amendment, after the word "things," strike out the words "and from otherwise violating the provisions of this title."

Mr. BOIES. I accept this amendment.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman accept that amendment? Just a moment ago he said he would not.

Mr. BOIES. Oh, the gentleman did not ask me to.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, is there any more time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I wanted to discuss a constitutional question, but if all time has expired I can not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The qustion now is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IGOE) there were—ayes 75, noes 44.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk, which I ask to have reported and acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 22, line 15, strike out the words "affidavits or otherwise" and insert the words "competent evidence."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOLSTEAD) there were—ayes 53, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 20, on page 23, insert the following:

"But so much of this section which follows the words 'or any part thereof,' shall not apply to any room or apartment which has not been used or employed as a saloon, hotel, boarding house, or store, or as an annex or appurtenance thereto, the intent hereof being that no room or apartment used and occupied exclusively for dwelling purposes by the occupant and his family shall be deemed to come under or within the purview of that part of this section which follows the words 'or any part thereof.'"

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, if the time has expired——

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I now desire to proffer a request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the Chair will kindly wait until I put my request—since the time has expired on the section, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that this is very seriously offered, that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, you will observe that this amendment is not intended in any wise to disturb the provisions of the section that precedes the words—

And upon judgment of the court ordering such nuisance to be abated the court may order that the room, house, building, structure, etc., shall not be occupied or used for one year, but the court may in its discretion permit it to be occupied if the owner, lessee, or occupant give bond—

And so forth.

So that the right of injunction is by the amendment itself preserved. I appeal to this body not to permit an injunction to issue against some one whose room or apartment is occupied solely and exclusively by himself and his family, and where that dwelling is entirely dissociated from any saloon or hotel or boarding house or store, and to keep that dweller and his family from occupying such dwelling for a year unless he can furnish a bond for $1,000. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary has undertaken to report a bill under which it is possible for a man and his family to be, in addition to coming under the ban of injunction, driven from home and not allowed to return thereto for a year, unless he give security to pay all damages, fines, and costs, and not violate the law in any way again. In some cases, as, for instance, of the poor man, he could through such a drastic provision be rendered homeless and perhaps shelterless.

Now, I believe the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], for whom we all have a great deal of respect and admiration, under general debate upon the bill treated of the vice that lies within this section of the bill. If you will carefully examine—and I appeal to the fairness of the other side—this provision and consider the danger that may result in driving men and their families from their homes, a home that has always been regarded, and I trust so long as the American Republic shall endure will be regarded, as his castle, you will, I hope, adopt this amendment. It merely safeguards the home of a family. Observe that the amendment carefully provides that the dwelling so to be safeguarded shall not be part of a saloon or hotel, or a boarding house, or an annex thereof. Under the bill as framed, the dweller, no matter whether rich or poor, high or humble, can be prevented from occupying that same home again unless he is fortunate enough to be able to secure a bond never again to violate the law on the premises and pay all penalties and costs. I regard that provision as vicious, as pernicious, and violative of the sanctity of the home. It constitutes an invasion of a man's dwelling and may operate disastrously upon many people who never intended to violate the provisions of this prohibition law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not able to understand what the gentleman's amendment says. I have been over it and I have read it two or three times and I can not make out what it means.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman desire it to be reported or wish an explanation from me?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I can not make sense out of it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will be good enough to look at page 23, in line 7, he will find that to the provision that follows the words "or any part thereof" my amendment is directed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Page 23, lines 6 and 7?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes, sir; line 7.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In other words, if that goes in the rest of the section does not apply, and you take all the penalties out——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is all I can make out of the proposition as I read it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, I intend that a man and his family occupying solely and exclusively a room or an apartment as a dwelling, and that room or apartment in no wise is used as a hotel, store, or saloon, or connected therewith, that then such room or apartment shall not be deemed to come under the operations of this part of the section, which, on line 7, begins with the words "and upon the judgment of the court," and so forth.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is not what the amendment says.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I ask that it be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 22, lines 11 and 12, after the word "thereof" in line 11 on page 22, strike out the words "or by the commissioner or his deputies or assistants."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I have two minutes to explain this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may proceed two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 22, line 12, strike out the words "or assistants."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. In lines 11 and 12, page 22, strike out the following words, "or his deputies or assistants."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 22, lines 11 and 12, after the word "commissioner" in line 11, strike out the words "or his deputies or assistants."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That when it appears in any criminal proceeding that any common nuisance as defined herein exists it shall be the duty of any officer authorized to enforce this act to proceed promptly in a court of equity to abate such nuisance, and in case the defendant is adjudged guilty in such criminal trial shall, unless reversed, be conclusive evidence against such defendant of the facts adjudged therein as to the existence of the nuisance. For removing and selling the property in enforcing this act the officer shall be entitled to charge and receive the same fee as the sheriff of the county would receive for levying upon and selling property on execution, and for closing the premises and keeping them closed a reasonable sum shall be allowed by the court.

Any violation of this title upon any leased premises by the lessee or occupant thereof shall, at the option of the lessor, work a forfeiture of the lease.

Mr. RAKER. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer an amendment, in line 25, page 23, to strike out the words "in case" and insert "the final conviction of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 23, line 25, strike out the words "in case" and insert "the final conviction of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. For a question.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman intend to supplement this by putting in the words "such fact" on the other line?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I intend to strike out the last three words of this line 25, the words "is adjudged guilty." Then on the next page, line 1, strike out "criminal" and strike out "unless reversed," so that the language will read "and the final conviction of the defendant in such trial will be." I offer that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to modify the amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I desire to add that to it and modify it in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 23, line 25, after the word "and," strike out the words "in case" and insert the words "the final conviction of"; page 23, line 25, strike out the words "is adjudged guilty"; page 24, line 1, strike out the word "criminal," and in the same line strike out the words "unless reversed," so that as amended the lines will read:

"SEC. 24. That when it appears in any criminal proceeding that any common nuisance as defined herein exists it shall be the duty of any officer authorized to enforce this act to proceed promptly in a court of equity to abate such nuisance, and the final conviction of the defendant in such trial shall be conclusive evidence against such defendant of the facts adjudged therein as to the existence of the nuisance."

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman's idea that if the defendant is found guilty of that, it makes it conclusive evidence?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is in a criminal trial. He may be found guilty of an act——

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman mean to say that every criminal proceeding is a basis of proceeding in equity to abate a nuisance?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. GARD. That is what you say here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. When in a criminal trial certain facts have been established, then those facts will be introduced for the purpose of showing a nuisance. They may not be sufficient themselves to establish a nuisance, but to the extent the facts were found and determined in the criminal action they would be admissible.

Mr. GARD. I wish to respectfully suggest that I do not think the section has been properly perfected.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BEE. I notice you use the expression in line 7, page 24, "and for closing the premises and keeping them closed a reasonable sum shall be allowed by the court." Is that a reasonable sum fixed by the court to be paid to the sheriff for taking care of a man's property during the time he is in contempt of court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume so.

Mr. BEE. And no amount fixed by the law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. BEE. Then, if a man owns a piece of property worth $500, and he can not give a bond, and they close his house up, and he can not rent it, he has got to go ahead and have the house sold in order to take care of the cost?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He ought not to violate the law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Under the language as amended the only proof that would be required in a case in equity would be a certified copy by the judge as to conviction?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. In a great many of the criminal cases you would not be able to establish it was a nuisance unless you brought a criminal action for maintaining a nuisance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. The question of making the evidence conclusive in the trial in court by a legislative body—has the gentleman considered that? What does the gentleman think about the constitutionality of such a law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think there is any question about that. This would be a civil action between the same parties as in the criminal action. The criminal action would require not only a prima facie case, but proof beyond a reasonable doubt. The defendant can not complain because the facts necessarily found to sustain the judgment are used as evidence in the civil suit; as to those he has had his day in court.

Mr. McKEOWN. The question I want to ask is this: Does the chairman of the committee think that Congress has the power——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have no doubt about it——

Mr. McKEOWN. To say to the court that certain evidence shall be conclusive in the case?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; without doubt.

Mr. WINGO. If it is a judgment.

Mr. McKEOWN. A final judgment?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; a final judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question in order that we might have a correct understanding of this matter. But first I ask that the Clerk report this amendment as it now exists.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 23, line 25, strike out the words "in case" and insert the words "the final conviction of." Line 25, same page, strike out the words "is adjudged guilty." Page 24, line 1, strike out the word "criminal" and also strike out the words "unless reversed," so that as amended the section will read:

"SEC. 24. That when it appears in any criminal proceeding that any common nuisance as defined herein exists it shall be the duty of any officer authorized to enforce this act to proceed promptly in a court of equity to abate such nuisance, and the final conviction of the defendant in such trial shall be conclusive evidence against such defendant of the facts adjudged therein as to the existence of the nuisance."

Mr. GARD. The language that I desire to call to the attention of the chairman and members of the committee is this: Here is language which purports to try a man in a criminal case and then transfer an action to abate a nuisance to a court of equity, and in the court of equity you provide that a conviction in a criminal case shall be conclusive evidence against the defendant of the facts adjudged therein as to the existence of the nuisance.

In other words, in an equity case you establish here by positive legislation the fact that the conviction is conclusive evidence against the defendant, no matter what other evidence he may have in a court of equity, no matter what he may bring in to throw light in the court of equity on something that was not disclosed in the criminal case. Suppose new evidence develops. Suppose opportunity was denied in the criminal case for the man to produce witnesses, and he has witnesses in the court of equity. Still, under this act you say that although he may have new evidence, although he may have new witnesses, although he may be able to disprove the truth of the charge on which he was convicted, still because of the fact that he was convicted you make it conclusive in the court of equity. I go so far with the gentleman to say that this conviction may be evidence, but to say that it is conclusive evidence in a court of equity is to at once bar the door to any and all evidence that a man might submit in a court of equity.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will recall that the verdict in court on that proceeding was before a jury, and in the absence of a jury trial the gentleman would not object to an equity judge following the evidence given in the jury trial?

Mr. GARD. I know that every man charged with crime or with the commission of a felony is entitled to a trial by jury. What I do object to is the use of this word "conclusive" in a court of equity, because it throws aside all other evidence, and when you find one proposition there is no opportunity for submitting anything else to the court of equity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. Therefore I move to amend by striking out the word "conclusive" and inserting the word "presumptive."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 24, line 1, strike out the word "conclusive" and insert the word "presumptive."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word or two on this amendment. It does not seem to me that there is any good reason why the defendant should not be bound by the trial in the criminal case as to the facts established in that case. It is only the facts that have been adjudged that are declared to be conclusive. Some of my good friends who have been so anxious for jury trials now apparently want to go back on a jury trial. In the criminal case he has a jury trial, he has the presumption of innocence in his favor, and the Government must prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. After he has had all those safeguards gentlemen still object to having the judgment called conclusive as to the facts found—strange.

Mr. GARD. If a man is finally convicted, and that fact is shown in the court of equity, is not that under this law conclusive of the existence of the nuisance?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, no; it is conclusive of the facts adjudged against him.

Mr. GARD. You say in your bill that it is conclusive of the existence of a nuisance.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is conclusive in an action relating to nuisances, but it is only conclusive of the facts that have been adjudged. We could not go beyond that. It can only be evidence of the facts actually adjudged.

I move that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to be heard. I have had no opportunity to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RAKER. I never saw anything like it in my life. It is the most absurd proposition ever presented——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. IGOE. I move to amend, that debate be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves as an amendment that the debate close in 10 minutes. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that debate be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]——

Mr. GARD. No; the question comes on my amendment to strike out "conclusive" and insert "presumptive."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 46, noes 56.

Mr. GARD. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. GARD and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 70.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. GARD was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: After the word "nuisance," in line 25, page 23, strike out the comma and the rest of the line, and all of lines 1 and 2, on page 24, down to and including the word "nuisance," in line 3 on page 24.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. That any person violating the terms of the injunction as provided for in this title shall be punished for contempt by a fine of not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment of not less than 30 days nor more than one year; and the court shall have the power to enforce such injunction by such measures and means as in the judgment of the court may be necessary.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment by the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 15, strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or," and in line 17, after the word "year," insert the words "or both."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, it is true that at a meeting of the Judiciary Committee as it was then constituted there was an authorization——

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, have I not the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered the amendment and the Chair was putting the question when the gentleman from Minnesota arose.

Mr. GARD. I wish to modify the amendment first by striking out of line 16 the words "not less than 30 days."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 15, strike out the word "or," and in line 16, strike out the words "less than 30 days nor," and in line 17, after the word "year," insert the words "or both."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this provision was authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary, and because there was a reservation on the part of the chairman, I believe I stated a moment ago that this amendment was an amendment offered by the Committee on the Judiciary. I state it again, and say that it was the policy of the Committee on the Judiciary, in determining what should be the penalty provided, that there should be no minimum penalty and no immediate association of fine and imprisonment.

Gentlemen of the committee, I say that this provides a punishment for contempt of a fine of not more than $1,000 and by imprisonment not less than 30 days nor more than 1 year. It was thought that it was the best policy in legislation by the Committee on the Judiciary that there should be a separation, and that it should be permitted, at the discretion of the court, under proper showing of the circumstances, either to imprison and fine, or to impose imprisonment penalty, or in a drastic and particular case to impose both fine and imprisonment. This was determined to be the policy of the committee, after we had considered the bill for some time, and it is in that sense that I now offer it to the members of this committee as the deliberate judgment of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is not the deliberate judgment of the whole Judiciary Committee. The bill was reported with minimum penalties in it. We did have a meeting to consider some amendments to the bill, and the members that were present adopted this amendment. When we reported this bill we put this minimum penalty in it, and we put it in in a number of other places, as will be observed by reading the bill.

Mr. IGOE. Then I understand the gentleman to say that because it was not in the bill as reported it was not the deliberate judgment of the committee. If you follow that out, every amendment that the gentleman has offered is not the deliberate judgment of the committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The bill as printed was the bill reported. We had a meeting subsequently and we were not able to get a full attendance of the committee, and at that time there was an authorization to strike this out. I served notice on the membership of the committee at that time that I would not consent to it, but would oppose it on the floor.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman thinks the bill is his bill, his private property, and resents any suggestion to change it in the least.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Here is the situation. This injunction does not proceed against a single act. It proceeds against the man who deliberately violates the law by maintaining a saloon, and to say that a court ought not to impose a sentence of 30 days for a deliberate violation of the law is to make of enforcement a farce. We have had the experience in my State and you have had it in every State that when you put no minimum penalty in these cases there will be places where the law will never be enforced. There is a necessity for having the minimum penalty, and this penalty is very small. It does not compare with minimum penalties that you find in many statutes. I asked that the committee take the deliberate judgment of the Judiciary Committee when they were all there. It was eliminated when only a few were present. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman of the committee pursues the same policy that he has pursued in the committee. I am not going to discuss what took place in the committee, but he has brought the question up. There has been a feeling on the part of the chairman of the committee that anybody who suggests an amendment to this bill should not have it considered. As far as the deliberate judgment of the committee is concerned, at the very meeting when this amendment was agreed to some of the amendments that the gentleman offered here on the floor since the bill was brought in were agreed to. It is strange that there could be a very calm, deliberate judgment on the part of the Judiciary Committee as to the things that he stands for, but that the judgment of the committee when he is overruled is not calm or deliberate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not a fact that the other amendments which have been offered by the chairman were agreed to by unanimous consent?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman may not discuss what took place in the meetings of the committee. I was not at the meeting, and I hate to hear what happened.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is the meaning of the language in lines 17, 18 and 19. It is first provided that anybody violating the terms of the injunction shall be punished for contempt by fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not less than 30 days. That is all right. Anybody who violates an order of the court ought to be dealt with severely, but the bill goes further, and provides that the court shall have the power to enforce such injunction by such measures and means as in the judgment of the court may be necessary.

What power does that give to the court? I never saw a provision like that in any statute of any State, or of the Nation.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I was not responsible for it personally, but we have some provisions in here to which it might apply, as, for instance, the giving of a bond.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But there is no limit to the power that this language would give a judge—by such measures and means—not such as the law has already empowered the judge to use, but—as in the judgment of the court may be necessary.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Personally, I am not very enthusiastic about the language. I do not claim much for it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think if you say that the court shall have power to enforce such injunction, that is as far as it is necessary to go. That language would give him all the power that is provided by the general law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think so.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then I move to strike out the language—

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to have the amendment disposed of that is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 38, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 24, line 17, after the word "court" strike out the balance of the section and insert: "May try the accused or, upon demand of the accused, the trial may be by jury, in which latter event the court may impanel a jury from the jurors then in attendance on the court, or a judge thereof in chambers may cause a sufficient number of jurors to be selected and summoned, as provided by law, to attend at the time and place of trial, at which time a jury shall be selected and impaneled as upon a trial for misdemeanor, and such trial shall conform as near as may be to the practice in criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or upon information."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane to the section. This does not deal with the trial. It simply provides for a penalty. The section that dealt with that has been passed. That is section 23. This deals only with the enforcement of the penalty. It does not provide anything about the trial at all.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is absolutely germane. We have here in section 25, page 24, this very remarkable language, and I desire to ask, if I may, some calm consideration of the members of this committee to this language:

And the court shall have the power to enforce such injunction by such measures and means as in the judgment of the court may be necessary.

If there ever has been an extension beyond anything which the law ever recognized this is an attempt to do it. When the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] asked the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary what this means he said he does not know, that he himself is not individually responsible for it. It is apparent to anyone that there never should be conferred upon anyone the power to force its injunction by such measures and means as the judgment of the court might deem necessary. You are harking back to the days when a judge could say you could take a man out and cut his head off because of a violation of some technical injunction. You are conferring upon the most arbitrary man on the bench of a United States court the privilege of exerting his own will no matter how illegal, unlawful, arbitrary, and intolerant it may be. It can not be thought to mean anything in a legal sense except an absolute extension of the power of a judge to the degree which no court since the English language was invented has ever had. In the palmy days of the headsmen no court had the right to enforce an injunction by such measures and means as he might deem necessary.

Therefore, in discussing the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I contend, first, that by striking out this language it makes it in order. Then the insertion of that which was provided by the sane and calm and deliberate judgment of this Congress of the United States, which said that the power of the judiciary should not encroach upon the rights of the individual. That in labor cases and cases under the antitrust legislation, where there was an inclination even that courts were extending their own powers beyond the extent of the law, it was the deliberate judgment of this Congress that the powers of those courts should be stayed, and it provided that a man charged with a contempt by a court should be entitled upon his demand to a trial by jury. This is the modern development of all litigation, and it is the development of law, which is the science of reason and of fairness; and, therefore, Mr. Chairman, by reason of the fact that part of the amendment is in order, because it provides for a method of trial, a method of enforcing the injunction, I submit to the Chair that the entire amendment as proposed by me is in order.

The jury provision is one which is sacred to labor everywhere, and every laboring man will resent the denial to him or any other man of the right to trial by jury in an action for contempt of an injunction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 25 of the bill provides for a penalty. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] provides for a method of trial. It has been repeatedly held that where a provision in the bill provides for a penalty, it is not in order to offer an amendment simply providing for a method by which that penalty may be inflicted.

Mr. IGOE. Has the Chair considered the fact that the punishment here is for contempt, and that the amendment is for the finding of whether the defendant is guilty of that contempt or not? It is not merely a question of the sentence. The injunction is in another paragraph, and the violation of the injunction is construed here, and that is all that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio seeks to give.

The CHAIRMAN. That would make it all the more out of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Will the Chair bear with me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled.

Mr. GARD. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 72, noes 31.

Mr. GARD. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands tellers. Twenty-one gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and tellers are ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] will take their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 27.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARD. I move to strike out the semicolon in line 17 on page 24 and insert a period, and strike out the balance of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 24, line 17, after the word "year," strike out the semicolon, insert a period, and strike out the balance of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by striking out the words in line 18, "by such measures and means as in the judgment of the court may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment, offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 24, line 18, after the word "injunction," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a more satisfactory amendment than mine, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, where does that leave the amendment just adopted, being an amendment to the amendment that was just withdrawn?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I understand the situation the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio has been withdrawn. My amendment is to strike out the language beginning in line 18 and ending in line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question as to the adoption of that amendment, the Chair will put it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Has not the amendment been withdrawn? The gentleman from Virginia offered his amendment as an amendment to the amendment, and the amendment was withdrawn. Why should they not withdraw it all?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia as standing alone. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That it shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor or property designed for the manufacture of liquor intended for use in violating this title or which has been so used, and no property rights shall exist in any such liquor or property. A search warrant may issue as provided in Title XI of public law No. 24 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, approved June 15, 1917, and such liquor and other property seized shall be subject to such disposition as the court may make thereof. If it is found that such liquor or property was so unlawfully held or possessed, or had been so unlawfully used, the liquor and all property designed for the unlawful manufacture of liquor shall be destroyed and the other property forfeited to the United States and disposed of in the manner provided for in section 27 in case of vehicles in which intoxicating liquor is being transported contrary to law. No search warrant shall issue to search any private dwelling occupied as such unless it is in part used for some business purpose such as a store, shop, saloon, restaurant, hotel, or boarding house. The property seized on any warrant shall not be taken from the officer seizing the same on any writ of replevin or other like process.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. VOLSTEAD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer to amend line 1, page 25, by, after the word "liquor," inserting "the containers thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 25, line 1, after the word "liquor" insert "the containers thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, can not we agree on time, so far as this is concerned?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A perfecting amendment will be in order, of course.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to agree as to time. I move that all debate on this section be closed in 20 minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there has been no debate on the section.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point that there has been debate on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor. If the gentleman yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have an amendment, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota, and I would like five minutes of that time. I think the gentleman would accept the amendment, too.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have an amendment I desire to offer. I do not want over four minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto in 20 minutes.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether we are under general debate or under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate will be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CURRY of California. I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not the customary practice when reading a bill under the five-minute rule to have amendments and motions submitted before there is any agreement as to time of debate? What are we going to debate? I want to make a motion to strike out the paragraph. That would be debatable. Other Members may want to amend the paragraph, and that would be debatable. Before a motion or an amendment is offered, gentlemen want to make an agreement as to the limitation of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment to strike out paragraph 26.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania offers an amendment to strike out all of section 26.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the Chair held that it was not in order to move to close debate on the ground that there had been no debate on the section. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] offered an amendment, and it was debated and agreed to. There has been debate on this section, so that the motion to close debate would have been in order, and is in order now.

Mr. WALSH. It would have been in order if there had been five minutes of debate. If the gentleman will examine the rule, he will see that that is so.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point had been made at the time, it would have been ruled on by the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this section has been called the "search and seizure" section of the bill. It involves the virtual or the practical confiscation of that which has heretofore been regarded as property and will be property until this bill shall have been passed. I am making the motion to strike it out in order that the issue may be joined and that those who desire to vote for the "search and seizure" clause may do so, and those who desire to vote against it may have the opportunity to vote against it.

I have no special argument to make on the subject. Every one here is familiar with the facts and with the arguments, and it seems to me unless some other gentlemen want to be heard on the question that we might as well come to a vote on it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman from Pennsylvania stand on the search and seizure of gambling paraphernalia held in violation of the law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If such paraphernalia were held in violation of the law, I would stand for search and seizure.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should the gentleman make a distinction between gambling paraphernalia and the things forbidden to be held by this law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is evidently attempting to put this law into effect before it is passed. [Laughter.] The gentleman is proceeding with undue haste. What it is proposed to seize here is property, and is property, I believe, even in the State of Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. And gambling paraphernalia used to be property in the State of Texas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So long as the gentleman wants to debate this question, I will say that after this law is passed it may be that security of this property will be maintained even in the State of Texas, and the Government may be put to a great expense to capture and seize property held down there in violation of law. I am merely suggesting that it might be well to secure property until the time when the law shall declare that there is no right of property.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman to explain to the committee the meaning of line 13, "The property seized on any warrant shall not be taken from the officer seizing the same on any writ of replevin or other like process." Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell us whether in all the history of the English-speaking people in jurisprudence he ever heard of the denial of the right of replevin to the owner of property?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman says.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman imagine that he ought to return it if it is liquor or material used in making liquor illegally—to turn it over on a replevin?

Mr. BEE. It is more than the mere taking of a bottle of beer from somebody. It is a matter of fundamental law.

Mr. SABATH. The truth is that the gentleman from Minnesota can not see further than the particular object he may have in his mind's eye.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point is that there is a vast amount of property in this country that has not yet been condemned. If this bill passes, it will be the duty of the officers to seize and destroy that property, except in certain cases. It seems to me that we might at least give the owner of that property this one chance and strike out this section from the bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 25, the words "unless it is in part" and to substitute therefor the words "except such part as may be."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That should be offered as an amendment to the amendment, should it not? There is a motion pending to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand that, but this is a perfecting amendment.

Mr. SMALL. Let us have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 25, line 11, strike out the words "unless it is in part" and insert in lieu thereof the words "except such part as may be."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, throughout this act we seek to preserve the sanctity of the home, and under this section a home as such can not be searched; but if a man conducts some business in his home, if for instance in a single room he chooses to run a greengrocer's business, or a tailor's shop, or some other like enterprise, then under this section the whole building can be searched. This right of search under the state of facts suggested, is clearly and plainly given. I do not think that is what many Members would care to do. I do not think that is what the committee would care to do. The effect of the words which I propose as an amendment is that if it is ascertained that a portion of the dwelling is being used contrary to the law, search may be made of that portion, but not of the other portion of the dwelling which is actually in use as a residence. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] pointed out to-day, I think it was, very clearly and forcibly the great disparity that this would establish between the situation of the man of means, and the man of small resources in a great many homes in the large cities, where many owners of buildings are compelled to use them both for family and business purposes. The amendment I suggest is intended to prevent this disparity while at the same time giving full power to the authorities to deal with lawbreakers, and to search that portion of the building which is being used for improper and illegal purposes, in violation of the constitutional amendment and of this act.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HERSEY. Take a case where a man has his store or his shop in one part of the building, and he has been using the shop or store part for illegally selling intoxicating liquors. He is about to be searched. He removes the liquor which he has for unlawful purposes into the dwelling house and allows the officers to search only the store or the shop. They search and find nothing. Under the gentleman's amendment they can not go back into the dwelling house and get the stuff. The officers leave the house. He moves his stock of unlawful liquor out of the private dwelling into the other part of the building and goes on doing business. It would make the law a failure.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. I admit that the gentleman suggests a possibility, but that possibility of abuse is not to be set against the great principle that we have in mind here, namely, to preserve the home inviolate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Take such a case as that mentioned by the gentleman from Maine. There have been many such instances, where the liquor has been kept in the house and carried through a door into the store for sale. Time and again cases have occurred where the bulk of the liquor has been kept in the house. Now, the gentleman does not want to prevent that kind of a case from being reached under this law?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to have that portion of the dwelling searched which is being illegally used—that is, that portion where the actual violation of law is in progress; but having in mind all that has been said about the sanctity of the home, I desire to see that sanctity preserved. I do not believe that the possibilities of abuse suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] are so great that this law will break down, by reason of the escape of a few offenders should my amendment be adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the law at present a private dwelling may be searched for the purpose of ascertaining whether there may be counterfeit money or stolen property contained therein. That is not regarded as an invasion of the rights of the home. Now, does the gentleman think that where a man keeps liquor in his private dwelling for the purpose of selling it unlawfully his home should be entitled to any more protection than the home of the man who has stolen property or counterfeit money or other contraband property in it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the gentleman suggests a case in which the home may be searched without reservation. This section undertakes to preserve the sanctity of the home in general against searches for spirits, because it expressly says that no private dwelling shall be searched. Thereby the law makes a distinction between the case of liquor in the home, and of counterfeit money in the home.

Mr. BARKLEY. I propose to offer an amendment which makes it possible to search a private dwelling if it is being used for the illegal sale of liquor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think that amendment will show how far we are going, and how fast we are traveling. We are going fast and far, but there must be some stopping point, unless we propose to make this law so offensive in the eyes of the home-loving people of this country, that the authorities will be unable to enforce it.

Mr. BLANTON. We will not be dealing with honorable gentlemen, but with infamous bootleggers.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. BLANTON. Because I have had experience with them for 20 years.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. You must have in mind that many of your searches will reveal liquor neither in the shop, or store, or in the home proper. You can not say in advance that every man undertaken to be searched, is an infamous bootlegger.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, and the question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] to perfect the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia) there were 64 ayes and 59 noes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 70 ayes and 73 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 11, after the word "such," insert the following: "unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor or."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is to make it possible to issue a search warrant against a private dwelling not occupied as or connected with a store, saloon, restaurant, boarding house, or hotel, where liquor is being unlawfully sold in a dwelling house.

Under the language of the bill as it is framed a man may sell any quantity of liquor in his dwelling house and yet, unless it is attached to or connected with a store, saloon, restaurant, boarding house, or hotel, you can not search it. You can not get a search warrant against it. Under the law at present if a man has stolen property in a dwelling house you have a right to a search warrant, or if he has counterfeit money or gambling paraphernalia you can search the dwelling and it is not regarded as an invasion of the sanctity of the home. I do not see why, if a man is deliberately using a dwelling house for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, there is any question of the invasion of the sanctity of a home in making the search.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. The search warrant may be directed against more than intoxicating liquors; it may be directed against innocent property.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it can not.

Mr. ELSTON. I understand nothing is said, but the search warrant is directed against any property designed to manufacture liquor, and that may be innocent property.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there is no danger of innocent property suffering. The thing I am trying to do is, if some bootlegger stores liquor in his dwelling house and uses it not only for a dwelling but a place where you may go and purchase liquor, having violated the sanctity of his own home, that we may have some law to search it. [Applause.] He has no right to plead the sanctity of his home against the law if he has no regard for its sanctity himself.

Mr. ELSTON. If the man——

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not yield further.

Mr. ELSTON. Well, I will take the opportunity to look into it, because I think it ought to be explained.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will make his question brief, I will yield.

Mr. ELSTON. Line 21, page 24, provides that a search warrant can be directed to any property designed for the manufacture of liquor. Suppose there should be a box of grapes or a box of apples or several boxes of apples——

Mr. BARKLEY. Boxes of apples and grapes may not be said to be "designed" for the manufacture of liquor.

Mr. ELSTON. That is property and can come under this definition.

Mr. BARKLEY. If a man had a distillery or a barroom or a case of whisky or a dozen cases of whisky, that would be property coming under the terms of the search warrant. It certainly seems to me that we ought not to lose our heads over the sanctity of the dwelling house, where you can search them for any other violations of the law, and yet not provide a warrant where a dwelling house is to be used and where men resort for the unlawful sale and purchase of liquor. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this question of a search warrant has been used as a bugaboo in the discussion of this bill. Everybody has held up their hands in holy horror because of this provision. Nobody appears to have even taken the pains to read it or give any reason for their views. If you take this bill and read it you will find that it provides the most innocuous remedy that ever was submitted under the name of a search warrant. The only thing that can be taken is the liquor and the instrumentalities for making the liquor. You can not do anything else, except that I have offered an amendment that permits you to take containers—the bottles and barrels—in which the liquor is contained. You can not take anything else under this proposed writ. This writ is issued under the strictest regulations that you can imagine. The power to issue this writ is under the espionage act. We purposely took out of the search-warrant provision of that act, except as against persons who might be disloyal, every tooth that we could, because we were opposed to the granting of any broad general power to search anybody, except they were disloyal. If anybody gets a warrant not in good faith, he is subject to severe punishment. If the officer executing it exceeds the power given in the warrant, he can also be punished. In every way it is sought to be guarded. No justice of the peace can issue it. No one but a court of record or a United States commissioner can grant one.

In every State I believe you can get a search warrant from a justice of the peace, and can get it by simply swearing to a complaint. You can not get anything of that kind under this bill. You have got to go before a court and subject yourself to an examination before a judge or the commissioner will give you a search warrant.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There are any number of statutes that allow you to search without a warrant at all in case of liquor law violations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to say that only the property that was used in connection with the whisky would be taken.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Only the whisky or the liquor, and their containers, and property designed for the manufacture of liquor unlawfully.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the entire balance of that property is forfeited under this section.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what it says.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no other property that you can take.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It says:

The liquor and all property designed for the unlawful manufacture of liquor shall be destroyed.

That covers everything in relation to the manufacture of liquor, the container of the liquor, and the other property shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The trouble with that is that no other property is authorized to be taken. The reason why the language referred to is in the bill is because there was a provision in the first part of it authorizing other property to be taken; that has been cut out, and as the bill now reads you have no power to take any property except liquor or property designed for the manufacture of liquor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate was limited on this section and all amendments thereto, and that time has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not in order to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. Not when the time has been fixed by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it in order to move to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the section is already pending. A motion to perfect it is first in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it in order to strike it out at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that there is a motion now pending to strike out the section, and that amendment is no longer debatable. Debate upon this section and all amendments thereto has been exhausted by order of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE and other Members. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chair said he was in doubt.

The committee divided and there were—ayes 71, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Tellers!

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 25, line 13, strike out all of line 13 after the word "house" and all of lines 14 and 15.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For the purpose of offering an amendment. And that is, beginning in line 6, after the word "destroyed," my amendment is to put a period after the word "destroyed" and then the language "and the other property forfeited to the United States and disposed of in the manner provided for in section 27 in case of vehicles in which intoxicating liquor is being transported contrary to law," I move to strike out because if it stays in it forfeits the whole dwelling house, there is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS: Page 25, line 6, after the word "destroyed," insert a period and strike out the balance of the sentence down to and including the word "law."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STRONG of Kansas: Section 26, page 25, line 11, after the word "unless," insert "the owner or occupant thereof has been convicted of selling intoxicating liquors or," so that the sentence will read, "No search warrant shall issue to search any private dwelling occupied as such, unless the owner or occupant thereof has been guilty of selling intoxicating liquor or it is in part used for some business purpose, such as store, shop, saloon, restaurant, hotel, or boarding house."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. What becomes of the Barkley amendment if this is adopted? The Barkley amendment was inserted after the word "unless."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask to withdraw my amendment, in view of the fact that the Barkley amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer as a separate section, to be headed "Section 26½," the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Add, at the end of section 26——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, the amendment is offered as a separate section, 26½.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new section:

"SEC. 26½. Any State officer having power to make arrests for violating the laws of the United States under section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall have power to issue search warrants under the power granted in title 2 mentioned herein."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to discuss this.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section was fixed at 15 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But this is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as an amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; it is not offered as an amendment, it is offered as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is not in order at all, it must be offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is perfectly competent to offer an amendment to the bill in the shape of a new section, if it is germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But it can not be offered——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is an amendment to the bill as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on section 26; and the Chair has already held in a previous ruling that an amendment offered as a new section was an amendment to the previous section, and where debate has been exhausted upon that section debate was also exhausted on the amendment offered as a new section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not desire to challenge the ruling of the Chair; but is this the ruling of the Chair, that a Member can not offer an independent section to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the ruling. It can be offered as an amendment to the section that has been read.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not offering it as an amendment but as an independent section. Is it the ruling of the Chair that I can not offer it as an independent section to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the ruling of the Chair. When the debate has been closed on the section it can not be again opened by offering an amendment as a new section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If debate is closed on a section and all amendments thereto, that action does not apply any further than the limits of the motion to close debate and is applicable only to the section and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Even though it is a new section——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Suppose I had waited until the end of the bill, and offered this matter then, would it be argued that it would relate back to some previous section of the bill on which debate had been closed, and on that ground would be held to be not debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer the section at the end of section 20, which is the last section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will do that. But it seems to me an independent section——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That when the commissioner, his assistants, inspectors, or any officer of the law shall discover any person in the act of transporting, in violation of the law, intoxicating liquors in any wagon, buggy, automobile, water or air craft, or other vehicle, it shall be his duty to seize any and all intoxicating liquors found therein being transported contrary to law. Whenever intoxicating liquors transported or possessed illegally shall be seized by an officer he shall take possession of the vehicle and team or automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance, and shall arrest any person in charge thereof. Such officers shall at once proceed against the person arrested under the provisions of this title in any court having competent jurisdiction. The court upon conviction shall order the liquor destroyed, and unless good cause to the contrary is shown by the owner, such as ignorance of the purpose for which his team, vehicle, water or air craft, or automobile was being used, order a sale by public auction of the property seized, and the officer making the sale, after deducting the expenses of keeping the property, the fee for the seizure, and the cost of the sale, shall pay the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. If, however, no one shall be found claiming the team, vehicle, water or air craft, or automobile, the taking of the same shall be advertised in some newspaper published in the city or county, or if there be no newspaper published in such city or county, in a newspaper having circulation in the county, once a week for two weeks and by handbills posted in three public places near the place of seizure, and if no claimant shall appear within 10 days after the last publication of the advertisement, the property shall be sold and the proceeds after deducting the expenses and costs and advertising shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. VENABLE and Mr. LANKFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] is recognized.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANKFORD, of Georgia: Page 26, line 11, after the word "pay," insert "all liens, according to their priorities, which are established by intervention or otherwise at said hearing or in other proceeding brought for said purpose as being bona fide and as having been created without the lien or having any notice that the carrying vehicle was being used or was to be used for illegal transportation of liquor, and shall pay the balance of."

And, on page 26, line 13, after the sentence ending with the word "receipts," insert the following: "It being provided that all liens against property sold under the provisions of this section shall be transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale of the property."

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, it will be observed that the pending national prohibition act provides that—

Whenever intoxicating liquors, transported or possessed illegally, shall be seized by an officer, he shall take possession of the vehicle and team or automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance, and shall arrest any person in charge thereof.

The bill further provides that—

The court upon conviction shall order the liquor destroyed, and unless good cause to the contrary is shown by the owner, such as ignorance of the purpose for which his team, vehicle, water or air craft, or automobile was being used, order a sale by public auction of the property seized, and the officer making the sale, after deducting the expenses of keeping the property, the fee for the seizure, and the cost of the sale, shall pay the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

It will be readily seen that there is no provision for the payment of a bona fide lien, held by an innocent person, on the team, automobile, or other conveyance which is to be confiscated.

This is not right, and should be remedied.

My amendment seeks to perfect the bill in this particular by providing that in case of sale, after payment of all legitimate cost, the officer shall pay "all liens, according to their priorities, which are established, by intervention or otherwise, at said hearing or in other proceeding brought for said purpose, as being bona fide and as having been created without the lienee having any notice that the carrying vehicle was being used or was to be used for illegal transportation of liquor, and shall pay the balance of "the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

"It being provided that all liens against property sold under the provisions of this section shall be transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale of the property."

It seems to me all must agree to the amendment. Why should an innocent party who holds a retention of title, mortgage, or other lien to property thus sold lose his rights and not receive the money to which he is justly entitled?

It may be that a lienee can not be deprived of his lien unless he is a party to the proceeding by which the property is confiscated. Even if this is true, then would the lien follow the property into the hands of the purchaser or must the lienee assert his rights against the proceeds in hands of the officer? If my amendment is not adopted, what will be the rights of a mortgagee or other lienee under the section of the bill just read?

Will he have any rights? How, when, and where can he assert them?

The rights of third and probably innocent parties will intervene. Endless and expensive litigation will arise.

The innocent holder of the mortgage or other lien on the property sold will either under the law lose absolutely his just claim or will be forced to spend a large part or all of it in useless expense and litigation.

Why not adopt my amendment and make clear, definite, and certain the rights of the lienee, the purchaser, and all concerned?

Why pass the bill in such form as to cause endless confusion and expense?

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman believe there would be anything left when some of these gentlemen in Texas or in Kentucky or in Minnesota or in Iowa, in whom they had no confidence, would get through with selling and disposing of their property? Will there be anything left for the Government to secure?

Mr. LANKFORD. I do not know about that. My provision is to pay the liens that are bona fide which exist against the property.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, there is serious doubt about the proposition, whether or not these liens will be protected. It seems to me that the man who has a retention of title to personal property or who has a mortgage against personal property which is bona fide and which was obtained by him without any knowledge that the property was to be used for the illegal transportation of liquor should be protected.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. Your purpose, I understand, is to save the rights of the lienee?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

Mr. VENABLE. Of course, if the Government seizes this property and sells it, the person who buys it must take the property subject to any valid lien?

Mr. LANKFORD. He may or may not.

Mr. VENABLE. That is the law. Of course, the Government can not divest the lienee of any of his property. All that could be sold would be the interest of the man in the machine, and it would have no power to divest anybody else of its property, and whoever bought it at the sale would take it subject to any liens that were against the property. Otherwise, of course, you would be taking a man's property from him without due process of law.

Mr. LANKFORD. That is probably true. I had a case like that in Georgia, under the Georgia law, which is practically the same kind of law as proposed by this measure, and there are authorities which go to the extent of holding that the property is confiscated, and that the lien does not follow the property. But I think the gentleman's contention is probably true. But why not make it clear? Why not clear up all doubt about it? Why not fix it so that a man who buys the property will know that he gets the property clear of all lien and that his rights will be protected? Why not make definite the rights of the Government, the lienee, the lienor, the purchaser, and all concerned?

Mr. VENABLE. Suppose the lien was not due?

Mr. LANKFORD. If it were not due, it could be paid just the same out of the proceeds. I apprehend no creditor will refuse to accept his money under such circumstances.

Mr. VENABLE. It is only due at a certain time. The man who loaned the money has the right to his debt.

Mr. LANKFORD. That is correct; but when a creditor is liable to lose his entire claim, ordinarily he will accept payment, even before maturity.

In my section of Georgia, and, in fact, all over the country, hundreds of mules, horses, automobiles, and other carrying vehicles are sold either wholly or partly on a credit. Mortgages are taken by the people selling the property. These mortgages are handled by the banks, and thus a credit system is carried on to the benefit of all concerned.

I am anxious for these rights, whether retention of title, mortgage, or other lien, to be protected in case of sale of team, wagon, automobile, or other carrying vehicle. I want, and I believe we all want, the bona fide holder of a lien paid in full.

I want to protect the man who sells on a credit, so he will keep on selling on a credit, so that those who buy on a credit can continue to buy on a credit if necessary. If we make the man who sells mules, horses, or automobiles afraid to sell on a credit, we injure every man who desires to purchase those things on a credit.

By so doing we would injure a mighty multitude. I want to help the man, woman, or child who needs help. I want to help our credit system. It means bread and meat to so many folks.

Be a man ever so honest, he may become involved in litigation and lose, even though he is right. A lien on the most honest would not be absolutely safe if my amendment is lost. It certainly would not be safe in the ordinary daily transactions of business.

If we adopt my amendment, we will make certain and definite the rights of the lienee, purchaser, and all concerned.

My amendment is for the purpose of perfecting the bill, and I certainly hope it will be adopted.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this matter.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to arrange so that we can finish this section, and then I shall move to rise. I do not think there is much dispute in regard to it. I am willing to accept the amendment that has been offered. I think it is a proper amendment, so far as I can figure out at present. Can we arrange some understanding as to when the debate can be closed? Will 10 minutes be enough?

Mr. VENABLE. I wish five minutes on an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And I wish five minutes on an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. GARD. I wish five minutes in which to express myself.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Suppose we make it 15 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BAER. Reserving the right to object, has not any one the right to speak in opposition to these amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. If he has the floor.

Mr. BAER. We do not know what these amendments are.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. What became of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD]?

The CHAIRMAN. It is pending.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, first, that I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] is the most lucid amendment and expressed in the best legal phrasing of any amendment offered during the consideration of this bill. [Applause.] It should be adopted because it stands for justice, and stands for the right of a man having an honest interest in property to assert that lien in a court of competent jurisdiction wherever such property may be.

I rise to present a further amendment, in the following language:

On page 26, after the word "same," in line 15, insert the words "giving full description thereof."

The case which we have under this section as presented to us now is that if no one shall be found claiming the team, vehicle, and so forth, the taking of the same shall be advertised in some paper—merely the bare taking of the same shall be advertised, the fact that somebody has taken a team or a vehicle or a water craft or an aircraft. Now, that expresses nothing. If you advertise any property for sale in any court in the United States, whether it is real estate or personal property, before you can sell it you have to state what the property is and why it is being sold. You can not say, in any place I ever heard of, that "a team belonging to John Smith has been found and we offer it for sale." Under this provision no evidence is given to the public, to those who may read a newspaper or those who may read handbills, as to what the property is, what it consists of, nothing at all about it, merely the bare advertisement of it having been seized. Now, this is not informative. It does not operate at all for the benefit of the man whose property is taken. It serves no right. It simply is a previous means of confiscation; because if we go so far as to make the bare advertisement of the seizure possible, without any description, then possibly the owner may never identify it. He may never have the means of recovering it. Such proceedings may be had that it will be sold to some one connected with the proceedings for a ridiculously low sum, and every possible idea of justice may be defeated.

Mr. BEE. May I suggest that even the name of the owner may not be given. It may be some person unknown. Then, the property should be described, and probably the owner may come and find it.

Mr. GARD. Oh, there is no reason why this amendment should not be adopted, and why there should not be a full description of the property.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman accept a substitute for his amendment, "giving a description thereof" instead of giving an accurate description?

Mr. GARD. I said "giving full description thereof."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This being a statutory proceeding, unless a very full description was given it might render the sale void. A fair description of it is all that we ought to require. The word "full" might be construed to require a description that would render the sale void.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman, in the consideration of this bill, is afraid of the word "full," I will accept the word "fair." I will ask to modify my amendment by inserting the word "fair" instead of the word "full."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VENABLE: Page 26, line 4, after the word "jurisdiction," insert "but the said vehicle or conveyance shall be returned to the owner upon execution by him of a good and valid bond, with two or more sureties in a sum double the value of the property, which said bond shall be approved by said officer and conditioned to return said property to the custody of said officer on the day of trial, to abide the judgment of the court."

Mr. VENABLE. Gentlemen of the committee, this section of the bill gives an imperative command to the sheriff or officer to seize any conveyance in which liquor is transported or sold or in which a use of it is made contrary to law. I hope it will be amended. As it now reads a sheriff would be under the imperative duty to seize a transcontinental train, or a ship just sailing for Europe with a cargo worth millions of dollars and with thousands of passengers, and hold it until it was disposed or by the court; and there is no provision in the section by which the owner of the property may give a bond and get the property released. I hope an amendment will be offered and adopted exempting common carriers or public carriers from the provision, and I urge the adoption of this amendment for the convenience of those men whose vehicles are taken who happen to be innocent. We will some day get some men into court who are not guilty. Sometimes men's vehicles will be seized who are, as a matter of fact, innocent. As this provision now is, the sheriff must take the conveyance and must hold it until an adjudication is had upon that question. Now, if it be a correct fundamental legal proposition that the citizen must be treated as innocent until he is proved guilty, then the processes of the law preliminary to his conviction should be made as little onerous as possible.

Now, this amendment provides that when a vehicle is seized by the sheriff the owner may, by giving a bond, regain possession of his vehicle and use it pending the time of the institution of the proceeding and adjudication as to whether he is found guilty or not, conditioned that at the trial he shall have the vehicle there to abide the judgment of the court in the event he is guilty.

I believe it is sound to treat the citizen as innocent until he is proved guilty. This takes care of the vehicle and has it forthcoming at the trial. This gives the law the process in the event he is guilty and at the same time permits the innocent man to use his vehicle and not be inconvenienced pending the time he is adjudicated not guilty.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman says he thinks the citizen should be treated as innocent until proved guilty. Under this section he is presumed to be guilty and the burden is on him to show good cause to the contrary. That is the presumption.

Mr. VENABLE. All of which I do not approve.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 23, after the last word "shall," strike out the language beginning with the word "take" to and including, on page 26, line 1, the word "shall"; also on page 26, line 5, after the word "destroy" strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and punish the person or persons so violating the law as provided therein."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the section as I propose to amend it will provide merely for the punishment of the defendant who is found transporting the liquor in violation of the law.

I think this section as it is drawn is most unwise. I think it proceeds upon an entirely erroneous theory. This is a criminal law which purports to punish men who commit crime. We have a definite procedure in this country of ours for the punishment of persons who commit crime. We punish them by fine; we punish them by imprisonment; we punish them by destroying property of an illegal nature, like liquor and counterfeit goods. Think of the extreme to which this law goes! A man's chauffeur, driving an automobile worth $4,000, carries a quart of liquor across the line to sell it. The owner may be perfectly innocent; he may be a man of the highest morality. That chauffeur is arrested. The officer has no discretion in the matter; he must take charge of that automobile and sell it, put the money in the Treasury of the United States, unless the owner of that vehicle, without any notice provided in the statute to the owner, unless that owner shall by some procedure not defined in this law appear before that tribunal and prove that he is innocent of the crime. There may be three or four owners and only one owner may have knowledge of the crime. The other three joint owners may have no knowledge of the crime committed. Yet because one owner has the knowledge the whole machine must be sold. The automobile is merely illustrative. It may be a steamship worth $100,000. It may be aircraft worth $20,000. It may have mortgages and liens upon it. These amendments propose to take care of that feature, but I do not think they do that very well. The owner of this property is adjudged, before you start in, as being guilty. The provision is that they shall arrest any person in charge of it, and they shall take charge of any automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Vehicle.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It says "conveyance." Was that changed to "vehicle" by amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired on this section and all amendments thereto. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The CHAIRMAN. The question first recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, may we have that amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Lankford amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE], which without objection the Clerk will report.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Venable amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment, to insert after the word "property" the words "in substantially as good condition as it was when replevined."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE]: After the word "property" insert "in substantially as good condition as when replevined."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 31, noes 36.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Three Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. The amendment that I offered is not disposed of as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. It comes after the Sanders amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], which has not yet been reported. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 26, line 15, after the word "same" insert the words "giving fair description thereof."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "fair" and inserting the word "a."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD to the amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Strike out the word "fair" and insert "a."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. GARD. I want to say the gentleman suggested fair——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 56, noes 41.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers. It was once agreed to by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 41.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOIES] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BOIES: Page 26, line 19, strike out the word "handbills" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notices."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. I desire to inquire how long the chairman of the committee is going to keep us here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let us read this section; it is a short section.

Mr. GARD. I thought the gentleman said a moment ago he would stop when we finished this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 28. That in all cases in which intoxicating liquors may be subject to be destroyed under the provisions of this act the court shall have jurisdiction upon the application of the United States attorney to order them delivered to any department or agency of the United States Government for medicinal, mechanical, or scientific uses, or to order the same sold at private sale for such purposes to any person having a permit to purchase liquor, the proceeds to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, and all liquor heretofore seized in any suit or proceeding may likewise be so disposed of.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. [Applause.]

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6810, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KETTNER (on request of Mr. OSBORNE) was granted leave of absence, being called away on Government business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS ON MONDAY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if we are going on with the Unanimous Consent Calendar on Monday, or is this bill to be in order?

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill will be in order on Monday; at least, it will be taken up on Monday. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Monday, July 21, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SELLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2) to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 132), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 133), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2395) amending section 25 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act approved September 7, 1916, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 134), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7500) to protect the coastwise trade of the United States, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 135), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 21, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come reverently before Thee and take Thy name upon our lips with godly fear. Thou art the eternal, the uncreated God. Thou dost preside over the destinies of the world. Thou has revealed Thy law to men. We pray for wisdom that will enable us to see the force and truth and power of Thy law. We pray for grace that we may love Thy law and keep Thy commandments. Guide us, we pray Thee, this day by Thy spirit, ever present with us in the discharge of the duties of this office and in the fear of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CABLEGRAM FROM THE BRAZILIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a cablegram addressed to the President of the Senate, which will be read.

The cablegram was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[Telegram—Rio de Janeiro.]

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Brazilian National Congress at its session of the 10th instant resolved, by unanimous vote, to enter in its journal a vote of profound gratefulness to the Parliament, Government, and people of the United States of America for the honors with which they received and distinguished Senator Epitacio Passoa, Brazilian ambassador to the peace conference, on his recent visit to your great Republic, which honors the congress accepts as further and convincing proof of the good relations of friendship that bind the two sister Republics. I extend to your excellency my assurances of high consideration.

A. AZEREDO,
President of the National Congress.

CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAYS (S. DOC. NO. 55).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, certain information relative to the quantity and description of war material, equipment, supplies, and so forth, which will be required for the use and improvement of highways. The communication will lie on the table for the present until the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who submitted the resolution of inquiry, states what action he wishes taken with regard to it.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the communication laid before the Senate this morning by the Chair and ordered to lie on the table be printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

To the Senate:

Pursuant to Senate resolution 108 I have the honor to report as follows:

It is observed that the resolution directs the Secretary of Agriculture "to report to the Senate the quantity and description of war material, equipment, and supplies, particularly the number and description of cars, trucks, and tractors, which will be required for the use and improvement of highways, and which were authorized to be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used on the roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid as provided by section 7 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1919."

Highway construction and improvement under the original Federal aid road act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended by the above-mentioned act, approved February 28, 1919, covers a period of several years, and this department does not know what the final requirements of each State highway department will be. The Senate is, of course, aware that during the war highway construction moved slowly on account of shortage in labor and the control of building material for war purposes. It has only been recently that the several State highway departments have been able to begin active operations on their respective new programs, which can not be compared in importance and size with the work which was done during any preceding year. The department regrets, therefore, that it can not state accurately what the final requirements of the respective State highway departments will be and can only report to you what is being done by the department pursuant to section 7 of the above-mentioned act approved February 28, 1919, which is as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid, such distribution to be made upon a value basis of distribution the same as provided by the Federal aid road act approved July 11, 1916: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may reserve from such distribution not to exceed 10 per cent of such material, equipment, and supplies for use in the construction of national forest roads or other roads constructed under his direct supervision."

At the time section 7 above mentioned was enacted into law it was impossible for the Secretary of War immediately to determine what war material, equipment, and supplies would not be needed for the purposes of the War Department. However, the urgent requirements of the several State highway departments in the matter of beginning active work on their enlarged programs made it necessary to distribute as soon as possible such of the material, equipment, and supplies as it became available.

CANVASS OF STATES.

Immediately following the approval of the Post Office appropriation act, section 7 of which is quoted above, this department ascertained from the War Department the general classes and character of the equipment and supplies "which might become" available for distribution to the States, following the determination by the War Department of the equipment and supplies no longer needed for the purposes of the War Department. In order to determine the amount of equipment and supplies that the States would need for the purposes of highway improvement the following letter was sent under date of March 12 to each of the State highway departments:

GENTLEMEN: Referring to our letter of the 11th instant there is inclosed a list of materials and equipment, some of which it may be possible to obtain from the War Department.

In making your requests it is advisable to have them in as much detail as possible. For example, should you request any steam shovels, motor trucks, tractors, trailers, dredges, concrete mixers, etc., please state such details as size, weight, capacity, etc.

LIST OF MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT.

Machine tools, engineering and construction equipment: All metal and woodworking tools; steam shovels; hand tools; forging equipment; iron and structural workers' power tools and machinery; contractors' equipment, such as dredges, ditchers, concrete mixers; industrial railways, etc.

Building material: Water supply, fabricated steel, roofing, wall board, paints, hardware, cement, heating, electrical equipment, power plant, machinery.

Truck and motor equipment: Trucks; trailers; animal and hand-drawn vehicles.

General supplies: Tentage, paulins; harness, saddlery; saddlers' supplies; shelf and heavy hardware; tools, handles, tool chests, containers; mess, camp, and kitchen equipment; brooms and brushes; hemp and jute products.

Remount: Horses and mules.

Raw and scrap materials: Explosives.

Ordnance and ordnance stores: Tractors and trailers; caterpillars.

In response to this inquiry a number of the States submitted detailed statements and descriptions of the items they would need. Others took the position that they wish to receive their quota of any of the items contained in the above list which might be declared surplus by the War Department. In order to arrive at a more definite statement of the needs of the States a second canvass relative to various items was made under each of the following dates: April 24, May 7, and June 10. These two canvasses have been further supplemented by a large number of communications to and from the State highway departments, and by personal conferences with the executive officers of the State highway departments. Based on the information secured from these sources this department believes that the following lists, classified under the several headings, set forth the needs of the States as accurately as they can be determined at the present time. At different times, as the Secretary of War found that certain war materials, equipment, and supplies were not needed for the purposes of the War Department, he has made allotments to this department for the purpose of distribution, covering, in general, items appearing on the above list. Such lists are now being received from the Secretary of War from time to time.

MOTOR TRUCKS AND MOTOR CARS.

The Secretary of War has on four different occasions declared in the aggregate 24,000 motor trucks of all sizes and different makes to be available for distribution, and he has also declared 1,075 Ford touring cars and 550 used passenger cars of other makes likewise available. Of the 24,000 motor trucks, a total of 20,519 have been allotted among the several State highway departments as shown by the list hereinafter set out, and the entire number of Ford and other used cars have been allotted, as shown by said list. Definite shipping instructions have been given the War Department for more than 13,500 of these trucks and cars. The allotment as shown by the said list is final.

CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATING EQUIPMENT.

A request for construction and operating equipment, based on the estimated needs of the several States, was sent to the War Department. The Secretary of War, in replying to the request, stated that the War Department would deliver to the Department of Agriculture out of the surplus in the United States or France a sufficient amount of equipment to meet the estimate, which is as follows:

400 road rollers, steam and gas driven.
700 concrete mixers.
600 road graders.
400 elevating graders.
200 sprinkling wagons.
200 road oilers.
125 derricks, 30 to 60 feet boom.
100 pile-driver outfits complete.
200 complete air-drill outfits.
250 steam pumps, up to 4 inches.
150 centrifugal pumps, up to 4 inches, with power.
75 diaphragm pumps, gasoline driven.
500 rock-crushing outfits complete, capacity 125 tons to 200 tons per day.
200 clamshell, orange peel, and bottom-dump buckets.
125 road scarifiers.
50 caterpillar and drag-line excavators.
700 road and railroad plows.
300 rooter plows.
160 automotive cranes.
3,600 trailers for tractors.
1,000 miles industrial railway track.
200 industrial railway locomotives.
3,500 industrial railway dump cars.
15,000 feet rubber hose.
5,000 feet steam hose.
40 portable asphalt plants.
200 steam shovels, capacity 1 yard or less.
6,500 dump wagons.
250 conveyors, gravity and power.
35 donkey, 200 hoisting, and 75 gasoline engines, 5 to 30 horsepower.
375 complete steam-drill outfits.
250 portable air-compressor outfits with power.
100 boilers, 15 to 40 horsepower.
275 electric motors, 2 to 50 horsepower.
1,300 pulley blocks.
6,000 drag scrapers.
2,000 Fresno scrapers.
6,000 wheel scrapers.
500 Maney 4-wheel scrapers.
300 stump pullers.
500 road drags.
4,000 wheelbarrows.
10 dredges.
10 ditching machines.
10 trenching machines.
6 back-filling machines.
200 screening plants.
100 wagon loaders.
400 blasting machines complete.
100,000 feet hoisting cable from ¼ to 1 inch in diameter.
10,000 feet air hose.
100,000 linear feet Manila rope, 1¼ to 2 inches in size.

It is thought that the final requirements of the several State highway departments will be in excess of this estimate.

CONSTRUCTION MATERIALS.

The following list of construction materials is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

550,000 barrels of bituminous binders.
50,000 linear feet prepared joint filler.
2,110,000 bags Portland cement.
1,000,000 tons gravel.
1,000,000 tons crushed stone.
Brick, all available.
5,000,000 feet bridge, form, and building lumber.
40,000 linear feet steel forms for concrete road construction.
120 carloads corrugated metal culvert.

150 miles of steel or iron pipe from ⅛ to 3 inches in diameter, with fittings.
1,186 tons structural steel.
10,000 tons reinforcing steel.
16,000 tons sheet-metal roofing.
2,000 tons wire fencing.
674,000 industrial railroad ties.
10,000 gallons paint for wood and steel bridges, guard rails, etc.
50 tons nails.
35 tons spikes.
20 tons bolts.
10 tons nuts, threaded.
10 tons nuts, blanks.
56,025 linear feet cast-iron culvert pipe from 12 to 36 inches in diameter.
10,000,000 pounds T. N. T.
109,240 exploders.
2,000 miles telephone wire.
50 permanent wall telephone sets complete, with accessories.
100 portable telephone sets complete, with accessories.
1,000 sets single heavy work harness.
3,000 sets heavy double work harness.
600 concrete buggies.
4,404 high-speed trailers for trucks.

These materials are being allotted to the several State highway departments as different items appearing herein are declared by the Secretary of War to be available for distribution. Shipping directions have been given for the following amounts:

2,000 bags Portland cement.
3,942 industrial railroad ties.
12 kegs spikes.
37,921 linear feet cast-iron culvert pipe.
41,800 exploders.
72 concrete buggies.

FIELD AND OFFICE EQUIPMENT.

The following list of field and office equipment is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

1,062 engineer's transits.
1,146 engineer's levels.
1,188 Abney levels.
3,055 steel tapes.
1,440 level rods.
50 range poles.
180 metallic tapes.
2 universal testing machines, capacity 200,000 pounds.
400 rolls drafting paper.
110 rolls tracing cloth.
130 rolls blue-print paper.
120 rolls cross-section paper.
2,000 engineer's notebooks.
88 calculating machines.
6 pantagraphs.
228 universal drafting machines.
592 planimeters.
366 adding machines.
63 comptometers.
507 typewriters.
10 blue-print machines.
283 office desks.
198 typewriter desks.
480 office tables.
326 drafting tables.
365 drafting stools.
315 field office desks.
299 revolving office chairs.
805 office chairs.
3,387 units filing cases.
100 sets drafting instruments.
100 sets assorted outfits, drafting supplies.
100 pocket compasses.
100 stadia hand transits.
100 hand levels.
30 pedometers.
30 odometers.
60 steel tape-mending outfits.
9 plane tables.
108 aneroid barometers.

These materials are being allotted to the several State highway departments as different items appearing herein are declared by the Secretary of War to be available for distribution. Shipping directions have been given for the following amounts:

258 engineer's transits.
284 engineer's levels.
128 Abney levels.
95 steel tapes.
165 level rods.
40 range poles.
365 drafting stools.
140 field office desks.
16 office chairs.
3 calculating machines.
28 universal drafting machines.
14 planimeters.
6 adding machines.
8 comptometers.
58 typewriters.
19 office desks.

CAMP MESS AND KITCHEN EQUIPMENT.

The following list of camp mess and kitchen equipment is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

460 complete outfits of mess and kitchen equipment for units of various sizes averaging 40 men.
100 sets assorted kitchen utensils.
200 sets assorted dining room outfits.
23,000 galvanized iron buckets.
320 field ranges.
560 Sibley stoves.
120 heating stoves for tents.
140 medicine chests, complete.
17,000 tents from 10 by 10 to corral tents.
25,100 Army blankets.
316,000 square feet of tarpaulins, assorted sizes.

These materials are being allotted to the several State highway departments as different items appearing herein are declared by the Secretary of War to be available for distribution. Shipping directions have been given for the following amounts:

5,414 galvanized iron buckets.
17,563 tents.
25,087 Army blankets.

In the States where convict labor is largely employed camp mess and kitchen equipment is of great value in properly maintaining the necessary crews in the field, and in the States where great difficulty is being experienced in securing contractors to undertake road construction a considerable amount of work will have to be done by day labor forces. There will be many more road crews at work in the field this year than during any previous year, and this equipment will be of great advantage in getting such crews organized and operating.

GENERAL SUPPLIES.

The following list of general supplies is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

100 sets shelf and heavy hardware, assorted supplies.
4,200 axes, with handles.
1,600 ax handles.
1,680 adzes.
1,200 brush hooks.
1,900 crowbars.
1,080 cant hooks.
300 grindstones.
240 carborundum grinders.
1,000 hammers, assorted sizes.
100 riveting hammers.
2,130 striking hammers.
5,265 hatchets.
574 B. P. machinist hammers.
2,100 shovel handles.
7,050 pick handles.
920 sledge handles.
13,300 picks.
28,866 mattocks.
950 drills.
650 drill bits.
63,000 shovels.
2,000 spades.
1,260 crosscut saws.
475 monkey wrenches.
475 masons' trowels.
475 saw-filing outfits.
12,677 lanterns.
100 acetylene camp lights.
600 paintbrushes.
120 wire brushes.
100 tons drill steel.
10 tons horseshoes.
10 tons mule shoes.
1 ton horseshoe nails.
10 tons solid drill steel, ⅞, ¾, and 1 inch in diameter.
10 tons hollow drill steel, ⅞, ¾, and 1 inch in diameter.
6,000 pounds axle steel, assorted sizes.
6,000 pounds tire steel, assorted sizes.
1,679 log chains.

These materials are being allotted to the several State highway departments, as different items appearing herein are declared by the Secretary of War to be available for distribution. Shipping directions have been given for the following amounts:

6 axes, with handles.
192 ax handles.
106 striking hammers.
514 B. P. machinist hammers.
850 hatchets.
50 shovel handles.
260 pick handles.
3 sledge handles.
3,030 picks.
28,866 mattocks.
51,578 shovels.
2,000 spades.
10,960 lanterns.
150 log chains.

It will be observed that a large portion of the foregoing list consists of hand tools that are used constantly in road construction, particularly in the doing of work involving the drilling and blasting of rock in building or widening roads where rock excavation is encountered.

MACHINE TOOLS, WOODWORKING TOOLS, AND MISCELLANEOUS OUTFITS.

The following list of machine tools, woodworking tools, and miscellaneous outfits is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

15 complete machine-shop outfits, including lathes, drills, planers, fittings, etc.
3 swing engine lathes, 14 inches to 20 inches.
3 end milling machines.
3 planers.
4 power punches.
3 shapers.
4 power shears.
3 shop-screw presses, 25 tons capacity.
12 complete sets pipe dies, from 3 inches down.
12 complete sets tops and dies for bolts and nuts.
552 complete sets of blacksmith outfits, with forges, anvils, and accessories.
306 complete sets carpenter tools and chests.
11 complete woodworking outfits, including lathes, saws, planers, fittings, and accessories.
12 boring machines.
30 wheelwright outfits, complete.
10 tire setters.
10 farriers' outfits, complete.
6 diving outfits, complete, with pumps.

It is thought that the final requirements of the State highway departments as to a number of the above-mentioned articles will be in excess of this list, particularly blacksmith outfits, as they constitute a necessary adjunct to each well-equipped road crew.

ANIMALS.

The following list of animals is based on the estimated needs of the several States, ascertained as hereinbefore described:

2,050 heavy draft mules.
850 heavy draft horses.
10 saddle horses.

From a number of States we have had urgent requests to supply draft animals for use on trails in new territory, as in the forest areas, where the motor-truck equipment can not be used.

Respectfully,

C. F. MARVIN,
Acting Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I introduce a bill to restore to the colors and granting amnesty to soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain other persons. I desire to make a brief statement of the purpose of the bill to the Senate and then I shall ask that it be read.

Mr. President, the latest information I have is that since America entered the war there have been over 320,000 court-martial cases in France and in the United States. I am not giving the exact figures, but the substance of the information which has come to me is that twenty-odd thousand of these court-martial cases were general court-martial cases, and the other, the greater proportion, were summary court-martial cases. The aggregate of the sentences imposed in all these cases amounted to something like 28,000 years. The iniquity of the whole system was called to the attention of the Senate by me on the 31st day of December last, and shortly thereafter some steps were taken to relieve the situation, so far as the injustices were concerned, which were perpetrated against the American Army. A clemency board was appointed by the Secretary of War, and this board has investigated a great many cases, but not all, with the result that recommendations for clemency have been made from time to time, reducing the total amount of sentences from 28,000 years to about 6,700 years.

Mr. President, that very reduction in the aggregate of sentences imposed upon the American youth shows that there were iniquities in the system, that there were injustices perpetrated, and that there ought to be some relief. It must be remembered that under the view taken by the Secretary of War the clemency board has no power to do more than to make recommendations, and there is no power anywhere in the military system to revise or reverse or modify these excessive penalties where the court had jurisdiction and the proceedings have been regular.

The purpose of the bill which I introduce is not only to reduce the sentences to an irreducible minimum, but practically to wipe them all out where the sentences involve less than a felony under the Federal statutes, and to restore to the colors and to duty these young men who have come back to us from France, so that they may then be automatically discharged, as though they had not been charged with crime. It further proposes to refund to these young men who have had forfeitures of pay and allowances the full amount that has been taken from them; and this applies not only to the Army proper, but it applies to sailors and marines as well, and also to those in the military and naval service of the United States who were the subject of court-martial.

I call attention to it because I want the people to understand the terrors that have been inflicted upon these young men, not only in the sentences that have been imposed, but as well the cruelties that were perpetrated against them after they were committed to prison.

Mr. President, the Spanish Inquisition was not a marker to some of the cruelties that have been practiced against these soldiers in France. I am glad to say that after these soldiers get back to America the severity is somewhat mollified; but the fact that cruelties have been imposed upon these young men is shown by the fact that two, at least, of the officers who have come back from France, and who have been responsible for these cruelties, have been assailed and assaulted in the prison yard itself by the very men they had charge of. Wirz, at Andersonville, could not hold a candle to some of these men. The matter is being investigated by the House, and I propose to call to the attention of the Senate in due course cases which have come to me, which have been corroborated and verified, and which, I doubt not, never reached the public ear.

I ask that the bill may be read in order that the Senate may be advised as to its purpose. I prepared it myself, and worked at it yesterday, without the assistance of anyone, in order to meet the situation which has been presented to me from time to time. It may need amendment, and it will receive it in due course.

The bill (S. 2535) to restore to the colors and granting amnesty to soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain other persons, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all soldiers, sailors, and marines who may have been prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced by a general, summary, or any court-martial shall be immediately restored to duty and to the colors by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall be issued immediately upon the taking effect of this act: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to those charged with and sentenced for the commission of a crime which would involve, if prosecuted in the Federal courts, the conviction and sentence as of a felony.

SEC. 2. That thereafter and immediately upon the restoration of such soldier, sailor, or marine to duty and to the colors they shall be, each and all of them, honorably discharged from the service upon their own application just as has been and is done in cases of other men honorably discharged from the service, and that upon such discharge there shall be paid them all forfeitures of pay and allowances imposed upon them by sentence of court-martial. That thereafter such soldier, sailor, or marine shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and shall thereafter be entitled to all the rights, privileges, and emoluments now or hereafter provided by law for persons honorably discharged from said service.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where the sentence of court-martial has deprived any soldier, sailor, or marine of any of the rights of citizenship, the discharge of such soldier, sailor, or marine shall restore such rights as though no conviction had been had or sentence imposed.

SEC. 4. All persons engaged in the military or naval service of the United States since the 6th day of April, 1917, except as hereinbefore provided, are hereby granted full amnesty, and in all cases where the rights of citizenship have been taken away from them by reason of conviction and sentence by court-martial such rights are hereby restored: Provided, however, That this amnesty shall not apply to any cases of those charged with and sentenced for the commission of a crime which would involve, if prosecuted in the Federal courts, the conviction and sentence as of a felony.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a board of clemency and review, consisting of three persons versed in the law, two from civil life and one from the Army or Navy, the civilians to receive not to exceed $ per annum, and the military or naval appointee the salary provided by law for his rank, with full power, jurisdiction, and authority to review, revise, modify, reverse, or annul sentences imposed by courts-martial since April 6, 1917, of all persons engaged in the military or naval service of the United States when the crime charged, if prosecuted in the Federal courts, would involve a sentence as of a felony.

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000,000 to prosecute further work on projects and units thereof, under the reclamation act, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000,000 to resume and prosecute work on projects and units thereof, under the reclamation act, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000,000 for the relief of impoverished and suffering homesteaders and other farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that homesteaders, upon making affidavit to the effect of the failure of their crops on account of the serious drought conditions during the year 1919, shall file same with the register and receiver of the local land office and be absolved from residing for seven months or any period of time upon their homesteads, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CONSULATE AT SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA.

Mr. EDGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 128), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether or not it is true that the American consul, Benjamin F. Chase, and the American consulate at San Jose, Costa Rica, were fired upon with guns or pistols by the police of that city, or that country, or its Government, on or about June 12 last, and what action, if any, has been taken to protect the American consul and the consulate and American citizens and their property in that city and country.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PEACE TREATY.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit a resolution, and I ask that it may be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 129), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, requested as follows:

(1) In the consideration of the proposed treaty with Germany submitted to the Senate by the President July 10, 1919, for ratification, to conduct all its hearings, discussions, and considerations in open session, unless the committee shall affirmatively decide that some specific matter, by reason of the public interest, should be considered in executive session.

(2) That no executive session of the committee be held from which any Senator shall be excluded.

(3) That the sessions of the committee in the consideration of said proposed treaty be held in a room sufficiently large and so equipped as to provide for the convenient attendance of the members of the committee, all the Members of the Senate, the representatives of the press, and, if feasible, the general public.

(4) That, so far as practicable, public notice of all future meetings of the committee for the purpose of considering said proposed treaty be given in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course, I realize that under the rule the resolution should go over for at least a day. If anyone desires that its consideration shall go over of course I shall be glad to have it go over under the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I wish to announce that to-morrow, after the close of the morning business, at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], I shall submit a few remarks upon the subject of a league of nations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to announce that on Thursday next, after the conclusion of the morning business or as soon thereafter as there is an opportunity, I will address the Senate on the league of nations.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, following the addresses announced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], I shall to-morrow submit a few observations on the peace league.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MYERS submitted the following notice, which was read:

Notice is hereby given that under Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate I shall to-morrow or on a subsequent day when the Senate may be considering the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, move to suspend subdivisions 2 and 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, prohibiting the adding of new items of appropriation and prohibiting the proposing of general legislation on any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment in the form of a new section to the said bill H. R. 7413, which said proposed amendment in the nature of a new section is as follows:

"To resume and prosecute work on projects, and units thereof, under the reclamation act, stopped during the war, and to begin and prosecute existing projects and units thereof which are practically ready for prosecution, to be immediately available and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, $50,000,000."

Mr. MYERS submitted the following notice, which was read:

Notice is hereby given that under Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate I shall to-morrow, or on a subsequent day when the Senate may be considering the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, move to suspend subdivisions 2 and 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, prohibiting the adding of new items of appropriation and prohibiting the proposing of general legislation on any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment in the form of a new section to the said bill H. R. 7413, which said proposed amendment in the nature of a new section is as follows:

"To prosecute further work on projects and units thereof, under the reclamation act, now in course of construction and to begin and prosecute new projects and units thereof in drought-stricken regions of the United States, to be immediately available and to be expended under the terms and conditions of the reclamation act, except that in the matter of employment a preference shall be given to drought-stricken and suffering homesteaders, farmers, and ranchers, $5,000,000."

Mr. MYERS submitted the following notice, which was read:

Notice is hereby given that, under Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I shall, to-morrow, or on a subsequent day when the Senate may be considering the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, move to suspend subdivisions 2 and 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, prohibiting the adding of new items of appropriation and prohibiting the proposing general legislation on any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment in the form of a new section to the said bill H. R. 7413, which said proposed amendment, in the nature of a new section, is as follows:

"That for the relief of impoverished and suffering homesteaders and other farmers in the drought-stricken western regions of the United States and for the purpose of furnishing to such of the aforesaid homesteaders and farmers as are without means or credit, and who are faced by starvation, food for themselves and their families and feed for their live stock and seed for another seeding, until another crop may be put in the ground, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended and disbursed under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may formulate, in conjunction with the governors of the various States affected and such boards, committees, and other instrumentalities as any such governor may offer and the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to accept; all such disbursements herein contemplated and provided for to be donations or loans, as the Secretary of the Interior may decide, and any such loans to be for such length of time and upon such terms and with or without security, as the Secretary of the Interior may order; and if upon security, upon such security as he may require."

Mr. MYERS submitted the following notice, which was read:

Notice is hereby given that, under Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I shall, to-morrow, or on a subsequent day when the Senate may be considering the bill (H. R. 7413) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, move to suspend subdivisions 2 and 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, prohibiting the adding of new items of appropriation and prohibiting the proposing general legislation on any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment in the form of a new section to the said bill H. R. 7413, which said proposed amendment, in the nature of a new section, is as follows:

"That during and for the calendar year of 1919 and for any homesteader's current year of homesteading which may fall principally in 1919 in sections of the country where great and serious drought conditions prevail homesteaders whose crops are almost or entire failures and who have no crop of any substantial value and who find it necessary to leave their homesteads and to hunt employment in order to live and obtain food for themselves, their families, and work stock, if any, shall, upon making affidavit to such facts and filing the same with the register and receiver of the local land office be absolved from residing for seven months or any period of time at all upon their homesteads; and as to such for the year 1919 or the current homestead year of all such homesteaders the law requiring residence upon homesteads is suspended; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed, upon compliance herewith by any homesteader, to waive all requirements of residence by such homesteader for such year and to permit final proof to be made, when offered to be made, without evidence of residence or cultivation during said year: Provided, That such affidavit be made and so filed, and in that event it shall be accepted in lieu of proof of seven months' residence for one year."

CLAIM OF THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE (H. DOC. NO. 156).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State in relation to a claim presented by the Government of France against this Government on account of losses sustained by a French citizen in connection with the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones, which was undertaken by Gen. Horace Porter, formerly American ambassador to France; and, referring to my message of June 4, 1918, concerning this matter, I recommend that an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
21 July, 1919.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7413. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THE POTASH INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last Friday the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] had published in the RECORD an article with reference to potash—its price and its importation. I have a letter from Mr. Myron M. Parker, addressed to me to-day, in partial answer to the same, which he desires to have printed in the RECORD with other matters as an answer to the article. I ask that, without reading, it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21, 1919.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you are aware, Representative FORDNEY, on the 4th of June, introduced a bill—H. R. 4870—in the House to encourage and protect for a limited time the potash industry of this country. The Ways and Means Committee have concluded their hearings on the bill, and it is expected that it will be reported to the House at an early date.

Under the provisions of this bill domestic potash, when mixed with imported potash at $1.50 a unit, the present market price, would be sold to the farmers for the first 24 months at $1.83 a unit, for the next 12 months at $1.75, and for the next two years at $1.50 or less. The difference in price is so small that no hardship would be imposed on the farmers.

When the importation of German potash was stopped by reason of the war, the Department of the Interior and the War Industries Board urged upon our people the necessity of developing the domestic potash industry. Congress made an appropriation of $45,000 to aid in this effort. Dr. Gale, of the Geological Survey, and other experts of the Government, on investigation, found that in Searles Lake, Calif., there was potash enough to supply our domestic needs for 100 years. They discovered that in the Nebraska lakes there was even more potash than in Searles Lake.

In addition to these sources of supply, potash is now made from cement plants, from beet sugar, from lucite in Wyoming and alunite in Utah, from the green sands of New Jersey, and from many other sources. As a result, these plants which have recently reached completion, and which are now in operation, can produce 125,000 tons of potash a year, and if given protection for three years will more than supply all our domestic requirements, thereby preventing future foreign monopoly.

Over $40,000,000 have been expended in the development of the industry. So far as is known, only one plant has been able to amortize itself. Unless protection is given all these millions will be lost, and, what is of far greater importance, the American industry, an industry that was encouraged and fostered by the Government, will be killed.

In the magazine article "Victory," submitted to the Senate by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN on the 18th instant, many misstatements were made. One statement was to the effect that imported potash would cost only $50 a ton. The facts are the lowest price imported potash is now offered at is $1.50 a unit, which would be $150 a ton and not $50 a ton, as stated in the magazine article.

The article contained many other statements equally absurd.

The Department of Commerce reports that economic conditions are more changed in Germany and France than they are in the United States, so much so that potash will probably never be sold at less than $150 a ton, the price now asked.

State chemists—copy of their reports inclosed—of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee, in 1918, certified that domestic potash was equally as good as that which is imported.

Speaking for the American industry, may I express the hope that you will extend your valued influence in protecting our most-needed and most-important industry.

Very truly, yours,

MYRON M. PARKER,
Attorney for the United States Potash Producers' Association.

AMERICAN-MADE POTASH.

(By J. C. Pridmore, agronomist, Southern Fertilizer Association.)

"Since the potash now used in commercial fertilizers of this country is American made, some farmers have shown a disposition to wonder if it is as good as the potash that formerly came from Germany. The State chemists of the South are all of one accord in declaring that the plants made use of potash irrespective of its source, and that American-made potash is as good as any other.

"Since the German supply has been cut off the fertilizer manufacturers have been forced to develop the American sources of this needed plant food. At present there are three important sources from which the fertilizer industry of this country gets potash. These are the by-products of cement factories; a few small natural deposits, similar to those in Germany, found in Nebraska, Utah, and California; and kelp, little of which reaches the cotton belt.

"The chief potash salts exported from Germany were furnished in the form of muriate, as in muriate kainite; in the form of sulphate, as in high-grade sulphate and double-manure salts; in the form of mixed muriate and sulphate, as in manure salts. The water-soluble potash in these different materials ranged from 12 to 50 per cent.

"The potash produced in this country from the sources already mentioned, and used in mixed fertilizers, is being furnished in the same forms identically as those imported from Germany and, in addition, as a mixture of carbonate and sulphate. The water-soluble potash in these different materials ranges from 6 to 48 per cent.

"From the following statements it will be seen that the potash used in fertilizers to-day is like that which was imported from Germany, and that the composition, in terms of potash, may be approximately the same in the materials from both sources. That the consumers' minds may be set at rest the State chemists of the Southeastern States have been consulted on this matter, and their authoritative views are given in the following statements:

ALABAMA.

"In making a report upon the analysis of fertilizers we only report the potash which is soluble in water, and if the potash contained in the fertilizer is in a water-soluble form there is no reason why it should not give just as good results per unit as the German potash salts. Considerable amount of potash has been produced in the last year or two from deposits found in Nebraska and from kelp. Some is being supplied through the medium of cottonseed meal.

"All the above-mentioned forms of potash should give as good results when applied to crops that are in need of this constituent, and I see no reason for any apprehension as to the quality of potash as being supplied at the present time." (B. B. Ross, State chemist.)

ARKANSAS.

"Americans can make and are making just as good potash as ever left a German seaport. A fertilizer analyzing 2 per cent potash by the official methods is just as good as regards potash as any fertilizer ever manufactured. Anyone who persists in believing that the only satisfactory potash bears the label 'Made in Germany' is playing directly into the hands of the German Potash Trust." (J. B. Rather, State chemist.)

FLORIDA.

"There is no difference in the muriate of potash and the sulphate of potash as produced in American materials and the same materials from Germany.

"American-made potash: The American salts, however, are generally mixed salts and are seldom strictly muriates or sulphates. The American salts usually are largely carbonates, sulphates, and muriates mixed. I believe that goods made from American potash are as effective as those made from German potash, provided always that the percentage of potash guaranteed is found in the goods." (R. E. Rose, State chemist.)

LOUISIANA.

"To those who really need potash I wish to say that I have never had any indication from the three experiment stations where sources of potash have been under investigation that sulphate or muriate of potash manufactured in this country is inferior in any way to imported products, except as applied to tobacco. The form in which potash is applied does have some influence on the quality of tobacco, but for all other crops there is no reliable evidence known to me that the previously imported products have any superiority whatever over our homemade goods." (W. R. Dodson, director experiment station.)

MISSISSIPPI.

"Fertilizers are manufactured and sold under a definite guaranty, as heretofore. Materials entering into their composition are just as good as they have ever been in the history of the fertilizer industry. Of course, the general conditions make prices high, but there has certainly been no deterioration in quality.

"There is absolutely no ground for the statement that the soluble potash in American potash salts is not equivalent, pound for pound, to that in salts heretofore imported. Farmers need feel no hesitancy whatever in the purchase of their fertilizers this year. They are as good as they have ever been." (W. F. Hand, State chemist.)

GEORGIA.

"Potash is potash, no matter whether it originated in Germany or in this country. Our domestic sulphate of potash or muriate of potash is just as effective as plant food as others. It is absurd for anyone to state that the fertilizer made with domestic potash as a source of this element is not as effective as a similar goods of the same analysis made with German salts as the source of potash, and it is erroneous for anyone to believe or state that the locality from which the material was obtained has anything to do with the value or availability of the potash in the guano." (W. C. Dumas, State chemist.)

NORTH CAROLINA.

"The character or quality of potash being used in fertilizers this season is mainly carbonate and sulphate, and potash in organic materials, such as tobacco stems, cottonseed meal, etc. These are all good forms of potash, and will give good results in the growing of crops. The forms of potash from Germany were muriate and sulphate mainly. The forms of potash being obtained and used in our fertilizers are just as good and effective as the German kind of potash." (B. W. Kilgore, State chemist.)

SOUTH CAROLINA.

"Our fertilizer laws require the guarantee of water-soluble potash only. Every per cent of water-soluble potash in American potash is worth dollar for dollar to the farmer just as much as the water-soluble potash from Germany. The farmer may rest assured that 6 or 12 or 48 per cent of water-soluble potash furnished by American sources is of exactly the same value to him as 6 or 12 or 48 per cent of water-soluble potash furnished by German sources or by sources from any other country." (R. N. Brackett, State chemist.)

TENNESSEE.

"One lot of muriate of potash of a certain analysis is just as effective as other muriate of potash of the same analysis whether imported from Germany or produced in this country. The same is true of sulphate and carbonate of potash. It is true that the potash salts produced in this country are not so rich in potash as some of the salts which we formerly got from Germany, but the fertilizer manufacturers take this into account when making up their formulas and simply use more of the domestic salts than they formerly used of the German salts, and in this way produce a finished product of the same analysis and value to the farmer." (J. W. Sample, State chemist.)

"In view of the above statements, coming from such high officials as the State chemists in these various States, we are justified in drawing the conclusion that the water-soluble or available potash produced in America is as valuable for plant food, pound for pound, as that which we formerly imported from Germany, and that the farmer is safe in accepting the manufacturer's guaranty as to the potash content of fertilizers at the present time."

DUNWOODY INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on account of charges made on the floor a few days ago as to the Dunwoody Industrial Institute and Dr. Prosser's connection therewith, I ask that a telegram I have received from the acting director of that institute be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., July 18, 1919.

Senator W. S. KENYON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Representative of Minneapolis Journal just called my attention to a charge made in the Senate which involved Dunwoody Institute. Dunwoody is an endowed school, offering free trade instruction to residents of State of Minnesota. We are training rehabilitation men who are residents of Minnesota free—30 in number. For nonresidents—10 in number—a tuition is charged sufficient to cover actual cost of instruction—ten to twenty dollars a month. Eighty try-out students, during special six weeks' summer session, are being trained at $15 a month.

H. W. KAVEL,
Acting Director Dunwoody Institute.

PROPAGANDA ON THE PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. KENYON. I have on my desk a number of sample telegrams which are being received by various Senators, this being the package of one Senator, in relation to the most tremendous propaganda that ever has been instituted in this country, namely, that of the packers to influence Congress with relation to the passage of the bill known as the bill to regulate the packing industry. Everywhere they can reach these telegrams are secured to be poured in on Congress—from bankers, merchants, farmers, and everyone else. It shows the tremendous power the packers exercise in this country and the far-reaching intertwining relationships.

I am not objecting at all, of course, to information being sent to Representatives and Senators, but I do think Senators ought to know the influences that are at work stirring up the letters and telegrams they are receiving in this tremendous propaganda.

While I did not rise to announce a speech at a definite day, and I realize that the time is to be taken up pretty much by speeches on the league of nations, yet at the first opportunity presented I am going to submit some remarks on the league of packers propaganda and show to Senators how the telegrams and letters they are receiving are in response to the circulars and letters sent out by the packers, and that every influence they can reach in this country is being put to work to stimulate this propaganda.

A CALL TO DUTY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an editorial from the New York World of July 11, which I ask be inserted in the RECORD.

Their being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CALL TO DUTY.

"President Wilson's address, in presenting to the Senate the treaty of peace with the covenant of the league of nations, can not fail to make a profound impression on the mind and purpose of the American people. And it was the American people to whom the President was speaking.

"Mr. Wilson has never been more felicitous in any of his public utterances than he was yesterday when he explained the stupendous difficulties with which the Paris conference had been compelled to grapple in rebuilding the peace of the world and the reasons why it had been found imperative to make the league of nations the keystone of the structure.

"The President's address, in the main, was an appeal to the American people to finish their great work and make it secure. He put the issue of peace upon the same high plane that he put the issue of war, when the United States became the moral arbiter of the world. That moral leadership remains. It can not be sacrificed for the mean, sordid motives that actuate the opposition to the league of nations without bringing civilization again to the verge of chaos, and if that comes there will be no security for the American people in a pretended isolation that events have made wholly fictitious.

"One of the President's senatorial critics complained yesterday that the address was "internationalism." It probably had never occurred to this eminent statesman that there is likely to be a great deal of internationalism in relations between nations, and that every pact between nations is an expression of internationalism in some form or another. What is the chief concern of the world to-day is the manner in which this internationalism is to express itself—whether it is to be the internationalism of Wilson and Lloyd-George and Clemenceau, or the internationalism of Lenin and Trotski and Bela Kun—whether it is to be the internationalism that subjects the nations to the reign of law or the internationalism that subjects them to the reign of anarchy.

"Senatorial partisanship and parochialism may try to obscure that issue, but they can not obscure the facts. Great powers have been conferred upon the Senate by the Constitution of the United States, but the power to turn back the clock of history is not one of them. Either the United States must assume this moral leadership to which the President refers or it must turn its back upon all the ideals for which it has been fighting, including even the safety and security of the Nation, for if the extremists of the Senate have their way we shall become the most distrusted country in the world for having run away from our responsibilities in the shameful fear that, in spite of all our wealth and resources and power, we might incur obligations in discharging those responsibilities.

"The President's address is more than a plea for the treaty and the league. It is a call to duty no less imperative than that which he made to Congress on April 2, 1917, when the United States was summoned to war 'for the things that we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free.'

"It is no longer Germany, but a minority in the United States Senate that is the great obstacle to the fulfillment of this program to which the American people dedicated themselves two years ago. With German militarism overthrown, this Senate counsel of cowardice now interposes to blight the victory and cheat mankind of the fruits of its suffering and sacrifice. That is the issue, and the only issue in this contest, that has been created by a blind and insensate partisanship."

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In addition to that, I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Osmond, of 421 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass. The Senate will note that this comes from the very Hub itself. It incloses a resolution which was passed at Pilgrim Hall in Boston, Mass., in favor of the treaty of peace. Of course when a thing comes not only from Boston but from Pilgrim Hall, it ought to be very persuasive to the average American intellect. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

421 BOYLSTON STREET,
Boston, Mass., July 11, 1919.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with the wishes of the meeting held at Pilgrim Hall, Boston, Wednesday, July 9, I am inclosing you a copy of a resolution passed.

Yours, very truly, M. T. OSMOND.

"We believe that the United States should enter the league of nations, which aims to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security.

"We believe that the covenant of the league of nations can not be separated from the peace treaty, since the latter was founded on the assumption that the league of nations would be formed.

"We believe that delay on the part of the United States Senate to ratify the peace treaty will seriously jeopardize the peace of the world: Therefore

"We urge the United States Senate to ratify the treaty of peace, including the covenant, without reservation or amendment, as soon as it is submitted for ratification."

(The above resolution was adopted by a large majority at a public meeting held Wednesday, July 9, 1919, at Pilgrim Hall, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also hold in my hand an article by Moorfield Story, a very distinguished Massachusetts man, entitled "Why the treaty should be ratified."

I will say, in connection with Mr. Story's article, that in very many public affairs, although he belongs to a different school from me, I have found him to be a man of remarkable humanitarianism and remarkable clearness of intellect. I ask to have the article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY THE TREATY SHOULD BE RATIFIED.
(By Moorfield Story.)

"We are now face to face with a vital question whether the treaty of peace shall be ratified.

"The country wants peace and a league of nations, and the treaty secures both.

"Until we have peace the crushing expenses of war continue, and men can not return to their normal work. Until they do their idle hands are easily turned to mischief, and forces which tend to disorganize society threaten our civilization.

"The statesmen who met in Paris would not have been forgiven if, with the terrible experinces of the war fresh in our memories, they had made no effort to save the world from another such calamity. They were bound to respect the universal wish for some league of nations.

"After months of negotiation, their treaty is before us. No nation and no man made it or could make it. In all probability it satisfies no one, but it is the best result on which the nations could unite. Every negotiator, much against his will, has yielded something. Everyone can suggest changes which in his judgment would be improvements. Anyone can imagine disasters that may occur notwithstanding the treaty, or perhaps because of it, but it is not within the power of any man or any body of men to draw a treaty which no one can criticize, or which will insure perfect results in an imperfect world. The Senate of the United States can not make a new treaty, and if it refuses to ratify this one the only result must be new negotiations, sure to end in nothing that will satisfy everybody, and equally sure to be attended with ill feeling and suspicion which can hardly fail to leave behind them a dangerous international atmosphere.

"Men say that this treaty amends the Constitution because it limits our sovereignty. Any contract which either man or nation makes limits the maker's freedom of action since it binds the maker to do something which he was not bound to do before. In no other sense does this treaty limit our sovereignty. For more than a century this country has been bound by treaty not to build forts on our Canadian boundary or to mantain warships on the Great Lakes. This treaty, our arbitration treaties, and all our other treaties to a certain extent limit our sovereignty. None the less we must make treaties. The claim of those who oppose the treaty strikes at the treaty-making power itself.

"The present treaty with the right to withdraw and the requirement of unanimous consent to any important action by the league of nations is an experiment which guards us very carefully. Put into one scale the very worst that can happen to us, if the treaty is ratified, and in the other what is sure to happen, to say nothing of what we can imagine, if the treaty is not ratified, and can anyone doubt which scale tips the beam?

"If the world is left as the war found it, the preparation for war, the explosives, the poisonous gas, the forts, the guns and ships, the aeroplanes and submarines, the standing armies and the enormous fleets, in a word the competition in devising means of destruction involve an expense in money and life which is simply appalling. And what must be the position of this country before the world, this country which claims to have entered the war to realize high ideals and not for any selfish interest, if it refuses to unite with other civilized nations in taking the little step toward better things to which the treaty commits us. It would be a shameful betrayal of civilization at the greatest crisis in history.

"The treaty should be ratified as it stands. If its provisions need amendment these amendments can be made hereafter, and are far more likely to be made, if we have shown toward our Allies confidence and good will by agreeing to the compact which our representatives have made than if we exhibit suspicion of their honesty and selfish disregard of every interest but our own by refusing to unite with them.

"And let us hope that in the discussion of the treaty the Senators of the United States will not degrade their country by giving voice to racial jealousy or suspicion as to the motives and aims of nations which have stood side by side with us in the great contest for freedom and civilization, and thus destroy that harmony upon which the world's best hope rests to-day. Let them forget party and the chance of partisan advantage, and above all let not their feeling about the President lead them to reject the treaty. He is the President of the United States upon whom devolved the duty of negotiating this treaty. The task was one of well-nigh insuperable difficulties. If there were those who felt that he should have taken counsel with the leaders of the Senate more freely than he did, let these leaders not justify his course in not doing so by exhibiting to their fellow countrymen their unfitness to deal with the problem before him. Let them rise above party and let their country have peace, a result which can only be attained by ratifying the treaty as signed. Any amendment makes a new treaty to which the other powers must agree, postpones peace, and in every way intensifies the dangers which now threaten the world."

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an address by Hon. James M. Beck before the Union League of Philadelphia, Pa., on the league of nations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

[Address by Hon. James M. Beck before the Union League of Philadelphia, May 8, 1919.]

"Hon. Edwin S. Stuart, president of the Union League, presided, and introduced Mr. Beck, as follows:

"'Gentlemen of the Union League, it has been the custom of the Union League since its organization to invite distinguished guests here to address us on important national matters, and tonight we have as our guest a native of Philadelphia. He was born here, and while he has not always lived within its borders for the last few years, his interest, his love, and his affection have always been for the city of his birth—Philadelphia. I introduce to you the distinguished guest of the evening, the honorable James M. Beck, who will address us on the important question of the league of nations.' [Applause.]

"Mr. Beck was heartily welcomed and responded as follows:

"'Mr. President and members of the league, your organization is called the Union League. It is a beautiful name. The word "Union" has more sacred memories than even the more formal title to our Nation, the United States, because the latter speaks for the Commonwealth as a political entity, while the Union means not only the aggregate of its living citizenship, and a total of its material assets, but suggests all the traditions, achievements, and institutions of the American Commonwealth. It was to save that Union that the Civil War was fought, and out of that epic struggle grew this great and efficient organization.

"'The perpetuity of the Union, as I have thus defined it, is vitally at stake by reason of that which has been done in the last five months in the name of America, for I believe that the league of nations, as now proposed to the American people, threatens the impairment of important constitutional principles of our Government as well as one of its noblest traditions, which, though not written in the Constitution textually, is as essential to the perpetuity and happiness of the United States as the letter of the Constitution itself. To that great theme I shall briefly address myself.

"'Preliminarily, we must consider not merely the text of the covenant of the league of nations but the method whereby it is sought to be forced upon the American people. This has given rise to a grave constitutional crisis, which, if the Senate ignored, a fatal precedent would be set, which, in my judgment, would change the form of our Government in the conduct of its foreign relations to our ultimate undoing.

"'One hundred and thirty-two years ago in this city of Philadelphia—and no city ought to have, by reason of its great traditions and intimate connection with the creation of the Constitution, a greater interest in the league of nations than this great historic city—there met an assemblage of 55 men, who attempted to construct a form of government which they regarded as necessary for the perpetuity of democratic institutions in the American Commonwealth. They were men of surpassing ability. While their personnel differed to some extent from that of the First and Second Continental Congresses, yet the framers of the Constitution, who met from May, 1787, until December 17, 1787, in Independence Hall, well merit the noble eulogium that the elder Pitt applied to the earlier convention when he said:

"'I must declare and avow that in all my reading and study—and I have read Thucydides and have studied and admired the master States of the world—that for solidity of reason, force of sagacity, and wisdom of conclusion, under such a complication of circumstances, no nation or body of men can stand in preference to the General Congress at Philadelphia.' [Applause.]

"'Such was the judgment of the founder of the modern British Empire.

"'Those 55 men in their deliberations took a wide survey of the whole history of mankind before they reported to the people of the Colonies the Constitution under which we are greatly privileged to live. In their final and deliberate judgment one of the most important features of this covenant was that our country should be distinguished from other nations in its refusal to concentrate in one man exclusive power over the foreign relations of the Government, and especially over the issues of peace and war.

"'Prior to that time it had been the policy of other Governments, whether in form republican or monarchical, to vest such plenary power over foreign relations in an executive ruler, whether king or president. The determination of foreign policies was not regarded as a legislative function.

"'The founders of this Republic, seeing that most of the wars that had followed with such quick succession from the very dawn of the Christian era until the time they were legislating were too often the result of the selfish ambition of one man, determined to take the war power out of the control of the Chief Magistrate of the Government that they were about to create, and they refused to give him exclusive power to determine finally the destinies of this country with respect to its foreign relations. To them that change in method marked the difference between a monarchy and a republic, and they intended to found a republic and a republic they did found, and a republic, please God, it shall remain.' [Applause.] 'Thus and therefore they resolved that while the President—because of Congress not being continuously in session—should have an initiative in the mere negotiation of a treaty, yet that no treaty should bind the people of the United States unless it was ratified "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

"'Bear in mind the words, for there is not a tautological word in all the Constitution. No document is of more admirable simplicity. If Gouverneur Morris could have drafted the treaty of peace or the league of nations, he would have set a very commendable example of simplicity and clarity to the draftsmen who have now given the world a peace treaty of 80,000 words. When our Constitution, where every word has its meaning, provided that the President should not put a treaty in force except with the "advice and consent of the Senate," these words meant more than the final act of the Senate in ratifying a treaty, negotiated by the Executive and to which the Senate, as some publicists have claimed, is morally committed by the Executive. If you will read President Wilson's History of Popular Government, you will there see recorded years ago as his deliberate conviction that in the practical working of our institutions, whenever the President or his representatives shall negotiate a treaty, thereafter the function of the Senate has virtually ceased and the Senate must ratify that to which it is morally committed by the negotiations of the Executive. That that view can not be right is best shown by the fact that it was not a mere majority of the representatives of the sovereign States which was to determine the foreign relations of the Government, but the concurrence of two-thirds was necessary before the United States could be committed to any treaty stipulations.

"'Thus a crisis now confronts this Nation. Deliberately and avowedly, for at least it can be granted that there has been no hypocritical pretense about it, the President has said that he would so interweave the league of nations with the peace treaty as to make its rejection exceedingly difficult, if not impossible. Such an unprecedented threat was fairly implied in the challenge he flung to the Senate in his speech in the Metropolitan Opera House, in New York City, before he last sailed for the new seat of government in Paris. The President did not disguise the fact that his reason for this interweaving of a very extraordinary proposition for supergovernment with a most complex treaty of peace was that the Senate would be under the duress of events to accept the treaty as a whole, inclusive of the league of nations, as to which more than one-third of the Senators had placed themselves on record as opposing it in its then proposed form.

"'This crisis is emphasized by facts that perhaps are not fully apprehended by all Americans. I was in England in the autumn of 1918, and discussed the matter of the league of nations with many prominent English publicists. At that time not 10 per cent favored the league, and, in any event, the great weight of educated public opinion in England was heartily opposed to any interweaving of a league of nations with the treaty of peace. They were in a state of stupor. They had been driven by the enormous weight and burdens of the war almost to their knees by financial exhaustion. What they wanted above all things was to make a speedy peace without the subject being in any manner intermingled with a league of nations, which they thought could more properly be made the subject of future deliberations when the world was in a more normal state. If that was the view of England, it is known that it was even more the view of France, for it is a matter of common knowledge that when the President first went to Paris and laid before the French Government his scheme of the league of nations, France, in the person of its great prime minister, Clemenceau, opposed it, and was so opposed to it that it finally required the reluctant cooperation of Great Britain to compel Clemenceau to withdraw his objection to the interweaving of the league of nations with the peace treaty. Moreover, when the President came home to this country for a very brief visit, and when, having come home, the 36 Senators, more than a third of the Senate, formally placed themselves on record as being opposed to the covenant of the league of nations as then proposed, the French and the British Governments then agreed to the necessity of making immediate peace, for it could not be safely longer postponed, and it is credibly reported that President Wilson was notified that it was their judgment, presumably in deference to the wishes of the Senate as the final treaty-making power in this country, that there should be an elimination of the league of nations from the proposed treaty of peace. It is certain that the French foreign minister, Pichon, made an official statement on behalf of his Government that France had taken that position, and yet on the same day the President issued a statement that the league of nations would be interwoven with the peace treaty, as he had said in his speech in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and again yielding to his insistence the league of nations was put back into the treaty, and was so interwoven that no one can be blind to the surpassing difficulty that now confronts the Senate in the discharge of its constitutional function of passing upon the league of nations to do so without prejudice to the interests of the world.

"'Thus without any real necessity for the course, against the wishes of our greatest allies, the league of nations was almost inextricably entangled with the most complex and difficult peace treaty that the world has ever known, and the Senate must now discuss the league of nations, not fairly and fully upon its merits as one of the most important proposals ever put before any legislative body but under the trying and almost impossible duress of knowing that if it rejects this treaty it may prolong the agony of an overtortured world for an indefinite period of time.

"'The Senate of the United States, acting through distinguished Senators, had given due notice, of which the other nations were bound to take account from a previous knowledge of the character of the credentials of the American peace commissioners, that this country would consider the proposed covenant to see how far it compromised the sovereignty of the United States and how far it destroyed the most sacred traditions of this country. Our allies, being so advised, have for reasons which commended themselves to them, refused to take the reasonable precaution of separating the peace treaty proper from the league of nations, and they have at the instance of President Wilson so interwoven them that they are like a tangled skein of silk. It would take infinite pains to take them apart.

"'In this manner, in a covert and insidious way, the great fundamental principle of the Constitution, that only "with the advice and consent of the Senate," freely expressed and freely given, should any foreign commitment be entered into, has been challenged by our own Chief Magistrate, who was sworn to defend and not destroy the Constitution of the fathers. When Cromwell entered the Commons and pointing to the mace, the symbol of its authority, said, "Take away that bauble," he did not treat the great council of the realm with more contempt than President Wilson in the last five months has treated the Senate of the United States. In thus attempting to defeat the coordinate power of the Senate President Wilson challenges the integrity of the Federal Constitution.' [Prolonged applause.]

"'We can not afford not to take up that challenge. If it were only a question of the living generation, we might say, "It matters not to us. We want peace as much as any other nation. We have had our burdens in this war, due to some necessary expenses and to many of unparalleled extravagance. Let us return as quickly as possible and at any sacrifice to normal ways. We will not stand upon any constitutional principle, however valuable it may be."

"'But we are trustees for posterity. Just as we took the torch of constitutional liberty from the hands of preceding generations, from the men who saved the Union in the great Civil War, we must pass that torch on to the succeeding generations. We owe this alike to the dead and the unborn. We must never let it become a precedent that the Senate, the great treaty-making power of this country, more broadly representative of the whole Nation than any single man, however estimable his character may be, shall abdicate its exalted office as the final judge of our foreign policy.' [Applause.] 'This is not a monarchy in which the king has sole control of our foreign relations. If it were, it would be disastrous for this country, because in the long run the wars of the world have resulted too often from the caprices or ambitions of single individuals.

"'The great Senate of the United States, representing 48 sovereign Commonwealths, speaking for a people of 100,000,000, should say to our representatives in Paris: "We will do as we have always done; we will not accept dictation from the Executive. We will consider this treaty and accept or reject it in whole or in part as the interests of America require. We propose to consider this question calmly, soberly, advisedly, and deliberately and in a spirit free from narrow partisanship. We will consider it not only in the light of all that is due to America, but in the light of the best interests of civilization. If there ever was a time in the history of the world that any nation could not afford to be selfish, it is this hour. The Senate will consider it in that spirit and having reached the conclusion of that which is fair to the United States and to the whole world the Senate will act not merely perfunctorily, but in accord with the great traditions and precedents of that august body."

"'There is much in this covenant for a league of nations that is admirable.

"'It can be divided into four classes: First, the declaratory, that seeks to announce new public policies for civilization, as, for example, that a war or even threat of war against one nation is the just concern of all. That declaration of the solidarity of mankind and the collective responsibility of all nations for the peace of the world is a noble utterance. The difficulty is, as any sensible man knows, that the world is still centuries behind it. We had the same declaration in The Hague Convention, only voiced with incomparably more moral authority than the league of nations can give it, and yet the moment the great cataclysmic clash came all recognition of collective responsibility vanished among all nations, including our own, except a few, who were left for three weary years to bear almost alone the brunt of the battle for civilization. For three years we remained neutral even when the ravages of war had reached our own lands and our own people. He, whose boast it was that he "kept us out of war," could profitably talk less of duty of humanity.' [Applause.]

"'Then there are the advisory provisions of the league, those in which the league simply meets in the spirit of friendly conference to consult for the good of the world. For the most part, they are admirable.

"'The third class may be called the judicial provisions, which provide for the adjustment of international controversies by arbitration or mediation. While containing little that is novel, yet they are wise in moving with due conservatism and a reasonable regard for the actualities of life. They, too, deserve the support of reasonable men of all nations.

"'The fourth and most important class may be called the "coercive" provisions, weak and anemic, but nevertheless in a rudimentary or foetal stage of development, representing an ambitious attempt to create a world State, to which all the constituent States of the league will contribute a portion of their sovereignty.

"'These coercive provisions, especially article 10, to which I shall especially ask your attention, present an issue of vital importance to this country, and that is whether, in the illimitable future, we shall adhere to the policy of George Washington, as declared in the immortal Farewell Address, and which was, in a fine and noble sense, to "mind our own business," or whether we will become (as a great leader of men, so recently taken from us—would to God he were here to-day to combat this heresy—said before his death) the "Meddlesome Mattie of Nations." Shall we implicate this Nation in all the intricate affairs of the world with the obvious penalties that will come to us as a Nation of great potential power or will we maintain the traditions taught by our fathers and accepted by all our public men of all parties until recent years?

"'We are at the parting of the ways. We will either inextricably entangle ourselves, not merely in European politics but in the more difficult problems of the Far East, or else pursue our own splendid way of independent self-development, minding our own business, but without in any manner ignoring our duty to civilization as one of the master States of the world. It is not a question of isolation—that is impossible—but of independence. We can profitably recall Washington's sound counsel given in a letter to Gouverneur Morris on December 22, 1795:

"'My policy has been and will continue to be * * * to maintain friendly terms with but to be independent of all the nations of the earth.

"'Let me illustrate by some recent occurrences. A few days ago it was announced in the authentic communiques that our peace commissioners in Paris—and that ought to be said in the singular number' [laughter and applause]—'had taken Fiume from Italy, had created Danzig into an independent free State, and had recognized the British protectorate over Egypt, with some reservation about the details of British control and with the hope that a larger measure of home rule would be given to the Egyptian people. When I read that I wondered if His Majesty King George V should suddenly state to-morrow that he had given the Philippines to Japan, created Hawaii into an independent State, and had recognized the American protectorate in Porto Rico, with the hope that the United States would grant a larger measure of autonomous government, how the people of the United States would take His Majesty's intervention in our affairs.' [Laughter and applause.]

"'In a dispatch dated April 17 to the New York Evening Post, one of the President's organs, we learn:

"'There was no meeting of the council of four to-day because of the extraordinary number of engagements made by the President, who, beginning at 11 o'clock, gave an average of 15 minutes each to delegations from America, Europe, the Near East, and the Far East, besides attending to routine matters put up to him by his secretaries. From 11 until 11.10 the President talked to a Chinese delegation, then listened 20 minutes to the French National Congress on the question of the Rhine as a frontier. Fifteen minutes went to the Assyrian-Chaldean national delegation, the same to the Slavic-Dalmatians, who presented the results of a plebiscite in the Dalmatian territory occupied by Italy. Ten minutes went to the chargé d'affaires for San Marino—which, I believe, has 11,000 people—

"'Ten more to the Swiss minister of foreign affairs; 10 to Rose Schneiderman and Mary Anderson, representing the American Women's Trade Union League; 15 to a long-haired Greek patriarch from Constantinople, which is the seat of the orthodox eastern Christianity; 15 to Essad Pasha to present Albania's claims; and 15 minutes to the Greek minister from Rome. The President then went to lunch with Secretary of War Baker' [laughter], 'who informed him about American matters.

"'How grateful we should be that between the courses of a lunch our President was informed about matters of our Nation of great importance and undeniably in need of urgent action! Our satisfaction is, however, lessened by the fact that he received his information through Secretary Baker.' [Laughter.]

"'Beginning again at 4 o'clock, Herbert Hoover got a quarter of an hour of the President's time, and was followed by a Roumanian delegation. A member of the Portuguese Government was next, and he was succeeded by Boghos Nubar, the Armenian leader, who came to plead the cause of his country, which desires that America assume a mandate over it. Then came the venerable Serbian minister, Pashitch, and, finally, Frank Walsh, pleading for a free Ireland.' [Laughter.]

"'Let me in contrast with this dangerous policy of intermeddling now recall one of the most sacred traditions of our Nation. In September, 1796, the editor of a Philadelphia paper called the National Advertiser was asked to go to Sixth and Market Streets on a special mission. He entered the hall and was shown into the drawing room, and there, standing with his back to the fireplace, was, I think, the most Godlike man the world has ever known, 6 feet 2 in height, steel-gray eyes, prominent aquiline nose, firm set mouth, clad in black velvet, sword hanging by his side. When Mr. Claypole, the editor in question, entered, this man, who was none other than George Washington, said to him: "Mr. Claypole, I have a manuscript here that I am very anxious you should publish in the Advertiser, and I want you to publish it exactly as I have written it." Claypole said he would do it, and took it away.

"'Washington for five years had labored over that manuscript, first in 1792, toward the end of his first administration; then he laid it aside when he agreed to accept a second term. In 1796 he took it up again and submitted it to the keenest jurist of his time (unless I except James Wilson), namely, James Madison, sometimes called the "father of the Constitution." He then discussed it with his Cabinet, including the very acute brain of Thomas Jefferson. When their opinions were given, he submitted the draft to that "Admirable Crichton" of the period, Alexander Hamilton, and asked him to take all the suggestions that had been made and put the document into final shape. Hamilton did so, and when it was returned to Washington the latter again carefully revised it and then handed it to Claypole. Twice the printer's proofs were returned and twice Washington returned them, with all the laborious care that marked that supremely great man, and finally, one September day, the noblest political testament in the history of the world was published—the Farewell Address. It was not an official communication addressed to Congress. It was addressed to the people of the United States as citizens. It was not to his generation alone that he addressed it; but, knowing that he would soon be gathered into the "mansions of the departed," Washington desired, as among the last acts of his life, to give to future generations of the American people the result of his 45 years of experience in the Army and field, his matured and final views as to our Nation's destiny and true policy, as one method of preventing them from falling into some fathomless abyss like the league of nations; for such it is.' [Applause.]

"'Consider the spirit in which it was written. It is as a living voice that comes to us of this generation in a critical hour from that tomb on that little knoll at Mount Vernon:

"'A solicitude for your welfare, which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments, which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people.

"'Again he says:

"'In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend—

"'and what a friend he was—

"'I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But, if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

"'Let me recall the exact wording of this most significant statement of our true foreign policy:

"'The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations or collisions of her friendships or enmities.

"'It is a very significant fact that in Hamilton's proof the word "ordinary" appears only once, but Washington, when he revised Hamilton's draft repeated the word "ordinary" to make his meaning clearer. He says:

"'Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

"'Dropping the cold words of a state document, Washington then continues with almost pathetic exhortation:

"'If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance. Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it.' [Applause.]

"'It may be suggested that this was only Washington's opinion. On the contrary it was the whole philosophy of America. Our forefathers had come to this virgin continent as pioneers. Our whole colonial history was marked by a consistent effort to be disentangled from the spider's web of European politics. It was the spirit of independence that led our fathers in the shadow of that ancient belfry in Independence Square to say that this Nation is and should be of right an "independent" State. It was that spirit that culminated in the Constitution of the United States, for in it is no provision for transferring our sovereignty. The Civil War was fought to preserve that sovereignty unimpaired, and in its final form it is the residuum of the liberty of the American people as individuals. There is no power given to the Federal Government to transfer that sovereignty to a voting trust.

"'This policy of Washington does not mean isolation. When one speaks of the traditional isolation of this country as Washington's policy, the Farewell Address is misinterpreted. Its doctrine is that of independence, not isolation. Isolation is such complete detachment from the world as would make us a hermit nation, but independence is freedom from entanglement by "artificial ties," which impair our freedom of action. It does not limit America from playing a great part in the world, but only forbids entangling alliances which attempt, like the proposed covenant of the league, for all future time to mortgage the judgment and commit the destinies of the American people not according to their will, but according to some superwill of an artificial alliance.

"'If Washington had been living in 1914, he would not have questioned the propriety of this country intervening in this war and sending its soldiers to Europe to defend the basic principles of civilization. Having returned to Mount Vernon, after he had declined a third term, when he felt that his country had been insulted by a European power, although then 60 years of age, he again was willing to leave the retirement of Mount Vernon and unsheath his sword and fight for America. Such a man, if he had lived four years ago to-day, when the Lusitania was sunk, would not only have promptly given Count Johann Von Bernstorff his passports, but would have given to Germany an ultimatum of immediate war unless the Lusitania was disavowed.' [Applause.] 'He would not have spent a year in writing futile and ignominious notes.

"'Washington did not advise that America should not play its due part as one of the master States of the world; on the contrary isolation is not only opposed to his doctrine, but also to the destiny and traditional policies of the American people, for this potentially greatest Nation of the world is not unwilling to play its part in the stupendous drama of human events and to assume its share of responsibility. Washington did advise us that America should not subject its will in the unknown crises of the indefinite future, of which no one man can now know the precise nature, by purely artificial obligations, such as article 10 of the league, that it should not mortgage the treasure and blood of the United States to conditions which it can not know in advance and with which, when they arise, it may have no sympathy whatever.' [Applause.]

"'Article 10 says:

"'The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

"'What are to be the means? Turn to article 16:

"'It shall be the duty of the council in such case to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military and naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armaments of forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

"'Thus we are asked to underwrite not only the territorial boundaries of the world, as they now are, but the future boundaries, as time develops them in future years, with or without our consent. We not only agree to preserve with the blood and treasure of our Nation these unknown territorial boundaries, but also the political independence of each member of the league, and possibly of every nation in the world. To safeguard the political independence we necessarily undertake to preserve their form of government, and we can not tell what form of government our partners in the league may in the future have. There may be a great reaction against democracy. If so, there may be a retrogression to absolute monarchy. Who can tell what is in the lap of the gods? Russia to-day is under the control of Lenin and Trotski. The league of nations even in its birth has confessed itself impotent to combat Bolshevism, and it might as well confess its impotence sooner or later for all purposes, unless Lenin and Trotski are dethroned from their arbitrary and cruel power, for the future of Russia is the crux of the peace problem. Thus by article 10 we might guarantee the political independence of Russia, governed by Trotski as another Cæsar. Moreover, the obligation is not confined to the present map of the world as it is developed by the peace conference, which it is vainly sought to stereotype, but article 10 is a continuous and indefinite obligation as to any future changes of the map of the world that may be made, and when made with the consent of the league they become part of our guarantee.

"'The dangers thus suggested are not fanciful. The dragons-teeth seeds of half a dozen wars have been shown by the peace conference, and if the harvest be averted it will only be because of the frightful character of modern armament and the consequences of war.

"'The league of nations will not stop these wars, of which a number are now in progress. By a recent act of the peace conference, and with a palpable violation of the rules of self-determination, a province of over 30,000,000 people belonging to one of our own allies is placed under the domination of Japan upon condition of its restoration as Japan, in its own time and at its own will, shall elect. Suppose China should suddenly awake to defend herself and with her teeming millions make war upon Japan, and the latter country, being one of the voting trust and therefore potential, would say, "We demand now the protection of the league under article 10." I may be lacking in enthusiasm, but I am not enthusiastic about our sending possibly a million of our men to Japan or China to defend Japan against China or China against Japan under the circumstances to which I have alluded.' [Applause.]

"'Or take the difficulty with reference to Fiume, a little town on the Adriatic with about 35,000 people. I shall not discuss the merits of the Fiume dispute, because, like most Americans, I doubt very much whether I had ever known or heard of Fiume a few years ago. Let us see how strong the league now is to enforce its decrees even against one power, Italy. The flatterers who surround President Wilson had told him that his power was such that if he raised his hand any Government in Europe would topple from its base. Our President, without any mandate from the American people whatever, demanded that Fiume should be given to Jugo-Slavia and taken from Italy, although the majority of the people in Fiume are Italians. Italy refused and left the peace conference. Italy is weak as compared with the great alliance, and if the coercive power of the league was as claimed by its proponents Italy would have yielded. She simply withdrew her representatives to Rome, and when they were invited to return to Paris it was not Italy that had retreated. The league can not overcome the pride of nationality. It is fortunate for the freedom of the world that it is so.

"'If Italy and Jugo-Slavia should become involved in war about Fiume, what would America do? We have in this country a great many citizens who are Slavs by race and many who are of Italian birth. If it was wise in Washington's day not to implicate ourselves in the local entanglements of Europe which are no concern of ours, then it is wiser to-day when we have given hostages to so many nations by immigration. Thus we can not intermingle in European quarrels without sowing the seeds of dissension and disunion within our own household. If Jugo-Slavia made war upon Italy and Italy appealed to the league to defend it from Jugo-Slavia, we would be called upon under article 10 to send our sons to engage in a bitter controversy with respect to a town that is not as large at Atlantic City. Again I am not enthusiastic about the prospect.' [Applause.]

"'If the experience of history counts for anything, these leagues dissolve in critical times like the soap bubble the child blows. It floats through the air with lovely iridescent colors, charms the eye for a fleeting moment, but when it touches the floor it bursts and all the colors disappear. If there is one thing that human nature and history teaches, it is that there has never been a league of nations that has stood the actual crash of conflict. We know what happened in 1914 to the best and most hopeful of all leagues, The Hague convention.

"'Such leagues were tried in Greece more than 2,000 years ago; they have been tried again and again through all the centuries, and always with the same dismal failure. The best evidence that the present league has failed to inspire confidence, even in the hour of its birth, is shown by France. One of the clearest and sanest of France's soldiers, Gen. Foch—the censor has not allowed his statement to come over—said that he would not advise signing the treaty in the form it is in, because it does not give adequate protection to France, and now we are advised that an arrangement has been made provisionally that the United States and Great Britain should defend France in the event of an unprovoked attack by Germany. Such is France's faith in the league.' [Applause.]

"'Why the proposed Anglo-French-American treaty if there be any confidence that article 10 of the league of nations will function as its projectors pretend to believe?

"'Suppose Russia and Germany, at present both ostracized by the league, should form an alliance and a world war should come again to the world, what would be left of the league? The United States might respect its obligation; it would depend very much upon the circumstances under which the quarrel arose; but what with respect to many other nations? What became of all the promises and assurances of The Hague convention? They burst like the soap bubbles with which a child amuses herself. And yet The Hague convention was formed under far better circumstances and had a greater acquiescence by all the world than the league of nations, that has been born in the spirit of dissension and turmoil.

"'Let America beware of the day that she pledges her solemn faith to underwrite the territorial integrity and political independence now and for all future time of possibly all the nations in the world.

"'It is said, however, that any member of the league can withdraw on two years' notice. Really when Senator BRANDEGEE spoke of Little Alice in Wonderland in connection with the famous dinner in the White House to discuss the league it was an apt analogy. The reasoning of the Mad Hatter is outdone by the suggestion that the difficulties of article 10 are met with the provision that any nation can withdraw on two years' notice, provided, in the opinion of the executive council, all its obligations have been fulfilled.' [Laughter.]

"'I was in Switzerland in the early days of July, 1914, and the world was apparently at peace. I was satisfied from the Austrian ultimatum that war was inevitable. I took the first train for Paris ahead of the storm which a great many people believed was not coming. I reached Paris on July 31 and sailed from England about August 26. Between July 31 and August 26 half the world was at war, millions were already in the field, nearly all of Belgium was occupied by the Germans. The Battles of Mons, Charleroi, and Morhange had been fought, and the Germans were halfway to Paris. All in less than a month, and yet it is said if the clouds of war commence to gather in the future that we can escape responsibility by giving a two years' notice. Even if the war had not started but was threatened, the moment we gave notice that we were going to withdraw in two years steps would be taken to hasten the war to bring us within the two-year period. If our armies were in the trenches when our two years' notice ended it would not be very safe to withdraw in the face of modern artillery.

"'Even were this provision changed from the two-year period to an immediate right of withdrawal it would still be objectionable, because when the clouds of war gather it would be a point of honor for an honorable nation to remain, because if one nation agrees with another to safeguard a certain situation, but reserves the right to withdraw at any time and suddenly a crisis arises, the first nation would be wanting in chivalry if it exercised its right to withdraw before the crisis was past. America would not desert its allies in the hour of danger.

"'The league attempts to vest the control of the world in a voting trust of five nations. We can safely start with the assumption that we have never in the history of the world had a repository of power, especially if self-assumed and one which questions the equality of nations, which did not become a shining target to other nations. Moreover, such enormous power always invites division between the members of the alliance, as witness the two great triumvirates of Rome and that of France, which Bonaparte for a time shared with Sieyes and Ducos as consuls.

"'Suppose the five nations composing the voting trust—Great Britain, Japan, Italy, France, and the United States—at first were united, it would only take one of them to break the majority. We have already seen what the potential power of that one vote is in the matter of Shantung. Shantung, with practically the moral control of the Far East, was given to Japan. Why? Because if Japan left the five, the voting trust would be broken, and Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States would be in a possible minority with respect to the control of the league, if the present minority of four wished to seize the controlling power by uniting with Japan. Would not the desire to do so be natural? Thus the voting trust is admirably adapted to subject Great Britain and the United States to the demands of Japan.

"'It is said that these objections are met by the rule of unanimity, but that rule takes from the league whatever assured value for effective action it might possess. Unanimity may exist in heaven among the angels but not elsewhere. Richard Brinsley Sheridan once said that "when on the stage they agreed upon any subject their unanimity is wonderful," but this is not true of the "wide and universal theater of man."

"'To allow any one nation to prevent any decision of the league is to condemn it to impotence. It is a delusion. All the anarchy of Poland in its past history was due to that which they called the liberum veto, a similar provision. As a result Poland was always in a chronic state of anarchy. Yet this league of nations is holding out to the world the sham promise of a peace, pretending to have coercive power, which it can not possess with the rule of unanimity, but imposing moral obligations, which to generous nations like France, Great Britain, or the United States would be an embarrassment, unanimity or no unanimity. The weak or unjust nations of the league could block any action by simply interposing a veto, whereas the just and noble nations would say, "We made a promise to safeguard the political independence of other nations, and therefore, even if one nation fails to act with us, we will not be false to our moral obligation, but will carry out not only the technical letter of our obligation but the spirit."

"'If it were true that the league of nations gave a reasonable assurance of a durable and just peace, America should, without respect to its own interests or traditions, make the supreme sacrifice and join in any plan to put an end to the greatest evil, with the exception of injustice, that of war; but what assurance is there that any man can gather from the past or the present that there will be any lasting peace as a result of this sham league? Far from bringing peace, the league will bring war. What is there in the past history of the world or the present that justifies the belief that a league of some nations, in which the control is arbitrarily vested in five, where the nations are all of different interests, races, and varying degrees of civilization and standards of justice, will remain united? Where is the assurance that the league will do that which even 2,000 years of Christianity have failed to do, namely, bring about peace with justice in the world?

"'The present tendency is to assume that whatever was true in the past is presumably untrue to-day, and it may be that which was Utopian yesterday may become the commonplace truth of to-morrow; but the only safe way in which men can reason, especially when they are reasoning on the grave matters of national destiny, is to give some weight to the uniform experience of history, for surely we can stand upon the fundamental premise that the league of nations has not and can not repeal human nature.

"'There never was a time in the history of the world that there was peace in the world except once, and then only in a nominal sense, and that was when Christ was born. All the power of the world was then concentrated in one State, and all the power of that State in one man, Augustus Cæsar, and as one man can not quarrel with himself, naturally during his reign and that of his three successors, who enjoyed a similar absolutism, there was peace in the world. But was our little world happier because it was subject to the will of one man? On the contrary, it never was so unspeakably wretched as it was in the century following the birth of Christ, because the dawn of a better day slowly came with Christianity and with Christianity a passionate sense of justice, which ended a false peace.

"'To insure peace by coercive measures, and that is the theory of the league of nations, it would be necessary to concentrate power in so few human beings that they would not quarrel, and to concentrate the power of the world in one nation.

"'Present events illustrate this. The peace conference started with 70 members. They found that that would not do as there were too many differences of opinion, so the number was reduced to 10; then it became 6, and then 5, and finally the 70 had become a new triumvirate, and as disunited as the classic examples of triumvirates.

"'A communique from Paris in to-day's paper says, "The council of three—Clemenceau, Wilson, and Lloyd-George—yesterday decided as to the disposition of the German colonies as follows": They "decided," not the nations. They divided over a million square miles of territory. The 24 nations did not decide it.

"'The plenary council of the 24 nations was given two hours to consider the whole peace treaty as formulated by three men, which is two hours more, I believe, than Mr. Widener gave the stockholders of the Metropolitan Traction Co. of New York on a famous occasion.' [Laughter and applause.] 'I believe the proposition was then, as it is now in Paris, "vote first and discuss afterwards."' [Laughter.] 'But the plenary council was given two hours to consider the whole peace treaty which could not be read in many hours, because it contained 80,000 words.

"'If the experience of history teaches us anything and if democracy amounts to anything, and if the recent example of Italy demonstrates anything, it is this: That it is philosophically true that you can not put the world into a voting trust. It declines thus to be put. Men are to enlightened, too proud, the human soul has been too well developed to permit of any group of men, any new triumvirate, to control lastingly the destinies of the world, and therefore, if the league of nations came into existence, dominated by five nations acting through 3 or 15 individuals, attempting to govern the destinies of this world, I venture the prediction that it would not last five years and that it would not survive the first real crisis.

"'Suppose on the day of the armistice and thereafter during the Paris conference President Wilson had taken George Washington's advice. Suppose that he had gone to Paris—and I am not one of those who criticize him for going. Upon the whole, I think the crisis was grave enough to warrant his going, but suppose that having arrived he had said to our allies: "Gentlemen, it is the traditional policy of my country that the local concerns of Europe are those in which we ought not to interfere. We did come into this World War because of the invasion of Belgium, which was a challenge to civilization itself. It was an 'extraordinary emergency.' It involved the bases of civilization. But you have many questions as to which America has no particular interest and in which it can have no sympathy. You are our allies. Solve your purely European questions as you think best and America, believing in your good faith, honor, and greater wisdom with respect to such internal questions, will gladly join with you in the treaty of peace, and accept such solutions of European and other questions foreign to America as in your joint judgment is fair for those directly concerned."' [Prolonged applause.]

"'What would have been the result? America would be to-day the best beloved Nation in the world. Our President might be the most loved and admired statesman of the present heroic era, notwithstanding his fatal hesitancy in the critical years from 1914 to 1917.

"'Let us see what has happened by disregarding Washington's solemn warning. Our country in November, 1918, was popular as it had never been before in its history. Our neutrality was forgotten and submerged in the great and unselfish sacrifice we made in the last year of the war. The admiration for us was most generous, the gratitude deep beyond words. I can testify that in both England and France their publicists said with sincerity, although it was effusive generosity, that we had won the war, as though they had done nothing with their infinite sacrifices and far greater service in the common cause.

"'America to-day, in France, Great Britain, Italy, and other countries, has suffered a marked diminution in the generous estimate of men that no one can possibly measure. They believe we have marred their peace. They believe that by intermeddling we have not merely prolonged indefinitely the torture of their agony but have deprived them of the full fruits of their victory, and we will for years to come pay the penalty, and just such a penalty as Washington warned us against, a penalty for the curse of intermeddling, which breeds the ill-will of every nation against which our representatives decided, and has brought us not too much credit from the nations in whose favor they acted. Of this dissatisfaction we hear but little, as the censor has too successfully stifled truth in the last six months.

"'It is said that the Washington doctrine is only a tradition. But what is this tradition, which is now the subject of so much disapprobation and scorn?

"'I stood in 1916 in the Cathedral of Rheims. Its foundations were there, its great walls remained, but the high altar was gone. Its great rose windows were shattered into pieces. Those windows were not in a strictly utilitarian sense necessary to the church, and yet without the roseate splendor of the light of day shining through those beautiful pieces of glass the interior of that noble sanctuary was cold and depressing.

"'In this we can see a symbol of the shattered edifice of the Union. Its foundations and walls also endure, but its high altar and stained-glass windows are gone. The stained-glass windows are the great traditions of our country. Through them our past suffuses its great light; through them the wisdom of Franklin, Washington, Hamilton, and Jefferson, and all the great men of that great heroic period of our country, passes; through them suffuses the splendor of the Union with the glory of an epic past.

"'The rose window of America is the tradition which we owe to Washington, the tradition of a proud independence that has been shattered in the last five months in Paris and will be lastingly destroyed, unless the Senators of the United States, obedient to their oaths, and to the great destiny of the American people, shall say, before it is too late, "We will not permit the great and noble policy under which this country has lived for over a century and by which it has grown immensely strong in moral influence to be destroyed."

"'That stained-glass window of Washington's example must be restored, for it is through it that the influence of the great founder of this Republic inspires living men.

"'To carry my analogy one step further, what is the high altar of the Union which, like that of Rheims, has been overthrown and in part destroyed in a spirit of mad ambition? It is the Constitution, whose mighty principles, embracing the "whole law and the prophets" of free government, have been too often set at naught in recent years, especially in the present attempt to subvert the high prerogative of the Senate. Thank God, the Republican Party, which more than half a century ago saved the Union, has now again the great duty to save again the Union, which Washington founded and Lincoln saved.' [Prolonged applause and cheers.]

"Col. GRIBBEL. I beg leave, Mr. President, on behalf of the Union League of Philadelphia, to move that the thanks of this organization be tendered to the honorable James M. Beck for the magnificent address on this momentous question which he has delivered here to-night.

"(Seconded and unanimously carried.)

"Adjourned."

LUMBER AT CANTONMENTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a letter from the Holm-Page Co., general contractors, of Rockford, Ill. I should like to have it printed at length. It is not an extensive letter. It is on the question why the Government is holding at the different cantonments vast quantities of lumber. There are some 15,000,000 feet of lumber at Rockford, Ill., that could be used in general construction work. It is suggested in the letter that there are certain lumber manufacturers who are trying to keep this off the market. I am in hopes that the publicity given the letter may loosen up the authorities here at the Capital or in the departments and do some good.

I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that some of this propaganda comes from a number of other industries who fear they may be licensed likewise if the packers are. There are a good many industries in this country that are fairly successful, and if every successful enterprise is to be licensed, they think it is a good time to file the protest now. If you license the packers you can license agricultural implement manufacturers, boot and shoe manufacturers, and every variety of successful enterprise. The Senator will find that at the threshold of this undertaking the protests are made seasonably, so that the precedent that might be injurious may be not made on the pending legislation, of which the Senator from Iowa is one of the principal champions.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROCKFORD, ILL., July 12, 1919.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: We wish to call your attention to the large amount of surplus lumber the Government has at our back door—Camp Grant—nary a foot of which can the lumber dealers or building contractors buy.

When the armistice was signed there was approximately 14,500,000 feet of lumber at Camp Grant, and the inventory of February 8, 1919, showed exactly 14,178,000 feet. We know this to be a fact, because our Mr. McFarland helped to take that inventory and finally classified, extended, checked, and completed the inventory as it was forwarded to Washington. Since February there has been shipped to other camps and cantonments approximately 600,000 feet. The utilities department at Camp Grant has used another 300,000 feet and is now engaged, we are reliably informed, in hauling the remainder of this vast stock across the camp from the lumber yard to the utilities department, three-quarters of a mile distant, because they claim they can watch it better from the new location.

This lumber is not piled to keep, is not being properly piled in the new location, in fact is fast deteriorating and will not be in marketable condition one year from date. The lumber markets are mounting skyward, and undoubtedly prices have been put higher by the lumber manufacturers than even the big demand has warranted. We agree that labor at the mills is scarce, but why should the manufacturers put lumber prices up 40 to 60 per cent, when labor has advanced but 10 to 15 per cent?

There is no question in the minds of the retail lumber dealers, the contractors, or the consumers but that the representatives of the lumber manufacturers working in Washington as $1-per-year men have been largely responsible for keeping the lumber in the various cantonments off of the market. We ourselves have tried several times to purchase quantities of the Camp Grant lumber, only to have the Washington authorities write the constructing quartermaster at Camp Grant that the Government expected to use the lumber for their own construction plans. Good authorities tell us there was 350,000,000 feet of lumber in the different cantonments when the armistice was signed. Figuring on the same basis as to amounts that have been used at Camp Grant since November 11, 1918, it will take the Government 12 years to use up what stocks are on hand. You can readily understand how much we lumber users in Rockford chafe under these circumstances.

July 11 we had to go into the market to purchase 250,000 feet of lumber to complete a factory building for a local concern, and it cost us $45 per 1,000 feet f. o. b. cars Rockford, and some of it not as good a grade as the Camp Grant lumber stock. We are at present in the market for 80,000 feet of No. 1 common maple flooring and can not obtain even a nibble from either retailer or wholesaler on this item, yet in one of the warehouses at Camp Grant there are 450,000 feet of this grade of flooring that the writer knows cost the Government $25 per 1,000 feet less than the going price as quoted by the members of the Northern Hardwood Manufacturers' Association. The writer can also authoritively state that the lumber at Camp Grant cost the Government on an average of $22.50 per 1,000 feet, plus freight, which averages from $3.75 to $6 per 1,000 feet.

The question naturally arises, Why doesn't the surplus supply division release at least a part of this big stock of lumber, and thereby save the Government from a bad loss by disposing of stock that is going to soon lose its merchantable value by rotting? By disposing of it now they could actually make a profit for the Government, and also relieve a most unbearable market situation. Furthermore, they would bring a lot of profiteering lumber manufacturers to their senses. We venture the opinion that 75 per cent of the building material at Camp Grant could be disposed of in Rockford and the remaining 25 per cent within 50 miles of the camp.

Can not some one in Washington wield a big enough stick on the desk lizards in the surplus supply division to make them see their way clear to loosen up, and not only sell some of the lumber at Camp Grant, but also the immense stock of roofing, millwork, and other building material for which there is such an insistent demand just now?

We trust you may find a way to take this matter to the proper authorities, and also lend what assistance you can to start something. We do not know how you feel about it, but it strikes a large number of the patriotic citizens of Rockford that a lot of this inefficiency and waste that exists at our very door emits a very bad odor and very perceptibly chills the loyalty of a people who gave so freely of their time and money when both were so badly needed. Isn't there some way in which the people can make their opinion felt in this trying situation?

Hoping that we may hear from you soon with a helpful suggestion concerning this matter, we beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

THE HOLM-PAGE CO.
V. L. PAGE.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY FORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also wish to offer, Mr. President, from the paper, Saturday Night, of Detroit, Mich., of date July 19, 1919, an extract from the testimony, together with editorial comment on it, of Henry Ford in the suit pending in Mount Clemens, Mich. I ask to have it printed at length without reading. I think it is very luminous.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. FORD ON THE WITNESS STAND.

Only because Henry Ford has aspired to be a mentor of thought in this country is his testimony in his million-dollar libel suit against the Chicago Tribune of first-rate importance. Private citizens may entertain all sorts of strange notions without attracting or requiring public attention; but whoever assumes a position of leadership in the affairs of a great nation must be understood as thoroughly as possible. That is an axiom of intelligent democracy. Neither adulation of his ideals nor irrepressible levity over his methods of approaching them can blind intelligent Americans to the effect of Mr. Ford's views as a political Crœsus on his city, his State, and his country. The output of his mind, so liberally backed betimes by the output of his enormous pocketbook, is a matter of national concern.

So it becomes significant that Mr. Ford on the witness stand repeats his indifference to all past history; that he knows Benedict Arnold only as a writer and not at all as a traitor; that he thinks the War of 1812 was a revolution; that professional soldiers are murderers; that war is not murder if waged as a war of defense; that he was against preparedness for any war; that he wanted the United States to disarm; that he didn't know very much about his own writings, because he hadn't written them at all; that he had hired a Mr. Delavigne to do most of the writing; that "if it is in the book," which Mr. Delavigne wrote, he would take responsibility for it, but that he thought Mr. Delavigne had put something over on him. By way of exhibiting the workings of Mr. Ford's mind we present a typical selection from the official record of Mr. Ford's cross-examination. The Tribune counsel begins by reading a sentence from one of Mr. Ford's pacifist pamphlets:

"Q. 'I have no other purpose than to save America from bloodshed, and its young men from conscription.' Is that Mr. Delavigne, too?—A. If it was in there, it went out. It was Mr. Delavigne.

"Q. It was not yours?—A. No; it was not mine.

"Q. It went out over your signature?—A. Yes.

"Q. Did you read it?—A. I don't think so.

"Q. Do you mean to tell this jury that you had set out to educate the people, with advertisements printed broadcast all over this country, and you did not know what was in them?—A. I sent out many statements to cause people to think.

"Q. That you didn't know what you were doing?—A. No; not that I didn't know what I was doing.

"Q. Do you understand the question?—A. Yes.

"Q. You said that you did not know that that statement was in there?—A. I have said that.

"Q. You mean to be understood as saying that you sent the thousands and hundreds of thousands of statements broadcast throughout the United States and did not know what was in them?—A. I did not know everything that was in them.

"Q. You did not?—A. No.

"Q. Is there anything more important in that than about the subject of conscription?—A. I don't know.

"Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. I don't know.

"Q. You were going to save the young men of this country from conscription; that was your great effort?—A. Whatever is in there I am responsible for.

"Q. You did not know that it was in there?—A. I don't think I knew that it was there.

"Q. Let me refresh your recollection.—A. I told you in the beginning that I was responsible for it. Mr. Delavigne wrote a great deal of it.

"Q. 'I have no other purpose than to save America from bloodshed, and its young men from conscription.' You are telling the public that there should be opposition to conscription?—A. To save them from conscription meant to save them from war.

"Q. You say that you are now in favor of conscription?—A. I say that it is the most equitable way to fight a war.

"Q. You didn't know it was in there or you would not have sent it out?—A. I will not say that."

It will be worth while, we think, for the voters of Michigan to look that selection over a second time, if only to congratulate themselves on having kept Mr. Ford out of the United States Senate. A man who plays with public opinion by proxy, who signs his name to public statements without knowing what he is being made to say, is likely to play with legislation in the same way. When Mr. Ford offered to admit that he was an "ignorant idealist" he did more honor to ignorance than idealism. A useful idealist knows what he is talking about.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there seems to be a disposition to carry on the debate in reference to the league of nations from editorial articles expressing the views of different citizens of of the country, and I have in my hand an article by William J. McNally, the European correspondent of the Minneapolis Tribune, written from Berlin, entitled "Americans in Europe urge the veto of the league." I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETO LEAGUE, AMERICANS IN EUROPE URGE—OBSERVERS ABROAD SEE ONLY DISASTER IN PLAN, SAYS MCNALLY—ASSERT WILSON HAS LOST UNITED STATES DESTINY IN DIPLOMATIC POKER GAME.

(By William J. McNally, staff correspondent of the Minneapolis Tribune.)

"BERLIN (By mail).

"There is a small band of Americans now in Europe who alone, of all Americans, have had an opportunity to study the subject of shrouded Europe—and by shrouded Europe I mean northern Europe—at first hand. Their opinions present a singular and impressive unanimity. Their constant talk concentrates itself upon the Wilsonian adventure into world politics. And their conclusions, which because of their situation, should have an infinite value to Americans back home and denied their opportunity, have unhappily, but for obvious reasons, enjoyed not the faintest publicity.

"It happens that the only Americans now permitted to travel in northern Europe are newspaper men, magazine men, military men, Red Cross men, and Y. M. C. A. men. Magazine men and newspaper men can not express their views because journalistic custom forbids them to 'editorialize.' Military men can not, because Army orders prevent. Red Cross men can not, because organization rules prevent. Y. M. C. A. men can not, because of the same obstruction.

EAGER TO GIVE MESSAGE.

"Yet this band has a message and a burning message. They sit talking by the hours at night and exclaim, 'If only the people back home could see what we see! If they could only get the perspective on Europe that first-hand study gives! Then there would be no danger that America should make a fatal mistake by reversing its foreign policy.'

"What they feel upon the subject of the Wilsonian adventure they feel with a burning intensity that would amaze, perhaps, the people in the United States.

"They constitute a unit in declaring that Americans back home have a wholly distorted and inaccurate picture of northern Europe.

"Now, whether America knew thoroughly European politics and European conditions or whether it did not would normally be the most trifling and inconsequential of questions. But at the present moment it is attaining a supreme importance.

WALKS INTO DANGER BLINDLY.

"For within a few weeks America must make up her mind finally whether she will take the great step, separating herself irrevocably from her past, and embark upon the hitherto unsailed rapids of European politics. There never was a time in America's history when it was so essential that America possess the most complete, the most exhaustive, and the most unbiased view of European politics. And there never was a time in her history when her equipment was so imperfect, so grotesque, and so distorted as it is at present. This point is probably as difficult to grasp in America as it is difficult to avoid in Europe. The Americans over here are studying the steps of America with a concern that at moments approaches panic and alarm. The Americans over here, examining and exploring a quicksand, the treacheries of which they appreciate only too keenly, see their own country, blindfolded apparently, walking straight into the danger zone with a childlike confidence that it has at last the right direction.

"STAY OUT OF EUROPE."

"'Stay out of Europe. Oh, stay out of Europe.'

"That is the universal, imploring cry which echoes and reechoes in the comments of the thinking Americans now studying northern Europe. That cry I have encountered everywhere. I encountered it in Stockholm, I encountered it in Copenhagen, I encountered it in Berlin. I got it from men who had just come out of Poland, from men who had just come out of Russia, from men who had just come out of Czechoslovakia. I got it from men who had just come out of Hungary and Roumania, as well as from men who had just come out of Jugo-Slavia and Austria.

"'Keep out of Europe, America! You have not the faintest conception of the treacherous waters you are embarking upon. You have no notion of the real situation over here. You have inherited mostly propagandized information that does not give you the true picture. Do not permit yourself to get mired in this swamp which is a hundred times more sinister and more dangerous than you imagine.'

"This perhaps best summarizes the feeling that is most commonly voiced.

UNPREPARED FOR PEACE.

"More than half a year ago the war came to a close with a rather unexpected abruptness. Cessation of fighting caught America as unprepared for peace as she had been for war. Obviously, it was necessary that the President should sign a treaty of peace which would guarantee the fruits of the victory. That Mr. Wilson would do this everybody expected. But it soon became clear that Mr. Wilson had made up his mind to attempt something vastly more ambitious. It soon became clear that he had decided to revolutionize the entire structure of international relationship. Out of his own head he had evolved a grandiose and spectacular plan for abolishing future wars.

"The position of Mr. Wilson was on the whole rather anomalous. The American people had given him no instructions as to what to do. The American Congress had given him no mandate to create a league of nations. But he had himself hit upon this unprecedented idea and had decided to carry it into action. This astonishing man coolly departed from Washington, locking up the past, present, and future policy of America in his satchel, wrapped up the entire destiny of America, so to speak, like an apple, and took it over with him to Europe to do with it what he chose. The impudence of such an act was magnificent. An immense amount of feeling that would normally have been hostility was held in abeyance by the respect for the avowed good he had sought to establish. This goal was the abolition of war. Sentimentalists and humanitarians were inclined to believe that all criticism should be withheld until, at least, he had been given a fair chance.

"Of all the nations represented at Paris it was America that stood to gain the least and lose the most by the establishment of the league of nations. Mr. Wilson's individual desire for a league of nations, alone and unaided, would have been something quite unimportant and quite meaningless. But Mr. Wilson had a prize in his vest pocket which Europe had been craving with growing intensity year by year for more than half a century. That prize was America's independent foreign policy. It was America's traditional isolation. To get its fingers on that prize there was almost no price which Europe was unwilling to pay. What Mr. Wilson could not accomplish by argument, then, he might accomplish by barter. Europe, on the whole, cared not a fig about the league of nations, but it did want an alliance with America. Mr. Wilson did not want to push America into a European alliance, but he did want a league of nations. Here was a wide breach between Mr. Wilson and the Entente statesmen.

"So the conference began and the tables were set for a fascinating contest. The intellectual poker game known as diplomacy was soon in full swing. A victory for Mr. Wilson meant that the allied nations would be weaned away from an old-fashioned alliance into a new world league. A defeat for Mr. Wilson meant that America would be weaned away from her traditional isolation into a disadvantageous and dangerous alliance. The game was one fraught with infinite peril, for the destiny of America represented the stakes.

THE POINT OF THE GAME.

"The point on which the diplomatic struggle centered was this:

"Would the European alliance be a harmless and inutile decoration upon a true league of nations, or would the league of nations be a harmless and inutile decoration upon a true European alliance?

"In the event that the first contingency materialized, the world directly and America indirectly were much better as to position. In the event that the second contingency materialized, the Entente gained a prodigous asset for nothing, while America incurred a prodigous liability for nothing.

"The point really at issue was whether Mr. Wilson would swallow the Clemenceau potion of an alliance brew with a league of nations foam, or whether Clemenceau would swallow the Wilsonian potion of a league of nations brew with a mere alliance foam. That distinction spelled the difference between prosperity and calamity to America. It spelled the difference between permanent immunity and permanent insecurity. It spelled the difference between placing America at the service of an international ideal or placing America at the disposal of a combination of foreign powers.

"The publication of the covenant of the league of nations and subsequently the peace treaty made it unmistakably clear in the end which contestant had won out in the great intellectual poker game at Paris.

"Mr. Wilson was humiliatingly and utterly beaten.

"Americans here have practically all turned against Mr. Wilson, not because he was beaten but because he insists on maintaining the pitiful pretense that he was not. The tragedy is not to be found in the fact that he personally lost. It was hardly to be expected that he could win. The individual phase of it is an idle and superlatively unimportant matter. The tragedy is to be discovered in the fact that Mr. Wilson now, in order to uphold the threadbare pretense that he personally won, is willing to let that most precious of prizes, the American destiny, pass into the control of a European alliance. He is not only willing to do that, but he will work to achieve that end.

SEEN AS DEADLY ENEMY.

"To the Americans over here such an attitude places the American President in the melancholy rôle of a probably unconscious but none the less deadly enemy of the interests of his own Nation. His personal pride in his skill as a diplomatic player puts him in a position, apparently, where he would sacrifice America's future in order to maintain the fiction he held his own at Paris.

"The Americans over here differ from the Americans at home in that they see a little more realistically what a European alliance would mean to the United States. They know Europe as the Americans at home do not. And that is why they are infinitely exercised and alarmed over America's proposed entrance into these dangerous quicksands. Let no one imagine that the Americans over here were not in favor of a real league of nations. So far as I could see, the majority of them were. But they look upon the subject of an alliance with unconcealed horror, and they see in the league as it now exists nothing but a mask to cover an alliance. How Mr. Wilson could have been so completely victimized in Paris is a mystery that Americans here are at a loss to fathom.

"The American people had never given Mr. Wilson a command to take this priceless inheritance bequeathed them by Washington, had never ordered him to use it as the gambling stakes to help him win the world peace he had set himself upon.

"As soon as it became obvious he could not win, he should have risen from the table, put the jewel back in his vest pocket, quit the game cold, and returned to America. Of course, such a move would have damaged his own prestige. He would have to admit that he could not beat the European statesmen in his own game of diplomacy. He would have to agree with his multitudinous enemies who had declared his trip a blunder from the outset. But at least such a course would have saved the American destiny.

COULDN'T ADMIT FAILURE.

"But he lacked the courage to face the world with the humiliating confession that he could not win. He lacked the courage to go back and tell the American people he had failed. So he let that priceless heritage, the American policy of isolation, slip into the hands of the European alliance, and then went further and endeavored to camouflage the issue by declaring that instead he had placed it in the hands of an international directorate.

* * * * * * *

"The peace treaty accomplished two important results. It crushed Germany for a very long time to come, at least, as a military menace. And it also remade the map of Europe. In the first of these results America was directly interested. In the second she was not. America had entered the war to crush the military menace existing in Germany. But she had not entered the war to remake the map of Europe. That was a sphere quite alien to the United States. Such action on the part of our country represents nothing less than international meddling.

"It is here that Americans in Europe feel that they have a message for Americans back in the States. They all accept as indisputably accurate the following axiom:

"Remaking of the map of Europe has had no effect upon the world situation except to multiply infinitely the causes of war.

"They accept this as accurate because they are on the ground and they see. They can not mistake the signs and the symptoms. The overturning of the old boundary stones has set into motion a thousand buzzing and angry hornets. To break these rocks only brings into view a nest of national animosities, deadly as rattlesnakes, and everywhere one moves he finds the deadly rattle in his ears. Americans back home do not see these sights and do not hear these sounds but Americans over in this vicinity do. The matter of the boundaries alone makes a war calendar long enough to fill a home.

FEW NATIONS SATISFIED.

"It is safe to say that with the exception of France and the neutral countries there is practically no nation in Europe at present satisfied with its boundaries. In practically every nation there exists a burning sense of injustice, a smarting national grievance sometimes indescribable in its bitterness, an outraged sense that it has been cheated out of its natural rights upon its frontiers. In practically every nation there exists a fiery war party ready to jump into the fray to-morrow in order that its wrongs be redressed. These new republics of Europe are facing each other like quarreling dogs.

"Poland constitutes one of the most incomparable Balkan messes ever created. The Poles are fighting the Russian Bolshevists on one frontier and may be fighting Russian Pan-Slavists to-morrow. They are fighting the Germans on a different frontier. They are fighting the Ukrainians largely over the disputed city of Lemberg, and they may be fighting the Lithuanians any day over the disputed city of Vilna. Then they are willing to fight with the Czecho-Slovaks upon the disputed question of Teschen. Roumania and Hungary are ready to rush at each other's throats. Jugo-Slavia and Italy are ready to rush at each other's throats. Greece and Turkey are ready to rush at each other's throats. Holland and Belgium are looking upon each other in a very hostile light. And then even at the present moment the Finns are busy carrying on a war with the Russian Bolshevists, as are the Esthonians and the Letts. The Roumanians, besides, are fighting the Bolshevists on their own frontiers.

"Despite the stern mandates of the Paris powers, now at the very zenith of their military strength, half a dozen wars are going on blithesomely in Europe. This is not a particularly happy augury for the reign of universal peace.

SURE TO PROVOKE WARS.

"The Benat, Fiume, Danzig, the Saar, Teschen, Smyrna, and half a dozen other hotly contested points in Europe are sure to provoke future wars, no matter which way they are settled. To an American it looks as though Europe had really very little left in its future, as it is almost certain to burn itself up. Nationalistic hostilities were never so violent and so numerous as at present, and, if that were not sufficient, class war is pushing up to complicate matters more seriously.

"Both the horizontal nationalistic winds and the twisting tornado, like communistic winds, are blowing perfect gales over Europe, and mixing and intermixing in such a fashion as to create horrible confusion and to achieve every type of destruction. This may seem a bit exaggerated and a bit rhetorical, but any American here will bear me out on the assertion. And this is Europe! This is the territory we propose to enter and police! For an acceptance of the league of nations and the peace treaty as they now stand will actually put America in just that position.

"Who remade the map of Europe?

"It was done practically by four men—a Frenchman, an Englishman, an Italian, and an American. The Frenchman, the Englishman, and the Italian all had French, English, and Italian interests to watch out for and protect in this piece of geographical architecture, whereas the American had no American interests in the matter, though he did have some individual pet principles that he wished to see experimented with. What happened anybody could foretell. The American was outnumbered and outvoted, and consequently could not count decisively. When no French, English, or Italian interests were involved, no objection was shown toward permitting the American to bring his principles into play, but when they were involved the principles were promptly thrown into the discard. But because Mr. Wilson did sit on the council of four it is expected that America must assist with her men, her arms, and her money to maintain this new map. Because a dilettante social philosopher and international evangelist was accorded the privilege of ventilating his special theories and principles at the sittings of the triumvirate America must be ready to involve herself in every future struggle that takes place over the Saar, or over Teschen, or over the Banat, or over Silesia, or over Danzig, or over Smyrna, or over Fiume, or half a score other unpronounceable foreign names that Americans never heard of three years ago and which even now they could not positively locate on the right continent.

JUST TO DEFEND A MAP.

"Americans here find it totally incomprehensible to think that America would be willing to mortgage herself, not to one but to dozens and possibly scores, of wars for the sheer pleasure of defending a map just drawn up in the interests of France, England, and Italy. And anyone traveling about on the ground will unhesitatingly affirm that the map contains more wars in it than any document ever penned by man.

"As for the present league of nations, will that automatically prevent these wars? Such a thought is laughed at in Europe. It is treated as the silliest of dreams. The map can be defended and must be defended, if it is to defended at all, by the four main powers who created it—France, England, America, and Italy.

"Strip the situation of all purely decorative verbiage and it amounts to something like this: France and England and Italy—only it were better to say France and England, for Italy has not been coddled so very much—France and England, then, have remade the map of Europe in a manner most satisfactory to their respective interests, and expect America to assist them permanently in the bloody and horribly expensive business of maintaining that map. Now, all Americans may be quite willing to see France and England remake the map of Europe in a manner most satisfactory to their interests, but the Americans over here, at least, have no desire to see America serve out an indefinite sentence as a European policeman to hold down a Franco-Anglican map.

"Thinking Americans here hope with a hope that transcends description that America will have the saving sense to refuse its signature to the league of nations and the present peace treaty.

"The chief privilege America would win from the contemplated arrangement is that of adding 15 or 20 more Mexicos to its present perplexity across the Rio Grande. We should deal with these largely according to the instructions—not consciously, of course, but unconsciously—of the Franco-Anglican alliance, which created the new map and which thereby created also a certain inevitable policy which sheer consistency would force us to follow.

HOW VIEWS WERE CHANGED.

"'Stay out of Europe!'

"That is the cry which recurs eternally in the conversation of the Americans now engaged in traveling about this continent. It would be impossible to transmit and to print the emphasis which Americans here put upon it. Like many of these Americans I came over a convinced believer in the league of nations. On that point I was an enthusiastic Wilsonian. I mention it because I want to bring home the change that a sight of actual conditions effects. I had plenty of bright phrases to flash about. I could say as glibly as anybody: 'The time has come when America must revise her Washingtonian policy.' 'Her isolation is now no longer possible.' 'She must take her place at last as a world power.'

"Ah, how cheap and spurious those phrases appear after one has really studied the present Europe somewhat at first hand! Like a great many other Americans here, I came over a Wilsonian, but I will go back a Washingtonian. No figure in American history looms up to the American over here more impressive, more farseeing, and more prophetlike in wisdom than the first President of the young American Republic as he uttered those immortal farewell words to his brethren and his descendants: 'Avoid entangling foreign alliances.' More than 100 years have elapsed since those words were uttered, but the advice up to the present has proved extraordinarily good.

THEIR MESSAGE TO AMERICA.

"A message from Americans on this side of the water to Americans on the other would read very much as follows:

"'Don't leave your own safe vessel to board a burning ship. You will do yourself and nobody else any good by such an act, and you will find yourself seriously, if not fatally, scorched in the bargain. Remember the words of George Washington. They have ten times the validity now that they did when he spoke them. Close your ears to the last President and listen only to the first. The dead President even now sees Europe far more accurately and far more clearly than the living one. Refuse the league and the treaty and go back to your splendid post of isolation. Do not step into this tricky swamp. Keep clear of the treacherous traps. Pay no attention to appeals to your too generous and too credulous idealism, for they will merely betray and mislead you. Remain true to your traditions and fulfill that unique and inimitable destiny which only separation from Europe has made it possible for you to achieve in the past, and which only separation from Europe will make it possible for you to realize in the future.'"

PROVINCE OF SHANTUNG, CHINA.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there seems to have been some geographical and populational mistake made about Shantung, or rather about the part of it which was ceded to Japan by the late treaty, being the part which Germany possessed before. I wish to read a part of this and to insert the balance in the RECORD. It comes from a statistician, I suppose; at any rate, it is an editorial from the New York World.

The Province of Shantung has an area of 56,000 square miles—

I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to this, because if these figures are wrong I want to have them corrected.

The Province of Shantung has an area of 56,000 square miles, with a population of about 25,000,000. The leased territory of Kiaochow, surrendered by Germany to Japan, is a fragment of the Province of Shantung, with an area of 200 square miles and a native population of about 200,000. Shantung and Kiaochow have been used interchangeably in recent discussion, but it will do no harm, when the "rape" of Shantung and the "enslavement" of 40,000,000 Chinese are next brought up, to remember that the area primarily in question, Kiaochow, comprises about one-half of 1 per cent of the area of Shantung and less than 1 per cent of its population. There are involved, to be sure, the railway from Tsingtau, the port of Kiaochow, to Tsinaufu, the capital of Shantung, about 250 miles long; the cables from Tsingtau to Shanghai and Chifu; and mining concessions throughout the Province. The question of sovereignty, however, concerns the leased area only, and here Japan has given a pledge of its return to China, within a year, it is understood, retaining for herself harbor facilities near Tsingtau. Only by merging 200 square miles into 56,000 square miles, magnifying 200,000 people into 40,000,000, and assuming that Japan stands ready to break her word does the problem of Kiaochow attain the dimensions it holds in the imagination of HIRAM JOHNSON.

He says here "HIRAM JOHNSON." Of course, he means the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Johnson-Borah argument would be that since Japan has hitherto scrupulously held to her word she is bound to begin breaking it sometime.

Mr. President, I am not sure as to these population or square-miles statistics. Frankly, I have not looked thoroughly into the matter, but I suppose that whoever wrote this has looked into it, and I thought it well to read it for the consideration of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with a view of having them, if they made any such enormous mistake as this, correct it.

Upon the same subject—and I am always seeking in vain the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts—

A hideous state of affairs Senator JOHNSON has discovered in New England. Everywhere the league of nations was being rammed down the throats of a subjugated democracy by means of "propaganda, intellectual coercion, and political terrorism." Fortunately the Senator from California was on the spot in time. He said, "Let there be light," and immediately the gibbering shades of propaganda, intellectual coercion, and political terrorism fled back to the caves of primeval chaos, and the men of New England are once more free. It is the old story. When I conduct a campaign of education it is leadership; when you carry on a campaign of education it is propaganda. When public assemblies vote to support me it is public opinion rallying to the support of a sacred cause. When public meetings, religious conventions, federations of labor declare in favor of the league of nations it is political terrorism. When Senator JOHNSON takes 200 square miles of Kiaochow and turns it into 60,000 square miles of Shantung, or takes 200,000 natives of Kiaochow and expands them into 40,000,000 Chinese handed over to slavery, it is argument. But when reasons are advanced why the United States should share in the partnership of a reorganized world it is intellectual coercion. Against that final danger we can not be warned too strongly or too frequently. History is full of examples of intellectual coercion, such as the saddling by a conspiracy of scholars upon public opinion of the superstition that 2 and 2 makes 4, or that the earth revolves around the sun.

I do not think the last sentence is quite in keeping with the dignity and argument of the balance of it.

In this connection, sometime ago I discovered that the Senator from Idaho thought he had discovered that the money power in Wall Street was behind the league of nations, and that when these men wanted to reorganize the industries of Europe they were somehow representing a selfish financial autocracy, of just what sort I do not know.

Mr. President, I do not know of any higher service that America can perform to Europe than to bring its immense surplus capital into operation for the purpose of reestablishing the credit and the industries of that devastated country; and I do not know of any more natural thing in the world than for a man who is connected with big business of any description, especially big banking business, to be in favor of a world peace, because if he has any brains at all he knows that the progress, the financial progress, the commercial progress, and the industrial progress, of the world can not go on in a state of war and must find its reconstruction in a state of peace, if at all.

I have never been a slave of the money power, I believe, even in the opinion of the Senator from Idaho, or anybody else's opinion; but sometimes even the money power is right about things; and if the money power be in favor of world peace, the money power has become almost Christian. They are like Agrippa listening to Paul, "almost persuaded"; and if their motives are selfish, I thank God that even their selfish motives contribute to civilization and peace and the progress of the world. I am glad, for once, that they are on the right side.

Mr. President, again, I have never in the Senate been the slave of labor unions, but when I meet an attack upon the league of nations upon the ground that union-labor men want it because they have "a nigger in the woodpile" they are taking care of, I am glad to see that they are not merely once—because frequently they are right—but they are right in this case; and even if their motives be purely labor motives, I am glad they are accidentally or incidentally or otherwise on the right side.

My object in getting up was to read these statistics and to put the heads of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from California to work upon them, so that if they are mistaken they may be corrected in the open session of the Senate by a statistician of senatorial dignity replying to a statistician of metropolitan newspaper dignity.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I may be indulged for a moment——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I only want to say about the population of Shantung. I got my population figures from the Encyclopedia Britannica——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but Shantung was not transferred——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to be able to finish one sentence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not mean to disturb him.

Mr. LODGE. I am trying to finish one sentence. The population figures I took from the Encyclopedia Britannica. They were of the last census, which was some years ago. The figures of the Encyclopedia Britannica were 37,000,000. I have no better authority than that.

Everyone knows, as I stated, that the cession of the territory to Germany included only Kiaochow, Tsintao, and the entrance to the port; but the German rights—railroad rights, mining rights, and concessions—run all through the Province. It gives control of the Province to hold the port of Kiaochow, and the Chinese are protesting because they consider that it takes the whole Province from them practically.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Idaho yielded to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator to yield to me. The Senator from Massachusetts confesses that he took the entire population and area of Shantung——

Mr. LODGE. I do not confess anything. I restated what I stated before, and the Senator did not hear me. I stated what I had stated here more than once.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator talks about Shantung as if the Shantung Province had been surrendered to Japan. He spoke of it as having a population of 37,000,000 or 40,000,000. He spoke of it as having a large area. The impression left upon the Senate was that 36,000,000 or 40,000,000 Chinamen had been turned over in slavery to Japan.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had read both these editorials or reviews before the Senator read them into the RECORD. They were sent to me and I looked them over. After looking them over and after hearing the Senator's statement I find nothing to correct in the statement which I have made here upon the floor.

The Province of Shantung has an area about the same as that of the State of Illinois, about 56,000 square miles, and about the same area as have England and Wales combined. It has a population estimated at from 38,000,000 to 40,000,000. I presume that no one knows definitely just what the population is, but it has a population ranging from 38,000,000 to 40,000,000, or perhaps, as some authorities declare, from 37,000,000 to 40,000,000. The close details of the matter are perhaps immaterial. Speaking with a distinguished Chinaman within the last two days lately from China, a man of some prominence in his country, he stated that the population was likely more nearly 40,000,000 than 38,000,000, but no one knows its precise population.

It is true, Mr. President, the political sovereignty of Shantung has not in technical terms been delivered over to Japan, but in practical effect both the economic and political sovereignty of Shantung have been delivered over to Japan. I have my first statement to read from any student of Far Eastern affairs, including those who have made years of study of it, such as Dr. Jinks and others, which does not state that in effect both the economic and political sovereignty of Shantung have been delivered over to Japan.

It is by reason of the fact that Japan has been given absolute control of the situation which enables her to dominate the entire Province of Shantung. It is, as this distinguished Chinaman said to me in the conversation, "If I have you by the throat, I may not be in possession of your entire body, but I am in control of it if my grip is sufficient upon your throat to control your action." That is precisely the situation with reference to Shantung. Japan has been placed in control of Kiaochow, of the bay, of the port, of the surrounding territory, of the railroads leading throughout Shantung, which enables her to absolutely control the economic Province of Shantung and also the political Province of Shantung.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I say I have no modification to make of my statement, that it was correct. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the treaty itself it does not head it "Kiaochow." The heading of the subdivision which has reference to the disposition of this territory is "Shantung," and it is thoroughly understood that Japan does control and dominate Shantung by reason of those provisions.

Later I propose to go somewhat in detail into this matter and to substantiate the facts which I have heretofore given by evidence which I think will not be easily controverted; but in no sense have I made any misstatement of which I am conscious to the Senate in reference to these figures and these facts.

Another thing which I want to call the Senator's attention to is a fact which is as well established in Far Eastern affairs as any other fact could be, and that is that the economic control of a territory is always the political control of a territory, whether the terms of the transfer or the terms of its control be with reference to the political sovereignty or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course the article in the treaty referring to this subject matter is headed "Shantung," because it not only contains the concession of the leased property which Germany had, but it contains also certain provisions about certain railroads and certain mines and other parts of the Shantung Peninsula. That is the reason of that. But the leased territory is the only thing that is transferred in sovereignty to Japan, and the balance of it consists of several mere commercial concessions to certain German companies and to the German Government, which are transferred to Japan. In so far as guarding the railroads is concerned, and in some other respects policing them, the Senator from Idaho is fair in his statement, as he generally is; but to confuse and keep confusing the entire Shantung Peninsula, with 56,000 square miles and some thirty-eight or thirty-nine or forty thousand population, with the 200 square miles of leased territory and 200,000 people—I believe that is the amount—that are transferred from Germany to Japan, is not a fair statement except by inference of argument made by the Senator; and the inference of argument made by him is a thing with which we are free to disagree if we do not think it is supported by the facts, and I for one do not, provided the facts are as stated.

As I said a moment ago, I do not know what the area of Kiaochow and the rest of the bay may be, and I do not know what the population of the leased territory—which is the only territory ceded—may be, and I do not know just exactly how far the railroad and mining concessions which are to be guarded by Japanese police may extend beyond the lines and railroads themselves; but I do submit that this writer in the New York World has shown up what seems to be an admitted territorial and population exaggeration.

Now, of course, in a certain sense the Senator from Idaho is right. It is true that everybody has had China by the throat. Germany took her by the throat. France took her by the throat down in Tonking. We are the only people that had a firm hold on her that ever let it loose. Russia was made to let hers loose by Japan, this "enemy of China" you are talking about. It is true, in a physiological sense, that when you have a man by his throat you also have him by his feet, but that was not the subject matter under discussion. You are holding the commissioners of peace at Paris responsible for "transferring fifty-odd millions of Chinese," and I believe the Senator from California finally got it up to sixty, into "Japanese slavery," and you are holding them responsible for transferring 56,000 square miles of area. Now, those do not happen to be the terms of the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. That is the exact fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, how many Chinese were turned over to Japan under the terms of the treaty?

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many were there?

Mr. BORAH. About 26,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the Shantung Peninsula there are somewhere between 26,000,000 and 56,000,000 people. The truth is, nobody knows. There are about 200,000 people in the Kiaochow reservation and the coast lines along the bay, and that is all Japan gets under the treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That reminds me a good deal, Mr. President, of the charge that was made against a man down in a section of the country not far from where the Senator from Mississippi lives of stealing nine ballot boxes. He put in the defense that that was an infamous lie, that he did not steal nine ballot boxes; he only stole three. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is a good deal in that, too; and from my standpoint, being dissatisfied with the whole provision about Kiaochow and the balance of it, I concede that there is not much difference in moral turpitude between grand larceny and petty larceny. But that does not interfere with my contention that Senators must not exaggerate, and that when Senators are representing things to the American people they must not make things ten times as great as they are.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator let me have just a word?

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly will, but then I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BORAH. I just want to say that if the Senator will take the RECORD, and call attention to a fact which I stated as a fact which he can substantiate to be incorrect, I shall be delighted to have it stricken from the RECORD and hereafter observe the observation which he has made with reference to exaggeration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I knew beforehand that the Senator would call for it against me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a call for the regular order. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one moment in reply to that. I knew beforehand——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no option in the matter. The regular order is called for.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO—PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, on a question of personal privilege, I desire to read into the RECORD, in connection with remarks made by myself on the 18th instant, I think, the following telegram:

BODIES OF MEXICANS FOUND BY UNITED STATES MEN NOT CLOTHED IN CARRANZA UNIFORMS.

EL PASO, TEX., July 19.

No bodies of Mexicans clothed in the uniform of the Carranza government have been found by American troops of the El Paso military district, Brig. Gen. James B. Erwin announced, when shown Senator A. B. FALL'S statement from Washington, saying that American troops found bodies of Mexicans in the uniform of Carranza troops.

His command—

That is, that of Gen. Erwin, I presume—includes the Big Bend subdistrict, where a number of raids have occurred since January 1.

Peter Catron, word of whose death at the hands of armed Mexicans at Valles, San Luis Potosi, was received to-day, formerly was employed here.

I made the statement here that within the last year various raids had occurred, and that upon various occasions our soldiers had gone across the line into Mexico, and that upon various occasions they had killed Mexicans and found them in the Carranza uniform. I referred specifically to the Big Bend district of Texas. I desire to correct the statement in this telegram, first, that Gen. Erwin is in command of the Big Bend district, that it is a subdistrict under his command. That is entirely an error. The subdistrict is commanded by Col. Langhorne, who is directly under the command of Gen. Cabell, at San Antonio. Gen. Erwin is also under his command, but Gen. Erwin's district ends below Fort Hancock, about 25 or 30 miles from El Paso.

This is the first correction which I desire to make. I desire to state further that Gen. Erwin has been in command at El Paso alone for three months past, taking the place of Col. S. H. Tompkins as commander at Fort Bliss.

In the next place, I desire to reiterate the statement which I made here that within the last several months—I will not undertake to limit the time exactly—upon either seven or eight occasions troopers of the Seventh Cavalry, United States Army, have pursued Mexicans across the Rio Grande into Mexico, and that upon either six or seven of those occasions they have recovered a large amount of the stolen property carried across by the raiding Mexicans. I desire further to reiterate the statement that Carranza soldiers and officers have been killed, not only in Mexico but on this side, by our regular American soldiers, troopers of the Seventh Cavalry.

I am not at liberty to give the name of the sender of this telegram. I will give it in confidence to any member of the Military Affairs Committee, who, I may say, will be thoroughly familiar with it, and I may say further that this telegram was not sent me at my request.

MARFA, TEX., July 20, 1919.

Following Carranzista officers and soldiers killed in raids on this side by American troops: Lieut. Flores killed near Haciendita on December 21, 1918; Capt. Antonio Avila killed at Brites ranch December 25, 1918. Chico Cano is now a captain Carranzista forces, raided cattle ranch on this side April 1, 1919. Following Carranzistas were killed: Felicio Hernandez, Rayes Callanes, Pedra Falas, Andres Rodriquez, Placido Zapata. Capt. Estrella, Carranzista, implicated in cattle stealing, this side, September 24, 1918. Capt. Eugenio Garcia raided Nunez ranch March 22, 1919. Carranzista Capt. Cecelia Estrea, Luis Munoz, Ramon Segura, and Carlos Rivera, all Carranzistas, have been killed during raids along river.

In raids upon this side bugles of the regular Carranzista forces have been left when the thieves were driven off by the American troops. I may say that an investigation will show that at least two sabers and accouterments of Carranzista officers killed on this side are now in the possession of Americans, one of them being in the possession of a Mr. Poole at Marfa, Tex.

I simply make this statement for the purpose of showing how absolutely unfair the news is as it comes from the Associated Press with reference to this, and I may say with reference to any other public matter to which my attention has been drawn.

Gen. Erwin undoubtedly did not state to the correspondent that he was in command of the subdistrict of the Big Bend. He certainly could not have made any such statement, and yet that is the inference, and the only inference, to be drawn. He knows nothing about the matters which I have referred to, because he has been there only a short time. Now, an investigation will prove or disprove the correctness of the statements which I have made; and I want to say further that if such an investigation is carried on, or any investigation whatsoever is made by the Military Affairs Committee, I should like to have them investigate the action of Gen. Erwin himself in going across the river to Juarez a few days since—not that I regret for one moment that he did go; not that I have anything but praise for him in going across the river. As to his actions when he got across the river, I should like to have them investigated, and I should like to know why it was apparent to everyone that the men whom he was seeking to punish and those whom he was killing were the Villistas and not the Carranzistas; and I should like to have the information upon which he acted when he made any character of statement that the bullets fired across the border were fired by Villistas and not by Carranzistas.

CALENDAR MONDAY DISPENSED WITH.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent, in order that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] may proceed with his remarks, that the call of the calendar be dispensed with under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Ohio will proceed.

THE PEACE TREATY AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have committed what I have to say to paper, and I would appreciate it if I be permitted to continue without interruption until I shall have concluded. At that time I shall be only too happy to attempt to answer any questions which it may be the desire of Senators to submit to me.

I realize fully that the purpose to organize the league of nations is the most solemn, the most far-reaching step ever contemplated by the United States of America. But this fact should neither appall nor make us hesitate. We are living and taking part in the greatest events of history. Extraordinary conditions require extraordinary remedies.

In common with our allies we measured swords with the greatest military power since recorded history began. With the help of a Divine Providence right has prevailed. Germany's imperial sword is broken. Seven million five hundred thousand soldiers, the flower of the world's manhood, lost their lives on the battle field. Twice as many more were wounded, and probably from ten to twenty millions became the victims of war's ravages, in many instances no less tragic than those who made the supreme sacrifice.

The cause of civilization is still in the balance. While Germany has lost the war, her people, as is evidenced by the utterances of some of her public men, and her public prints, are looking forward to the day when she can again resume war against her neighbors for the purpose of retrieving her lost fortunes.

The red flag of anarchy and Bolshevism still waves throughout eastern and central Europe. The peoples that for years had been ground down under the military heel of Germany, Austro-Hungary, Turkey, and Bulgaria, even though they are now enjoying independence and have resumed, or are about to resume, their places in the family of nations, have been bled white by the ravages of war, and lie trembling at the very feet of their recent masters. The United States with our Allies are their only hope of defense.

After the armistice was signed the peace commissioners from 14 different nations, representing 14 different civilizations, with 14 different political systems, of different races, different religions, and speaking different tongues, all of whom had been more or less the victims of the military power of Germany, met together about the conference table, and as a result of their deliberations the President presents to us a treaty of peace, which includes the terms of settlement of the war, and a plan looking to the security of the peace of the world for the future.

That it is not perfect all concede. That it would have been written differently if it had been drafted by the American Nation alone there can be no doubt. And, may I add, if it had been left to the handiwork of each of the United States Senators, there would have been 96 different treaties. It should not be surprising if there were not certain important provisions of this treaty which were strenuously objected to by the representatives of one or more of the nations involved.

When I consider the conflicting interests assembled and the discordant views which must have been voiced, to borrow a thought from Dr. Benjamin Franklin concerning the Constitution of the United States, I marvel not that it is imperfect but because it contains so many sound fundamental principles. And my belief is that, after having labored so long and so successfully, we should forget what differences of opinion we may have rather than to lose the fruits of their labors, not knowing when the nations could again reassemble to take up this work; and if they did reassemble, how soon any result could be expected from their labors.

If this treaty is rejected, what is to take its place? To quit now is as if, after the flames of a great conflagration had been checked, the fire department were to quit its work while burning embers were lying around in the vicinity of inflammable buildings, to be again fanned into fury by the first winds that blow.

Many of those who criticize the league have no remedy to propose. Many others present suggestions which to a greater or less degree would jeopardize the chances of ratification and postpone the day for the rehabilitation of the world.

In view of the unrest now prevailing and the immediate necessity for the preservation of the world's peace at all hazards, I believe it better to accept the treaty as it now stands and trust to the future to make such changes as experience may suggest.

I have been hoping ever since the armistice was signed that the discussion of the terms of settlement, whether in or out of the Senate, would be conducted along nonpartisan lines. The waging of the war was not a party question. The making of peace ought not to be a party question.

I do not agree with my friend the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that it must be a partisan issue, and that if the Republicans do not make a declaration against the league of nations there will be a party which will make it an issue.

At the same time I fear that whatever may have been the purpose of the methods adopted by our Republican friends the effect of their course has been to make it a party question.

There are certain indisputable facts which, to say the least, look in that direction.

First. In the dying hours of the last session of the Senate the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts presented his "round robin," signed by 37 Republican Senators in support of a resolution which stated that while it was "their sincere desire that the nations of the world should unite to promote peace and general disarmament, the constitution of the league of nations in the form now proposed to the peace conference should not be accepted by the United States." This was presented out of order at a time when it could not receive the consideration of the Senate except by unanimous consent, and it was presented just as the President was about to embark for Paris to resume his laborious task at the peace table, and at the time it must have been known that it would embarrass the peace commissioners in the performance of their duties.

Did this seem to have the color of pure Americanism or of partisanship?

Second. Still later, when the new draft of the treaty was made public, the eminent leader and the distinguished whip of the Republican Party in the Senate sent their joint telegram to all the Republican Members of the Senate asking them not to commit themselves finally as to the new league, but to await the result of a conference of the Republican Members.

Did this look like the exercise of the spirit of Americanism or of Republicanism?

Third. On March 24, 1919, Mr. Will H. Hays wrote to ex-Senator Root, asking for his views on the subject of the league of nations. His letter is signed, not by "Will Hays," nor by "Will Hays, the American," but by "Will Hays, chairman." We only know him as the chairman of the Republican national committee. And the answer of Senator Root is not addressed to "Will Hays" or to "Will Hays as an American citizen," but to "Hon. Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, 452 Fifth Avenue, New York City."

Did this look like an abiding interest in things American or in things Republican?

Fourth. Some days ago the public press announced that Hon. Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, would come to Washington to confer with the Republican Senators as to what their attitude should be with respect to the league of nations and to harmonize their differences and to adopt plans; and, true to the information given in the public prints, the Hon. Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, was here and held conferences, not with Republicans and Democrats but with Republican Senators.

Does this look as if his efforts were being made in the interest of an American peace or in the interest of a Republican program?

Fifth. On March 22, 1919, Mr. Will H. Hays, as chairman, issued a circular letter upon the letterheads of the Republican national committee calling attention to the fact that he wanted as many Republican speeches made in the next 18 months as possible, and stated that while all these speeches would not be under "direct Republican auspices," he urged them to use "Republican matter wherever consistent with proprieties and in whatever kind of speech they may be making." And then he significantly added:

> We all recognize the potentiality of the Chautauquas in this connection, and many Republicans are making connections with Chautauquas who heretofore declined this kind of work. I have felt that the national good is so great that we can all afford to rather strain a point, possibly, to help spread the doctrine of good government, and I think it is entirely within the proprieties for as many Republicans as possible to make speeches, Chautauqua and otherwise, all to that end.

Does this look like a real concern for America first, or for Republicanism first?

These facts speak for themselves; and while we recognize the protests on the floor of the Senate that the covenants for the league of nations are being considered only from an American viewpoint, the American people can not be blamed if they are somewhat disposed to believe that while it is the voice of an American Jacob they hear it is the hand of a Republican Esau they feel.

I fear some of our friends "protest too much."

There is one sense in which the league of nations is becoming a Republican Party issue. Indeed it has already developed as such to a degree which makes some Republican Senators both "believe and tremble." I refer to the perfectly well-known revolt within the Republican Party against the ideas and the acts of their leaders here. Republicans who have stood high in the past and who stand high now in their party councils are not heard in admiration, but in deprecation of the present attitude of their party associates here in the Senate.

The word of warning is not sounded alone by Democratic voices. It is heard strong and clear within the Republican ranks. The best thought among Republicans, as well as among Democrats, looks askance at the making of the league a party question.

But notwithstanding the course a part of the discussion on the league of nations has taken in the Senate, and the fine Italian hand that has been trying to make it a political issue, I still indulge the hope that the ratification of the pending treaty shall be decided only from the standpoint of Americanism without regard to its political effect; but if the same methods and same purposes prevail in the future that have characterized a part of the discussion in the past three months, I challenge, I defy, those who would make it a party issue to continue the fight. I make bold to assert that as a result of the war the overwhelming majority of the people of America can not be persuaded to take a stand against the league of nations, even though it may conflict more or less with the policies of the past. The men, the women, and the children who have suffered can not be longer convinced that the settlement of international disputes shall be by appeal to the sword. Hereafter they intend that such an appeal shall be only as a last resort.

I owe my allegiance to the Democratic Party. I believe in its principles and hope for its success, but I would rather have my party lose and the league of nations win than to have my party win and the league of nations lose.

SOME PROVISIONS OF THE COVENANTS FOR THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS PRIOR TO THEIR ENFORCEMENT.

Before proceeding with my discussion I desire to call special attention to the following controlling provisions of the covenants for the league of nations:

First, the purpose of the league is—

(a) To promote international cooperation; and

(b) To achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war; by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations; by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments; by the maintenance of justice and the scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another.

Second. The jurisdiction of the assembly and of the council relates only to international and not to intranational or domestic disputes, and, except where otherwise provided in this covenant or by the terms of this treaty, decisions at any meeting of the assembly or of the council shall require the agreement of all the members of the league represented at the meeting.

Third. Disputes (article 12) between the members of the league, which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration, and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, shall be submitted to arbitration. Among the disputes declared by the convention to be suitable for submission to arbitration, without attempting to enumerate all of them, are the interpretation of a treaty, questions of international law, the existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of an international obligation, and the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any breach. Any award which may be made must in good faith be carried out.

Fourth. Any other dispute which is not submitted to arbitration shall be submitted for investigation to the council, whose duty it shall be to endeavor to effect a settlement, and if these efforts are successful, then a statement shall be made public giving such facts and explanations regarding the dispute and the terms of the settlement as the council may deem appropriate.

Fifth. If the dispute is not settled by the council, and after investigation it agrees upon a report unanimously, other than the representatives of one or more parties to the dispute, it shall be binding.

Sixth. If the council fails to reach a report which is unanimous, other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the members of the league reserve to themselves the right to take such action as they consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice.

Seventh. If the dispute is claimed by one of the parties and found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report without making any recommendation as to settlement.

Eighth. If the dispute has been submitted to arbitration, and an award is made, or if to an investigation and the report and recommendation of the council are unanimous, excepting the vote of those who may be parties to the dispute, then the award or the report and recommendation of the council shall be binding, and the league obligates itself not to go to war with the party that complies with the award or with the report of the investigation.

Ninth. The members of the league agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award of the arbitrators or the report by the council. The award must be made within a reasonable time, and the report of the council within six months after the submission of the dispute.

Tenth. The council may in any case refer the dispute to the assembly, and it shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, providing it shall be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute. In the event that the dispute is thus referred to the assembly, then it shall take such action and exercise such powers as are given to the council, provided that the report by the assembly shall have the same force and effect as a report of the council if it is concurred in by the representatives of those members of the league represented on the council and of a majority of the other members of the league, exclusive in each case of the representatives of the parties to the dispute.

Eleventh. Provision is made for the fullest publicity of the facts of the dispute, with the recommendations which may be made either by the council or assembly or any member of the league.

If I may be permitted to condense these provisions of the covenants in so far as they define the procedure which may be taken up to the point where it may become necessary to enforce the award of the arbitrators or the report and recommendations of the council or of the assembly, the members of the league agree to submit to arbitration and award all international disputes which they recognize to be a proper subject for arbitration, and all other international disputes to investigation, and they oblige themselves to accept these awards or recommendations without resorting to war.

I submit that thus far in the recital of the provisions of the covenants there is nothing either subversive of the Constitution, violative of sovereignty, or contravening wise national policy. If I am wrong, then all arbitration or peace treaties are subject to the same objection.

I submit, further, that the obligations thus entered into are mutual in character. No member of the league surrenders any right or privilege for which he does not receive a corresponding right or privilege from every other member of the league. And all of this is done in the interest of world peace.

PROVISIONS FOR ENFORCEMENT OF THE AWARD AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

Twelfth. The members of the league—article 14—agree to carry out in full good faith any award that may be made, and not to resort to war against a member of the league which complies therewith. If there is a failure to carry out such award the council shall propose what steps shall be taken to give effect thereto.

Thirteenth. If any member of the league resorts to war in violation of its covenants, it shall be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league. But they do not obligate themselves to go to war, though the conduct of the delinquent member may be such, under the terms of the covenant, as to give cause to go to war.

Fourteenth. The members of the league undertake, in the event that an act of war has thus been committed by a delinquent nation, to subject it to the severance of trade and of financial relations, prohibit all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and prevent financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not. In other words, the delinquent nation is to be boycotted, and no nation, save perhaps the United States, could withstand this severance of intercourse with the other nations of the world for any great length of time. In this respect the United States would have a very decided advantage over any other nation which may or may not become a member of the league.

Fifteenth. In no case do the covenants legally compel a member of the league to declare war against a delinquent member. The war-making power of each nation, except as to the extent of its armament, continues as heretofore. Under the covenants of the league the council only recommends to the several Governments concerned what effective military or naval force the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armament of forces which may be necessary for the protection of the covenants of the league. Whether these military or naval forces are furnished or not is optional with each member, or at most, the obligation is moral and not legal.

Sixteenth. They do, however, agree to support one another in the "financial and economic measures" which may be undertaken in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures and mutually to support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State. They also agree to afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the members of the league which are engaged in its protection.

Seventeenth. In stating these several propositions I do not overlook article 10, which provides "that the members of the league shall respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all its members," and "in case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the council shall advise the means upon which this obligation shall be fulfilled," but I shall make special reference to this article later in my discussion.

Eighteenth. Any member of the league, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, may withdraw from the league, provided all its international obligations and all its obligations under these covenants shall have been fulfilled at the time of withdrawal.

Nineteenth. Amendments to the covenant will take effect when ratified by the members of the league whose representatives compose the council and by a majority of the members of the league whose representatives compose the assembly; and no amendment shall be binding on any member of the league which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a member of the league.

Twentieth. The covenants also provide that if any member of the league has violated any of its covenants it may be expelled from membership by a vote of the council, concurred in by representatives of all the other members of the league represented thereon.

I submit with respect to these provisions for the enforcement of awards and recommendations, as I did with regard to the steps to be taken leading up to their making, that there is nothing contained in them which is violative of the Constitution or a surrender of our sovereignty when properly construed. And taking this view of the subject, I feel it would be a calamity not to approve the covenants.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS TO THE LEAGUE.

Most of the objections urged against the covenants for the league of nations are embraced in four classes. It is charged:

First. That they are unconstitutional;

Second. That they are a surrender of our national sovereignty;

Third. That they violate the Monroe doctrine; and Fourth. That they constitute an entangling alliance with the other nations of the world, which we ought to avoid.

I shall consider them in the order named.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LEAGUE.

The Constitution of the United States, the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or to be made under the authority of the United States, are declared by the Constitution itself to be the supreme law of the land.

Chief Justice Marshall, in Foster v. Neilson (2 Pet., 314), says:

> A treaty is in its nature a contract between two nations, not a legislative act. * * * In the United States a different principle is established. Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is consequently to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the Legislature, whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision, but when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, a treaty addresses itself to the political not the judicial department.

Mr. Justice Shiras, in Thomas v. Gay (169 U. S., 271), says:

> It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government. The effect of treaties and acts of Congress when in conflict is not settled by the Constitution, but the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. A treaty may supersede a prior treaty.

Again, permit me to quote briefly from Mr. Justice Miller in the Head Money cases (112 U. S., 598). He says:

> A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends upon the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and honor of the governments which are parties to it. If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war.

Without discussing the reasons for the rule I shall content myself by saying a treaty is not superior to an act of Congress, nor is an act of Congress superior to a treaty.

Mr. Justice Miller says (112 U. S., 599):

> So far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation becomes the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal.

This, in brief, is the state of our law.

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, has the power to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

This power of the President and the Senate thus stated is without any express limitation. Of course, it is conceded that they can not either by concurrence or independently of one another exercise any power which the Constitution has reserved to or conferred upon any other governmental agency.

To illustrate my thought:

The power to declare war is conferred upon Congress, but because the express power to declare war is conferred upon Congress it does not follow that the treaty-making power may not declare, within the provisions of the Constitution, what shall constitute an act of war or the terms and conditions upon which the United States would agree to go to war. If the Congress should pass a joint resolution declaring war against another nation for an act defined by a treaty, properly ratified, to be an act of war, clearly no one could say that the treaty was unconstitutional or that it was a usurpation of power or that the Congress had acted beyond its jurisdiction. So, on the other hand, if another nation should enter into a treaty with the United States whereby they had agreed that certain conduct should constitute an act of war and the Congress should refuse to declare war, it would not follow that the treaty was unconstitutional. It would simply be unenforceable, because the war-making power had refused to act. Or, if I may express another shade of the same thought, this, the Sixty-sixth Congress, might be willing to declare war against a nation because of an act defined by the treaty to be an act of war, and the Sixty-seventh Congress under identically the same circumstances might refuse to do it. It could hardly be said that because the Sixty-sixth Congress acted in harmony with the treaty therefore the treaty-making power was acting constitutionally, and because the Sixty-seventh Congress refused to declare war therefore the treaty-making power was acting beyond the scope of its powers or unconstitutionally.

If any Congress refused to act in harmony with the treaty, the nation regarding itself aggrieved could simply say to the world that we had refused to keep our contract. Of course, every Senator expects this Government to keep faith with all foreign nations. We intend to carry out our treaty obligations, whatever they may be, assuming, of course, that the powers are acting in good faith; but even if a future Congress should refuse to comply with the terms of a treaty made by the treaty-making power of the United States, it must be borne in mind that the whole world, including the signatory powers, are cognizant of the fact, when the treaty is made, that a future Congress might refuse to carry out the provisions of the treaty. It could not, therefore, be said that we were not exercising good faith when we entered into the treaty or that we had acted in bad faith because in the eyes of another generation the Congress should either do or leave undone something which the treaty may obligate us to do or not to do. As stated before, it would be a breach of contract, not a breach of faith.

I prefer to assume that the signatory powers to the treaty, whatever its final form will be, will in all things be reasonable and just. I prefer to believe that with the restrictions placed upon the assembly and council as defined by the covenants of the league of nations all the signatory powers, including ourselves, will act in good faith. This position differs in no respect from the attitude we assume toward every nation when we enter into a solemn treaty obligation with it.

SURRENDER OF SOVEREIGNTY.

Much of the opposition to the treaty is based upon the assumption that if it is signed and finally ratified by the Senate it will be surrendering to the league of nations certain sovereign powers.

Every independent nation exercises sovereignty. It may have relation to either its domestic or international affairs, or both. The covenants of the league of nations relate only to international affairs.

If a nation saw fit to build a Chinese wall around its territory and cut itself off entirely from all intercourse with the nations of the world, it would be a sovereign nation, but no more sovereign than if it entered into treaties with other nations, regulating their commercial or political intercourse, and including therein the settlements of all international disputes arising out of those commercial or political relations. The fact that the United States in the past has entered into commercial or political treaties, prescribing certain rules of conduct, has never, so far as I know, been construed to be a surrender of sovereignty. Clearly this must be so unless we use the words in a very narrow and technical, not to say captious, sense. It may be that those rules, regulatory in character, place certain restraints upon us, just as the treaty places restraints upon the other signatory powers. If these treaties have placed any restrictions upon the exercise of any power, it is because we have received something in return.

It has not occurred to anyone to say because we entered into certain commercial treaties with Great Britain, or France, or Italy, or China, or Japan that we are a less sovereign people than we were before those treaties were signed and ratified. The making of treaties is an incident, an exercise of sovereignty, not a surrender of sovereignty.

In 1911 we denounced our treaty with Russia because of her discrimination against our Jewish citizens, and since that time we have had no treaty relation with Russia, though we continued until recently to have commercial relations with her.

Were we more a sovereign nation after this treaty was denounced than we were before and while it was binding upon both the nations?

We had treaties with Germany prior to April 6, 1917, defining certain mutual rights and obligations between the two Governments and their nationals. All of them were at least suspended, if not terminated, by the declaration of the state of war.

Are we any more a sovereign people now than we were before we entered into the war with Germany?

If this reasoning be sound, and I believe it is, can it be said because we are about to enter into certain covenants with other nations of the world, in the interest of world peace, wherein all of the signatory powers bind themselves to limit their armaments and to submit their international disputes to arbitration, or to investigation and report by the council or the assembly, that we are thereby surrendering our sovereignty? If so, then why did not some of the eminent Senators in this Chamber, who are now opposing this treaty, disclose to us the fact that they were inviting the United States to surrender its sovereignty when they asked us to enter into the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France, which were negotiated by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, and which were, with certain amendments, it is true, strongly championed by the learned chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee?

If these covenants of the league of nations be a surrender of sovereignty, why were we not so told at the time of the pendency of the so-called peace treaties, 29 in number, which were ratified by the Senate while Mr. Bryan was Secretary of State?

The covenants of these treaties were substantially the same. The treaty with Great Britain provided that—

> All disputes between them of every nature whatsoever, other than disputes the settlement of which is provided for and in fact achieved under existing agreements between the high contracting parties, shall, when diplomatic methods of adjustment have failed, be referred for investigation and report to a permanent international commission * * * and they agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

Under these treaties the United States was obligated to submit all disputes of any nature whatsoever to investigation.

The international commission for which they provide is required to report within one year after the date the investigation shall be declared to have begun, unless the high contracting parties shall limit or extend the time by mutual agreement. So it appears that each of the signatory powers to each of these treaties solemnly agreed to suspend its right to declare war or to begin hostilities for one year. These treaties were entered into in the reasonable exercise of our sovereign powers as a nation.

Did it occur to any of the distinguished Members of the Senate now opposing the ratification of the pending treaty to suggest that the United States by entering into those peace treaties had surrendered its sovereignty?

Was it either a surrender of sovereignty or an exercise of unconstitutional power when the United States, in 1903, entered into a treaty with the Republic of Panama, and agreed to guarantee and maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama? Does it differ in principle from article 10 of the league of nations, in which members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league?

Let me put the question to the Senate in another form.

Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that to enter into these covenants is an unconstitutional act and a surrender or violation of our sovereignty. It certainly can not be a greater offense against the Constitution to enter into a treaty obligation agreeing to protect and defend the territorial integrity and the political independence of one of the newborn nations of Europe than it is under the Monroe doctrine to assume the same obligation with respect to the Republics of Central and South America. It can not be a greater violation of our Constitution to join in this league than it was to declare our intention to exercise a self-imposed obligation with respect to South and Central America.

What power is there under the Constitution which permits us to say that we, unpetitioned, shall assume a protectorate over the territorial integrity and political independence of the South and Central American countries? It can no more offend our sense of sovereignty by entering into an agreement affecting international relations in European countries than to attempt to exercise sovereignty over the nations of South and Central America.

Assuming, for the sake of the argument, without admitting it, that we are denying ourselves sovereignty when we enter into peace covenants with our allies for our mutual protection, is it a worse offense than to assume a sovereignty over American Republics when we do not have it and when some of them even resent it?

And let me say in passing that however much we may be enamored of the Monroe doctrine it is not altogether an unmixed blessing. Many of the people in South America resent our self-imposed guardianship over them under the Monroe doctrine, and they would, in my judgment, accept in a more gracious spirit any arrangement such as the league of nations, in which they are to be parties and which will give to both them and us the same protection that we now enjoy under the Monroe doctrine.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

One of the objections most strongly urged by the opponents of the league of nations is that in the first published draft it did not recognize the Monroe doctrine, and in the final draft it is not sufficiently defined.

If this were true it would present a serious problem, and particularly would this be so unless something better was offered.

Article 10 of the league of nations in both drafts is substantially the same. In its present form it reads:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

This involves the principles of the Monroe doctrine extended to all the members of the league. However, out of the abundance of caution, and no doubt in answer to the criticisms made after the publication of the first draft, it was expressly provided in section 21 that—

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of * * * regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace.

The Monroe doctrine has never been recognized as a principle of international law. It is not even a municipal law. It is, as former Secretary of State Olney said, "an American fiat." It is a policy of the United States, so declared as a principle of self-protection. The critics of the league say it is not "a regional understanding," and it may not be. The phrasing is not happily chosen. But does not every student of the subject know what was intended? The Monroe doctrine is designated by name. It is a misnomer to call it a regional understanding, but so long as the subject matter is described, what boots it if it has been misnamed?

James Monroe did not issue his message for its own sake, but because with him it was "safety first" for the Nation. An extract from his message reads:

The American Continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers.

He further says:

In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. * * * The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments, and to the defense of our own which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole Nation is devoted.

Again:

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or independencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere, but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of opposing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any other European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Our experience up to the time of this pronouncement taught us to be on our guard against European aggression, whether aimed at us directly or indirectly through encroachment on our neighboring peoples in America. In a word, the whole purpose of the Monroe doctrine was the "defense of our own." The extension of European systems to the American Continent was believed to be dangerous to our peace and our safety.

Later, when the dispute arose between Great Britain and Venezuela over the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana, Secretary Olney said, in part:

To-day the United States is practically sovereign on this continent and its fiat is law upon the subjects to which it confines its interposition. * * * There is, then, a doctrine of American public law, well founded in principle and abundantly secured by precedent, which entitles and requires the United States to treat as an injury to itself any forcible assumption by an European power of political control over an American State.

President Cleveland said in the same controversy:

The Monroe doctrine finds its recognition in those principles of international law which are based upon the theory that every nation shall have its rights protected and its just claims enforced.

Note now the following facts:

First. President Monroe, in announcing his famous doctrine, says:

In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part.

But conditions have changed since those words were written. The great World War has been fought, but its fruits have not yet been secured either to our allies or to ourselves. It first related only to Europe, but it spread until America, 3,000 miles away, was drawn into the maelstrom.

Second. President Cleveland told us in substance that the Monroe doctrine found its recognition in that principle of international law which declares "that every nation shall have its rights protected and its just claims enforced." Does not this principle apply to the unusual conditions in Europe to-day and to the consequent dangers likely to arise therefrom as well as to conditions in Venezuela at the time Cleveland wrote his famous message?

Third. The United States is now a world power. Its interests are world-wide. We are no longer confined to the American Continent. We possess the Philippines in the Far East, and a number of islands in the high seas. Our foreign commerce extends to the four corners of the earth. It totals more than $8,000,000,000 annually. Our responsibilities to the Philippines and to our possessions, wherever located, are greater than our self-assumed obligations under the Monroe doctrine to the Republics to the south of us.

When we entered the World War on April 6, 1917, we made common cause with our allies against our common enemy—the enemy of mankind. We were brothers in arms during the war. We encouraged the Czecho-Slavs, the Jugo-Slavs, the Poles, the Armenians to arise in revolution against their former masters, who were our enemies as well as theirs. Whether rightly or wrongly, we led them to believe that when success was perched upon our banners we would welcome them into the family of nations. They were justified in believing our promises then, and honor requires that we shall not permit them to lose faith in us now. What will history say of us if we leave these, our allies, in time of war to the merciless cruelties of the Hun and the Turk? Is it possible that our responsibilities to them are ended because the cannons have ceased to roar?

We did not enter this war with the intention of turning our backs upon our friends when it would suit some selfish purpose. We entered it to fight together, to win together, and, in my humble judgment, to keep the peace together.

Who does not know that we are nearer to Europe to-day than we were to Central and South America at the time the Monroe doctrine was announced? Who is not conscious of the fact that the dangers to the world peace and to our safety are in Europe to-day rather than in Central or South America? Why should we be so eager to assert our sovereignty over the Americas, from which no evil has come upon us, and at the same time blind ourselves to the dangers in Europe which well-nigh overcame the world? I want to preserve the Monroe doctrine in its entirety, but if I must choose between the preservation of the Monroe doctrine and the league of nations I shall prefer the latter. Sound statesmanship suggests our guarding against great dangers where they now exist and where they are likely to break out at any moment if we are not on our guard, rather than to limit our concern to the conditions in the Americas, present or future, from which even the most timid do not anticipate danger to the Republic. Fortunately we are not driven to choose between the two. We can have the protection of both the league of nations and the Monroe doctrine.

What nation during the last half-century at least has had any covetous designs on South or Central America save Germany? What nation is it that strikes terror into the hearts of devastated regions of Europe save Germany? What nation ever suffered such a humiliating defeat as Germany? And because she was not made to suffer by invading her territory and laying waste her cities and towns she still continues at heart the relentless foe of all mankind. No qualms of conscience torture her; no pang of regret, save that she did not win. Only a short while before the defeat of her armies and the surrender of her fleet her people in the interior were planning for the next great world war. It may be said that her masters did not even allow her people to know the straits to which she had been driven by the defenders of civilization.

What intelligent man or woman does not realize that the war must be fought over again if the Allies do not adopt some means whereby they will compel Germany to preserve the peace? We are not unmindful of the task. We realize fully that it may mean the expense of some treasure and possibly the contribution of some of our young men, for a time at least, to help preserve the peace of Europe. But who is the red-blooded American that wants his country to shirk its duty under those circumstances? America never shirked a responsibility in the past, and she must not now. I prefer that America shall do more than her duty rather than she shall do less. I prefer that in the preservation of the peace, if it becomes necessary, Uncle Sam shall be big brother to the world rather than that we should sit silently by, keeping to ourselves all the fruits of our vast heritage, and allow the pauper peoples of Europe to shoulder the burdens which may be incident to the protection of the world against ruthless Teutonic attacks.

I think so much of the Monroe doctrine that I would extend its principles to the world. The opponents of the league seem to think so little of it that they would confine it in its operations to America alone. If it is a good thing, let us extend it. If it is a bad thing, let us restrict it.

ENTANGLING ALLIANCES.

The opponents of the league of nations constantly quote George Washington's advice "to steer clear of permanent alliances with any power of the foreign world," but as a rule they overlook the very material qualification which immediately follows—"so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it."

But this is not all. His advice to steer clear of all permanent alliances must be construed in connection with the context. It is based upon a recital of conditions which our friends overlook.

It follows his declaration that "Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation." And then he continues, "hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns." And again he adds: "Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course." And without attempting to quote all that he says in this behalf, he adds: "When belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel." His advice against permanent alliances is based upon the situation in Europe as he then saw it, and to which I have just called attention.

But how different are conditions in Europe now as compared with what they were in the day of Washington. Then we were a small nation of 13 colonies and 3,000,000 people, scattered along the Atlantic coast. Now we are 48 empire States, with 110,000,000 people, the greatest industrial and commercial nation of the world, with a foreign commerce totaling over $8,000,000,000 per year. It extends to the four corners of the earth.

Science has annihilated distance. The stranger nations of yesterday are the neighbors of to-day. No longer can we say that we have "none or a very remote relation" to the primary interests of Europe. We can no longer describe our location in the world as "detached" and "distant situation."

Washington in the greatest flights of his imagination never dreamed of the steamboat and the locomotive; of the telegraph, the telephone, or the wireless; of the submarine or the airship; or of the many countless engines of peace and war, with which every schoolboy to-day is familiar. He thought, to again quote his own words, of "belligerent nations under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us," and in his judgment they "will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation." But while he believed that the belligerent nations would not lightly hazard giving us provocation, we know from experience that the Central Powers did not hesitate to make raids upon our commerce and wage a war against us of "schrecklichkeit"; to sink our men, women, and children to the bottom of the depths, and to drive our commerce from the seas. George Washington took counsel of facts as he saw them and advised accordingly. Were he living to-day, and had he the same knowledge of the defiant attitude of the German Government toward the civilized nations of the world, and were he cognizant of the fact that the only powers which stood between us and destruction were the armies and navies of France and Great Britain, can anyone conceive for a moment that George Washington would have said, "Make no alliance with either Great Britain or France; let them stand between us and destruction; let them bear the brunt of the battle while we stand aloof"? To assume that the Father of his Country would have taken such an anomalous attitude is to insult his memory.

But this is not all. He is very careful in the following paragraph of his Farewell Address to say, "Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

That Germany has been a menace to the world is a demonstrated fact. That she is in as defiant mood to-day as she was in the early period of the war no one can deny. She is not sorry that she entered the war; she is only sorry because she did not win the war. Everyone who is conversant with the situation believes if she felt that by renewing hostilities she could overcome her enemies she would command her armies to advance. The danger is not yet over. The conflagration she began she was not able to quell. So long as the allied troops are in the field there may be no danger from the German armies. But there is an enemy looming up in the Far East and in the Central Powers which threatens to be even as destructive to the civilization of the world as the German forces. It is the spirit of lawlessness which prevails among the Bolsheviki in Russia and in Germany and in Austria, ever the common foe of all civilization, the common foe of all government, and it behooves the United States and her allies to take common counsel for the defense of humanity.

Washington says "Keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture." What does he mean by "suitable establishments" or a "respectable defensive posture," or "temporary alliance for extraordinary emergencies"? I assume, Senators, that he means such establishments, such defensive postures, and such alliances as are suggested by the wisdom of to-day and not by the wisdom of a century ago. I assume, Senators, that by this language he meant such arrangements as in the enlightened intelligence of the day would prove reasonably necessary for the civilized nations of the world in making common cause against the Hun and the Turk. I do not think, Senators, he intended that the enlightened statesman of the twentieth century should be restricted and hemmed in by conditions as he saw them on the 17th of September, 1796, when he published to the world his Farewell Address. The Constitution of the United States, which he helped to draft, was no more of an innovation in the political world of that day than the constitution of the league of nations is an advance over the political thought of this day. Let those who seem to take so much counsel from a part of the words of Washington read the spirit that pervades his Farewell Address.

One of the purposes of the league of nations is to take steps looking toward gradual disarmament of the nations of the world. When the war broke out we had a nucleus of a fair Navy for defensive purposes; but with that exception we had no armament worthy of the name. Germany, the enemy of mankind, had a greater armament than any other nation of the world, greater than was needed for any peace purposes. It could only have been intended for a war of aggression. The constitution of the league of nations provides for the reduction of this armament. And now let us see what George Washington says on this subject. In speaking of the union of the States, he says:

> They will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty.

I trust that the opponents of the pending treaty will be fair enough to commend its draftsmen in their good fortune in following these views of Washington on the subject of disarmament and not forget them in weighing the merits of the league of nations.

Again, while the opponents of the league are complaining that under the provisions of the constitution we pledge our support to the financial and economic measures which may be taken under article 16, that we may be compelled to sustain great financial loss, it may be well to bear in mind the wisdom of Washington, who said, in this same Farewell Address, that "timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevented much larger disbursements to repel it."

But let us pause for a further thought. I know it is possible that the United States by entering into these covenants may subject itself to the risk of war. Let me say further, in answer to this suggestion, that prior to April 6, 1917, we had no alliance of any kind, either offensive or defensive, with any nation in the world, but it did not prevent our becoming involved in the greatest war of all time. So that if by any alliance—and it must be borne in mind this is an alliance for defensive purposes only and not for offensive purposes—we should get into another war we would only be repeating the experience which we had without any alliance whatsoever. Without alliances we did get into war. With alliances we may get into war. There is nothing absolutely certain in human affairs.

I concede if all the nations of the world were to join the league it would not be an absolute guaranty against all war. But I have an abiding faith that if not more than the 14 nations that originally sat about the peace table were to join the league, it would reduce to the minimum the chances of war not only among themselves, but the nations not in the league would hesitate before making an aggressive movement against those who were in the league. The 14 nations that drafted the covenants for the league of nations were comrades in time of war. Let them be companions in time of peace. We ought not to refuse to join them to preserve the peace when we joined them to establish the peace. I can not find it in my heart to cry out to these nations, our comrades in arms, "Unclean, unclean!" I prefer to have faith in the rectitude of their intentions. I would not insult them by withdrawing from the common cause which means so much for humanity.

Much has been said upon the floor of the Senate urging that covenants for a league of nations be kept separate and apart from the peace treaty. I can not accept this position. The covenants for the league of nations constitute the machinery by which the terms of peace are to be carried out. We may argue as much as we choose about the wisdom or unwisdom of making two treaties, one stipulating the terms of peace and the other providing for the organization of the league, but at the same time the peace commissioners knew that whatever the terms of peace might be Germany would not comply with them unless we adopted some means to compel their performance. While the treaty was being signed by the German commissioners, many of the German public men were protesting that the terms could not be enforced.

Who does not know that if President Wilson and his associates had not come back here with some plan whereby to enforce the execution of the terms of peace they would have been criticized as having been derelict in their duty? All must believe that some arrangement to enforce the terms of peace was necessary. This can be called an association, an alliance, or whatnot; it is none the less a league, and if they had failed to take these necessary precautions against the renewal of hostilities, they would have failed the nations they represent and the cause of humanity.

SOME SPECIAL OBJECTIONS TO THE COVENANTS FOR THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Let me now consider more in detail some of the special objections to the covenants for the league.

SENATOR KNOX AND THE LEAGUE.

When we come to deal with our international affairs I deem myself most happy when I can follow the leadership of the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

With that part of his speech which he delivered on March 1, 1919, criticizing the language and arrangement of the constitution, I find myself largely in accord. But the covenants in their final form are, in my judgment, no longer subject to the same exceptions.

In the same speech he asserts that "the league plans still regard war as legal and as possible." Then he points out seven particulars in which the covenants recognize the legality of a state of war, and three particulars in which "the parties must go to war." And this criticism is reiterated by the distinguished Senator in the speech he made later in the Senate in support of Senate resolution No. 76.

Let me observe in passing that no friend of the league has ever claimed that it would be a panacea against all future wars. What we do claim for it is that wars and threats of wars, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, are matters of concern to the whole league, aye, to the whole world. We have an abiding faith that when the nations of the world, leagued together, pledge themselves to suspend warfare in order that international disputes can be submitted either to arbitration or to investigation and the publicity incident thereto, it will materially reduce the chances of war. And the draftsmen of this treaty have not been so unmindful of human nature that they do not fully recognize the soundness of President Wilson's position when he made the statement that back of all the provisions of the constitution stood the force of the world, if it were necessary to invoke it against recalcitrant nations.

But let us examine a little more in detail the circumstances under which war, in the language of the learned Senator from Pennsylvania, is "legal" and "possible." He says, in substance:

First. If a dispute between two members of the league is submitted to arbitration and it is satisfactory to neither; or,

Second. If it is submitted to investigation by the council and the recommendation is satisfactory to neither, then the disputants, after three months from the date of the award or of the recommendation, may properly go to war.

My answer is, as applied to members of the league who may be disputants, the statement is not accurate, because under the terms of the league they obligate themselves to accept the award or the result of the investigation if unanimous, and therefore if they comply with the terms of the treaty there can be no war. But admitting, for the sake of the argument, that the disputants do ignore the findings of the arbitration or investigation and go to war, they are not exercising a right which is given to them under the covenants. They are only exercising such privilege as they had prior to their entering into the league. But by reason of these covenants the cause of peace has won to this extent, namely, that the sword remains sheathed until there can be an award or recommendation as a result of investigation, and that the public opinion of the world can have an opportunity to assert itself.

Third. If the dispute goes either to the executive council or body of delegates—in the redraft of the treaty respectively designated as the council or the assembly—and the decision is unanimous, and this decision is unacceptable, "then they may legally go to war," says my friend from Pennsylvania.

To this I answer that under the covenants of the league the disputants have bound themselves to accept the decision, and it is not accurate to say that they may legally go to war if the decision is unacceptable. If they go to war in defiance of its terms, they are only doing what they could do if there had been no league.

Fourth. The Senator asserts that if neither the council nor the body of delegates can reach a decision which is unanimous, then the parties may "legally go to war." To this I answer that, so far as the terms of the covenant are concerned, they may go to war; but it is no greater privilege than they could exercise without the league. It is a less privilege, in that they have suspended their right to go to war pending the investigation and the report. In other words, the parties to the dispute are just where they would have been without the formation of the league, except that the hand of war is stayed during the investigation and the final report.

Fifth. The learned Senator asserts "all conflicts between States not members of the league would—under the covenant—appear to be legal under the covenant, though the league declares its right and intention to interfere in them if it desires."

I submit, Senators, that it is not quite fair to say that under the circumstances designated the conflict would be legal. The covenants simply recognize the fact that a conflict may take place between nonmembers of the league. It does not attempt to say that the war is either legal or illegal. It recognizes only the fact that war may or may not take place, and that the league declares its right and intention to interfere if it so desires. How does this differ from the position the United States took in the earlier history of the controversy with Spain respecting Cuba? President McKinley said to the foreign diplomats, when they called upon him to intercede:

> The Government of the United States appreciates the humanitarian and disinterested character of the communication now made on behalf of the powers named, and for its part is confident that equal appreciation will be shown for its own earnest and unselfish endeavors to fulfill a duty to humanity by ending a situation the indefinite prolongation of which has become insufferable.

And so the league, in the interest of world peace, is authorized under the covenants to say to nations that are not members, "Conditions may arise whereby in the judgment of civilization it may become necessary or advisable that we intercede rather than that they shall attempt to settle their disputes by force of arms and thereby probably involve the peace of the entire world." Of course, under these circumstances it is possible that the members of the league may become involved in war, and we know only too well that the killing of a member of the royal house of Hapsburg in the small city of Sarajevo in far-distant Bosnia was the match that lighted a world conflagration, and it happened without any league whatsoever.

Sixth. The learned Senator makes serious objection to article 11, which provides, in substance, that any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is declared to be a matter of concern to the whole league, and it reserves the right to take any action it may deem wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. Yes; war or threat of war may lead to war. Aye, more. The world knows only too well that the war declared by Austria against Serbia did lead to a world war that lasted for more than four years. And I submit that, in the opinion of the great suffering masses of humanity, it probably could have been prevented if the forces of civilization had been united in some plan of arbitration or investigation, in giving publicity to the causes of the dispute. Who is it that dares say now, in the light of recent experiences, that any war or threat of war is not a matter of concern not only to the league but to the whole world? And it will continue to be a matter of concern to the whole world, whether there is a league or not. And as individual nations have exercised the right to intercede in the past when war was threatened, so now under the terms of the covenant the league would not exercise any more power than the individual nations did before. The only difference in the political status is that under former conditions it was a matter of concern to each nation individually. Under the league it is declared to be a matter of interest to all of the individual nations as a league. The moral force of the nations united is more potent for good than the moral force of nations acting separately and independently.

And where in principle do the provisions of this article 11 differ from The Hague convention of 1899, under which the signatory powers, including the United States, agreed, among other things, that in a "serious disagreement or conflict, before an appeal to arms, they would have recourse, so far as circumstances allow, to the good offices or mediations of one or more friendly powers," and, independently of this recourse, they recommend that "one or more powers, strangers to the dispute, should on their own initiative, as far as circumstances may allow, offer their good offices or mediation to the States at variance." More than this, The Hague convention provides that—

> Powers, strangers to the dispute, have the right to offer good offices or mediation even during the course of the hostilities, and that the exercise of this right can never be regarded by one or the other of the parties in conflict as an unfriendly act. (Convention for the Pacific Settlement of Disputes, Title II, articles 2 and 3.)

Seventh. It is true, as contended by the distinguished Senator, that—

> Disputes between States members of the league and States not members of the league may lead to legal war, either between two States themselves or between the disputants (one or both) and the league.

But, again, I submit that the charge that the covenant "may lead to legal wars," as just indicated, is misleading. That it may lead to war I concede. That it will increase the chances of war I deny. Neither he nor I can demonstrate mathematically that it will either lead to war or that it will not; but I assert that in view of the fact that intercession by disinterested nations in the past has brought about adjustments of many international disputes, so I believe that by concerted action in the future disputes which may hereafter arise can be settled without resort to force.

WAR MANDATORY.

But the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania contends the covenants require the parties to go to war in three certain cases. Or, to use his own words, in these cases "war is mandatory." In substance he says:

First. The members of the league obligate themselves to preserve by force of arms, if necessary, the territorial integrity and political independence of all States members of the league;

Second. If any member of the league breaks or disregards its covenants, then we must fly to arms to protect them; and

Third. If any nonmember, either accepting or not accepting the obligations of membership for the purposes of the dispute, acts in such a way as to violate article 12, if the State were a member of the league, then we must go to war.

With all due respect, I submit that this does not fairly state the issue. I recognize fully that force is the ultimate fact back of the league, and that circumstances may arise which may compel its use; but I assert that the larger part, if not the most, of the international wars arise out of efforts to win territory or to interfere with the political integrity of nations. The aggressor only begins war when it feels strong enough at the outset to accomplish its purpose, and ordinarily it is by the stronger against the weaker nation. And now who shall say, assuming the world to be at peace, all nations, great and small, are not entitled to hold sacred their territory and their form of government? It is a common concern of all nations. If international disputes arise, does not the whole world thought concur in the belief that they may result either in the destruction of the territorial integrity or political independence of a nation, and that their differences should be adjusted? Under the league it is provided that when such disputes do arise they shall be submitted either to arbitration, if it is recognized as a proper subject for submission to arbitration, or to investigation and report.

If there shall be a failure to comply with either the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the investigators, then resort shall be had to the boycott. And only after all these methods shall have failed the duty is imposed upon the council in such cases to recommend to the several governments concerned what effective military or naval forces members of the league shall severally contribute to the armament of force to be used to protect the covenants of the league. The power to declare war by each of the members of the league rests where it does with the several members of the league, as if there were no league. True, the members of the league obligate themselves to mutually support one another in the financial or economic measures that are to be taken in order to minimize the loss or inconvenience resulting from the measures which may be taken and to mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State and to afford passage through their territory for the forces of the members of the league which are cooperating to protect its covenants. And hence I contend to construe the covenants so as to say that the member States are forced to go to war is wholly unwarranted. At the same time every friend of the league fully realizes the possibility of war. And if conditions should arise whereby they do go to war, it is the result of voluntary action by each nation. It is true that in the minds of some of the men, active supporters of the league, the duty to go to war should have been made compulsory, but I do not believe that the commissioners should have gone further in this behalf than they did. I think to have gone further would have been a fatal mistake, because in a great compact such as this we must to a certain extent feel our way step by step. I feel firmly convinced that when the great moral forces of the civilized nations of the world are coordinated and cooperate they will advance the cause of peace.

After pointing out that the covenants for a league of nations make war legal and possible in seven cases and mandatory in three cases, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania asks, "Can we not do something to avert the horror of war?" and he answers, "Yes; there are ways, some of them simple and well tried." He points out three remedies:

First. Compulsory arbitration for all disputes under such plan as that provided for in the international prize court; or,

Second. The unratified British-American or French-American arbitration treaties; or—and at this point I wish to remind Senators that those treaties were the Senator's own babies—or,

Third. The Olney-Pauncefote treaty of 1897, or a union of the best in all of them.

But I submit, with all due respect to the eminent Senator, that not one of these methods is a guaranty against war. If the covenants for a league of peace are subject to the criticism which the Senator made, and to which I have referred, then also are the methods he proposes subject to the same exceptions.

I shall not take time to discuss all of them, but I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate while I make a brief reference to the British-American and French-American treaties of 1911, which were drafted by the distinguished Senator.

ARBITRATION TREATIES WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND FRANCE.

On August 4, 1911, President Taft presented to the Senate of the United States for ratification these treaties. They had been negotiated by his great Secretary of State, the Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX, now the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, whose ability and statesmanship illumines every subject he touches and for whose judgment every Senator has the profoundest respect, whether he agrees with him or not.

By these treaties it was stipulated that all differences arising between the high contracting parties which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other, under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, should be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other arbitral tribunal, as may be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, defining the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and setting the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

Article 2 of the treaty in substance provided for the institution of a joint high commission of inquiry, to which, upon the request of either party, shall be referred for impartial and conscientious investigation any controversy between the parties within the scope of article 1, before such controversy has been submitted to arbitration, and also any other controversy hereafter arising between them, even though they are not agreed that it falls within the scope of article 1, provided, however, that such reference may be postponed until the expiration of one year after the date of the formal request therefor, in order to afford an opportunity for diplomatic discussions and adjustment of the questions in controversy, if either party desire such postponement.

The treaty also provided that whenever a question or matter of difference is referred to the joint high commission of inquiry each party should designate three of its nationals to act as a commission of inquiry for the purpose of such reference, or the commission may be otherwise constituted in any particular case by the terms of reference, the membership of the commission and the terms of reference to be determined in each case by an exchange of notes.

Article 3 provided in substance that the joint high commission of inquiry is authorized to examine into and report upon the particular questions or matters referred to it for the purpose of facilitating the solution of disputes by elucidating the facts, and to define the issue presented by such questions; and also to include in its report such recommendations and conclusions as may be appropriate. These reports were not to be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted, either on the facts or on the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

It—article 3—also provided that, in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; "and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1 it shall be referred to arbitration, in accordance with the provisions of this treaty."

I may say in passing that the Senate struck from the treaty this last paragraph.

Certain amendments to this treaty were proposed by the United States Senate, and it was ratified, with certain reservations. There were, however, no exchanges of ratifications, and therefore the treaties lie dormant.

I take the liberty to refer to this treaty because it seems that when the able Secretary of State drew the treaty and President Taft submitted it to the Senate he was not disturbed by the fact that he was providing for the arbitration of all disputes which could not be settled by diplomacy relating to our international matters and which were justiciable in their nature "by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity."

He did not seem to be averse to submitting disputes in which there was a disagreement as to whether or not they were subject to arbitration under article 1 to this joint high commission of inquiry, and if all its members, or all but one, agree and report that such difference was within the scope of article 1, that it should be then referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the treaty.

Now, I submit in all candor that if the distinguished Senator, as Secretary of State, was willing to submit to arbitration all questions which it was agreed were justiciable and all questions in which there was a difference of opinion as to their justiciable character, but which the joint high commission of inquiry decided by unanimous vote, or by all but one, to be justiciable to arbitration, was he not then surrendering the right of sovereignty? Was he not suspending the right to resort to arms and compelling the United States to abide the decision of the court of arbitration or the arbitral tribunal, as the case might be?

In these respects I submit that his treaty was broader in scope than the covenants of the league. They provided only that such questions should be submitted to arbitration as were recognized by the disputants to be suitable for submission to arbitration, and all others were to be submitted to investigation. Under the treaties with Great Britain and France, drawn by the distinguished Secretary, the permanent court of arbitration or the arbitral tribunal were given jurisdiction to try and determine "all differences hereafter arising * * * which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity." If there was any disagreement as to whether these differences were subject to arbitration or not, then it was referred to the joint high commission to decide, and if they decided that it was justiciable by a unanimous vote or by all but one, then the dispute had to be submitted to arbitration.

I submit that under these treaties war is just "as legal," just "as possible," and just "as inevitable"——

Mr. WILLIAMS. And just as mandatory.

Mr. POMERENE. And just as mandatory as under the league of nations in the following particulars:

First. If, notwithstanding the treaty, the high contracting parties should refuse to settle their differences by arbitration, then war must follow.

Second. If they should refuse to submit them to the permanent court of arbitration and fail to agree upon some other arbitral tribunal by special agreement, then war must follow.

Third. If a dispute should arise as to whether their differences were justiciable in their nature, as defined in the treaty, and they should refuse to submit this question to the decision of the high court of inquiry, then war must follow.

Fourth. Or if it were submitted to the high court of inquiry and they should decide that the controversy was justiciable and either party should refuse to acquiesce in their decision that it was justiciable, then war must follow.

Fifth. If an award should be made and either party should refuse to comply with its terms, then war must follow.

Certainly it is not very satisfactory to take the position that because the pending treaty may not be a remedy for all war that it should be rejected, nor is the charge that the pending treaty is a surrender of sovereignty very convincing when other mechanisms are suggested which are also a surrender of sovereignty, even though they may differ somewhat in degree.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A limitation of sovereignty.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that is all.

MR. ROOT'S OBJECTIONS.

In Mr. Root's response to Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, under date of March 29, 1919, in speaking of the covenants of the league of nations, other than article 10, relating to the mutual guaranty of territory, articles 8 and 9, relating to the reduction of armaments, and article 19, to mandatories, he says.

And I commend this word to my friends who are opposing this treaty:

I think these provisions are well devised, and should be regarded as free from any just objection, so far as they relate to the settlement of the political questions at which they are really aimed. The provisions which, taken together, accomplish this result are of the highest value. They are developed naturally from the international practice of the past. They are a great step forward. They create an institution through which the public opinion of mankind, condemning unjust aggression and unnecessary war, may receive, effect and exert its power for the preservation of peace instead of being dissipated in fruitless protest or lamentation. The effect will be to make this sort of conference which Sir Edward Grey tried in vain to get for the purpose of averting this great war obligatory, inevitable, automatic. I think everybody ought to be in favor of that.

I repeat that this scheme for the settlement of political questions such as brought about the present war is of very great practical value, and it would be a sad thing if the opportunity for the establishment of such a safeguard against future wars should be lost.

If, now, according to Mr. Root, one of the greatest and at the same time, I am free to say, one of the fairest critics of the league, it has so much of good in it, ought we not to hesitate before attempting at this crucial period in world affairs to take any step which might in the least embarrass the signatory powers in bringing about the restoration of the normal conditions that ought to prevail in peace? Even if we have serious objections to some of the provisions of this treaty, is it not best now that we do not attach too much importance to them, but rather that we pass them over, reserving to ourselves the intention hereafter to engraft upon the treaty such amendments as may seem wise? I do not understand that Mr. Root has even to this day changed his view as to the necessity for the formation of a league of nations.

In the letter to which I have referred he proposed six amendments to the first draft of the treaty. The substance of most of them is to be found in the final draft. Let us review them.

First. He proposed to strike out article 13, which provided for the submission to arbitration of all disputes which the parties recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which could not be settled by diplomacy, and to insert in its stead a provision requiring the contracting parties to refer to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague, or some other court of arbitral justice, or other arbitral tribunal, all disputes, including those affecting honor and vital interests, which are of a justiciable character, and which the powers concerned have failed to settle by diplomatic methods, and to require them to accept and give effect to the award of the tribunal. And he then defined disputes of a justiciable character to be disputes "as to the interpretation of a treaty, as in any question of international law; as to the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of any internation obligation; as to the nature and extent of the reparation to be made for any such breach."

It also required that any question which may arise as to whether a dispute is of a justiciable character should also be referred for decision to the court of arbitral justice when constituted, or until it is constituted to the existing permanent court of arbitration at The Hague.

Without stopping here to quote article 13 as contained in the covenant finally reported by the peace conference, I think all must agree that the suggested amendment by Mr. Root has in a large part been accepted. The principal difference lies in this:

Mr. Root would submit to arbitration "all disputes * * * (including those affecting honor and vital interests which are of a justiciable character and which the powers concerned have failed to settle by diplomatic methods)," and if any question should arise as to whether a "dispute is of a justiciable character" it is to be referred for decision to the court of arbitral justice when constituted, or until it is constituted to the existing court of arbitration at The Hague; while in the pending treaty only those disputes are to be arbitrated which the parties thereto "recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration." All other disputes are to be submitted for investigation and report.

Second. His second amendment suggested adding to article 14 a provision requiring "the executive council to call a general conference of the powers to meet not less than two years or more than five years after the signing of this convention for the purpose of reviewing the condition of international law and of agreeing upon and stating in authoritative form the principles and rules thereof"; thereafter regular conferences to be called and held at stated times.

While the substance of this amendment is not directly or specifically included in the redraft of the covenants, please observe the following facts: The assembly is authorized to meet at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require. It may deal with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

The council also is authorized to meet from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once a year, and also to deal with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

The first meeting of the assembly and the first meeting of the council shall be summoned by the President of the United States. Surely these provisions give ample opportunity to the league to review the condition of international law and to agree upon and state in authoritative form the principles and rules thereof as fully as if Mr. Root's second amendment had been adopted word for word. If anything further should be required, section 26 of the covenants provides the method of their amendment.

Third. His third amendment relates to the Monroe doctrine. It is not a protest against the league. It recognizes the necessity therefor; but it seems to make specific the fact that nothing contained in it "shall be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions or to require the submission of its policy regarding such questions (including therein the admission of immigrants) to the decision or recommendation of other powers." In other words, he seeks to protect the Monroe doctrine in so far as it concerns controversies relating to American countries.

Article 10 in the original draft, as well as in the covenant as finally reported, obligates the members of the league to undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all the members of the league. This was virtually extending the fundamental principles of the Monroe doctrine to all the members of the league, whether on the American Continent or in any other portion of the world. But for the purpose of clarity, and out of respect to the wishes of those who felt that the Monroe doctrine was not sufficiently recognized, the covenants in their final form specifically recognize it both in form and substance.

Fourth. In the fourth amendment Mr. Root suggests that to article 10 should be added a provision to the effect that after five years from the signing of the covenants any party might terminate its obligation under this article by giving one year's notice in writing to the secretary general of the league. Why it should be proposed that the signatory powers should be given the right to relieve themselves of the obligations of one of the articles and at the same time be obligated by the other articles of the treaty I do not understand. Why it might be wise, after a given number of years, to permit withdrawal entirely from the covenants, if that were deemed proper under certain limitations, I can understand. I think it would have been very unwise to adopt the suggestion made by Mr. Root, but, as I have pointed out, the amended draft does permit a member to withdraw from the league, provided its obligations have been complied with at the time of withdrawal, after two years' notice. But I shall discuss this article 10 a little later on and more fully.

Fifth. Evidently Mr. Root is in hearty accord with the purposes of the commissioners at the peace table in their efforts to secure the disarmament of the powers. In a word, both drafts of the treaty provide for the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with the national safety; that the council shall formulate plans for such reduction for the consideration and action of the several Governments; that such plans shall be subject to reconsideration and revision at least every 10 years; that after these plans shall have been adopted by the several Governments the limits of armament therein fixed shall not be exceeded without the concurrence of the council. They recognize that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections. The council is to advise how the evil effects attendant upon the manufacture shall be prevented, and the members of the league undertake to exchange full and frank information as to the scale of their armaments and military and naval programs and the conditions of such of their industries as are adaptable to warlike purposes.

These provisions do not seem to Mr. Root to be sufficient, and he would add thereto a provision giving "full power of inspection and verification personally and by authorized agents as to all armament, equipment, ammunitions, and industries" referred to in article 8. Personally I have no objection to this amendment; but I can understand why exception might be taken to it, because, first, it questions the good faith of the signatory powers even before the treaty is signed. In the second place, some may have regarded it as too inquisitorial. But whatever the objections may have been, there is no sound reason why anyone should insist on this provision being put into the treaty. It is of minor importance. If any of the powers should attempt to evade the agreement with regard to armament, it is almost impossible to secrete from the eyes of the world any substantial preparations for war that may be made by any of the countries of the world. And it may be further added, if it should appear that one or more of the countries is likely to violate its agreement with reference to the limitation of armaments the treaty is open to amendment. Provision is made for the convening of both the council and the assembly, and they have the right to investigate these matters. And does anyone think if any nation, however secretly, attempts to increase its armament for the purpose of a war of aggression the knowledge would not soon become public? Imperial Germany was constantly adding to her armament during the last 40 years. She professed it was for peace purposes. Many observers felt confident it was for a war of conquest. But with all her powers of deception and intrigue, I do not know that she was able to keep secret either the fact or the extent of her military preparations. I do not think, therefore, looking at it from the standpoint of an American, that the proposed amendment is of such vital consequence that we need disturb ourselves whether it is in or out of the treaty.

Sixth. His sixth amendment requires that the council shall call a general conference of the members of the league, to meet not less than 5 nor more than 10 years after the signing of this covenant, for the revision thereof, and at that time, or at any time thereafter, upon one year's notice, any member may withdraw from the league. These suggestions, too, are substantially met by the final draft.

The final draft of the treaty permits any member of the league to withdraw at any time after two years' notice, provided all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant have been fulfilled at the time of withdrawal. In this respect the covenants of the treaty admit of freer action by the members of the league than does the Root amendment.

ARTICLE 10.

But I am at a considerable loss to understand the change which has been wrought in the mind of Mr. Root since he wrote his letter to Mr. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee. In this letter he says:

> My first impression was that the whole article ought to be stricken out. If perpetual it would be an attempt to preserve for all time unchanged the distribution of powers and territory made in accordance with the views and exigencies of the Allies in this present juncture of affairs. It would be mischievous. Change and growth are the law of life, and no generation can impose its will in regard to the growth of nations and distribution of power upon succeeding generations. I think, however, that this article must be considered not merely with reference to the future but with reference to the present situation in Europe. Indeed, this whole agreement ought to be considered in that double aspect.

He then, with very great force, discusses the dismemberment of the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, and the Romanoffs, and calls attention to the turbulent masses without stable government in those territories "unaccustomed to self-control and fighting among themselves like children of the dragon's teeth." He recognizes that there can be no "settled peace until these masses are reduced to order." He is conscious of the fact "that Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium, with a population of less than 130,000,000, are confronted with the disorganized but vigorous and warlike population of Germany, German Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, Turkey, and Russia, amounting approximately to 220,000,000, fast returning to barbarism and the lawless violence of barbarous races." eH knows that "order must be restored." The allied nations in their council must determine the lines of reconstruction. Their determinations must be enforced under these conditions. "Under these conditions," he says, and I agree with him, "the United States can not quit. It must go on to the performance of its duty, and the immediate aspect of article 10 is an agreement to do that. I think, therefore, that article 10 should be amended so that it shall hold a limited time, and thereafter any member may withdraw from it."

Those are not my words. Those were Mr. Root's words on March 29.

Such was the condition as he saw it on March 29, 1919.

But in his letter of June 19, 1919, to the chairman of our Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. Root says, as to article 10:

> It is not an essential or even an appropriate part of the provisions for a league of nations to preserve peace.

What change took place between these two dates? Why was article 10 so necessary in March and so objectionable in June?

Have our allied powers grown stronger? Have Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, Turkey, and Russia grown less turbulent? Do not the same conditions which suggested the wisdom of article 10 on March 29 obtain to-day? Countries do have a natural growth. They ought to have room, perhaps, for proper development. But they have no right by reason of increased population, or by any sort of development, to overrun the territories of other peoples against their will. Article 10 does not forbid one nation from getting, by annexation or peaceful means, additional territory for national purposes under this treaty, except in so far as that right may be limited under the Monroe doctrine. Article 10 requires the members of the league "to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league."

We must not forget that before we entered into the war our Allies encouraged the oppressed Poles, Jugo-Slavs, and Czecho-Slovaks to rise in revolt against their imperial masters. And when we entered the war we, too, gave them like encouragement, and held out to them the hope that they could soon take their places in the family of nations. They fought; they helped us win; and now, Senators, after they have helped the allied and associated powers, including the United States, to overcome the great imperial power of Germany and of Austria-Hungary and Turkey, are we, like the Arab of old, to "fold our tents and silently steal away"? Strike out article 10 and what is to become of these new-born nations? Are they to be left to the mercy of their former imperial masters? Is there not some obligation resting upon us to help them to preserve their national integrity? Oh, Senators, Mr. Root was right, eternally right, when he said that article 10 should be retained. And now, when he proposes to strike it out of the covenants he is wrong, eternally wrong.

I hope that it shall be recorded of the part we took in this great war, not only that we fought a good fight, and we won, but I want it likewise to be written that after the fight was over and the victory won we also kept the faith. I have heard a vast deal since the discussion of this subject began in the Senate from the lips of distinguished Senators who point out the obligations of treaties and covenants and fear that we may be involved in some entangling alliances which will require us to keep the covenants; that a condition may arise where Congress may refuse to carry out the stipulations of our treaty; and they say if we do not keep them literally we will be charged with a breach of faith. Aye, Senators, there is such a possibility, but it is only a possibility. I assume as we enter into this league that our associates are nations of honor, and that we shall only be required to do that which honor and justice shall dictate. I would not consent to enter into any covenant with any nation on earth unless I believed at the outset that both the signatory powers would be controlled by such sentiments. I am not going to discredit them in advance. But, Senators, on the other hand, if the signatory powers shall attempt to exact from us something which is not dictated by a sense of justice and of honor, I know of no code of ethics that requires any nation to perform their decrees.

But to those who are opposed to entering into this league in its present form because a situation may arise in the future where we must carry out certain decrees or be guilty of a breach of faith, I answer that if we do not enter into these covenants now and if we do not make it known to the world now that we will protect the territorial integrity and political independence of these new-born nations, we will be guilty of a breach of faith and dishonor the Government of which we are so proud. We ought not to strain at the gnat of future possible dishonor and swallow the camel of present actual dishonor, while our friends are crippled even unto death. We came to the rescue of a prostrate world. We can not desert it during its period of convalescence, particularly in the presence of an enemy that has no more of honor to-day than it had when it brought on this war for world conquest.

I desire to emphasize the fact that the primary purpose of the league of nations is to settle all international controversies either by arbitration or by mediation, or by investigation and report, without resort to war, save only when all other methods of adjustment have failed. It is for these purposes that the methods of procedure therein outlined have been set forth. It is to this end that the hand of the war is stayed until all other peaceable means have failed. Speaking, of course, in a very general way, this has been the policy of all arbitration treaties which have been entered into between this and other nations. The principal difference between the plan adopted in other arbitration treaties and this lies in the fact that arbitration treaties generally are made between two contracting nations, while the covenants for the league of nations apply to all nations which sign the covenants, and this grows out of the fact that the awful war through which we have just passed left its trail of death and destruction in nearly all the civilized nations of the world.

True, it is an advance over other methods of arbitration which have heretofore been adopted, but the advance became necessary because the evils of the war were more widespread than had heretofore been thought possible. It takes comprehensive measures to meet a world-wide evil.

VIEWS OF SENATOR LODGE.

One of my very great regrets is that the eminent Senator from Massachusetts, who has served his country so ably for so many years, is not taking the lead in insisting upon the ratification of this treaty, and it seems to me that his past record not only upon the subject of arbitration but the formation of a league of nations justifies this disappointment.

In the report which he submitted on August 15, 1911, on the general arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France he said:

> The history of the United States for a period of more than 70 years exhibits a record of arbitration treaties unequaled by that of any other nation on earth. Every one of those treaties has received the cordial assent of the Senate of the United States.

So earnestly has the distinguished Senator thought upon this subject and so deeply was he impressed by the great war waging that on June 9, 1915, in an address delivered at Union College, he said:

> We must bear constantly in mind that from the conflict which now convulses the world there may possibly come events which will force us to fight with all our strength to preserve our freedom, our democracy, and our national life. * * *

And, without quoting all he says, he asks this question:

> What can we do in a larger sense toward securing and maintaining the peace of the world?

He then proceeds to answer:

> This is a much more difficult question; but, turn it back and forth as we may, there is no escape from the proposition that the peace of the world can only be maintained, as the peace and order of a single community are maintained, as the peace of a single nation is maintained, by the force which united nations are willing to put behind the peace and order of the world.

And then follow these pregnant words:

> Nations must unite as men unite in order to preserve peace and order. The great nations must be so united as to be able to say to any single country, "You must not go to war." And they can only say that effectively when the country desiring war knows the force that the nations place behind peace is irresistible.

Following these forceful words, the distinguished Senator, in his Union College address, voiced the following conclusions:

> In differences between nations which go beyond the limited range of arbitrable questions peace can only be maintained by putting behind it the force of united nations determined to uphold it and to prevent war. No one is more conscious than I of the enormous difficulties which beset such a solution or such a scheme, but I am certain that it is in this direction alone that we can find hope for the maintenance of the world's peace and the avoidance of needless wars. Even if we could establish such a union of nations, there might be some wars which could not be avoided, but there are certainly many which might be prevented. * * * It may seem Utopian at this moment to suggest a union of civilized nations in order to put a controlling force behind the maintenance of peace and international order, but it is through the aspiration for perfection, through the search for Utopias, that the real advances have been made.

Later on he delivered a speech at the annual convention of the League to Enforce Peace, held on May 26 and 27, 1916, here in Washington, and in discussing the subject he said:

> This league certainly has the highest of all aims for the benefit of humanity, and because the pathway is sown with difficulties is no reason why we should turn from it. It is the vision of a perhaps impossible perfection that has led humanity across the centuries.

In the same speech, further along, he uses this language:

> The limit of voluntary arbitration has, I think, been reached. * * * I think the next step is that which this league proposes, and that is to put force behind international peace. We may not solve it in that way, but if we can not solve it in that way it can be solved in no other.

The treaty before the Senate does not go as far as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts was willing to go in 1916. While the pending treaty obligates the members of the league to respect and preserve one another against external aggression, to comply with the awards of the arbitrators and the recommendation of the investigators, the only provision looking to war is that the council shall "recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armament of forces" in order to protect the covenants of the league.

With all due respect, permit me to say that I prefer to be guided in my consideration of this subject by the views which were entertained by the distinguished Senator in 1915 and 1916 rather than to follow him in his opposition to the treaty now.

It may be, Senators, that this treaty is—to use his language—"the vision of a perhaps impossible perfection"; but imperfect though it may be, I feel that it is a step toward preserving the peace of the world, and even if it does not go so far in some directions as we would have it go, and too far in other directions, there is, in my judgment, nothing inconsistent with the fundamental principles which seem to have inspired the views of the distinguished Senator to which I have just referred.

Surely, if the treaty is ratified after the experience through which we have just passed it will help to keep our former enemies in the straight and narrow path until the present plan can be modified or improved so as to meet the requirements of our future experiences and our mature thoughts.

EXIGENCIES OF SITUATION DEMAND EARLY RATIFICATION OF TREATY.

I trust that it will not be regarded as presumptuous for me to suggest this thought to those Senators who are either opposing the ratification of the treaty as it now stands or who are insisting upon amendments or reservations:

During the war many of us voted for measures not because we would have approved them in time of peace but because we felt the exigencies of the situation required them. May we not pursue a similar course when it comes to the ratification of the peace treaty? All of us recognize how extremely abnormal present conditions are, particularly in Europe. We know the feeling of unrest prevailing everywhere. There can be no doubt about it. The spirit of revolution is running rife, not only in eastern Europe and within the Central Powers, but to some extent among the peoples of our Allies. Ought not our aim to be the restoration of peace and the adoption of such measures for its preservation and the protection of the new-born nations as shall seem to be sufficient in the present state of the public mind?

Who does not know that Germany, haughty, belligerent, with a spirit of defiance that knows no restraint of morals or of law, and only submitting to an overpowering force, is looking forward to the moment when she may resume her aggressions against her neighbors? Who does not know that the new Governments of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavonia, and other smaller independent nations which have sprung up from the ruins of the old régime have not as yet been able to organize perfect and stabilized governments, and that they will need for some time in the future the active encouragement of the Allies and associated powers, as well as protection against their former masters?

Who is so blind that he does not understand that it is now necessary, and will be necessary for years, to aid in protecting the territorial integrity and political independence of those newly formed governments against external aggression by their former masters? And, further, who does not know that, for some years to come at least, it will be necessary to keep Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey within the limitations of their own boundaries? Why, then, the intensity of opposition against section 10? Why do we not recognize this situation as it exists? Under the provisions of the treaty the United States has the power to withdraw from the league after two years' notice of her intention so to do, provided that she has fulfilled all her international obligations and all her obligations under the treaty. Are not the political and military conditions in Europe such as to convince any fair-minded man that our obligations as one of the belligerents will require us to be on guard for two years and more? Our immediate responsibilities are such that we can not now refuse to meet them.

Will not an unreasonable delay or a refusal to ratify the treaty lend encouragement to the present spirit of unrest? Will it not be a postponement of the day when reason will resume its sway in the world? Does it not follow, therefore, that the sooner the treaty is ratified the earlier we can serve notice to withdraw from the league, if in the light of intervening experiences that should become advisable?

I would not find serious fault with some of the proposed amendments or reservations if they did not mean delay and a consequent encouragement to revolutionary elements. Is it not going to be better, therefore, that we surrender some of our own convictions in the interest of immediate peace, rather than to insist upon changes which will require the pending treaty to be sent back to the associated powers?

Before and after the Constitution of the United States was submitted to the several States for ratification many very important amendments were proposed, among them the first 10 amendments, constituting the Bill of Rights. We would not now think of adopting a Constitution for the United States without including in it the Bill of Rights. But who now would assume to say that the Constitution of the United States should not have been ratified before incorporating therein the Bill of Rights? Had they delayed ratification until after the Bill of Rights were incorporated therein, it would have led, to use Milton's words, to "confusion worse confounded."

Applying the same process of reasoning to the covenants for the league of nations, does not wisdom now also suggest, in view of world conditions, that we shall ratify them as they now stand and later adopt such amendments or modifications as sound statesmanship may seem to require?

A war-sick world demands the early ratification of the treaty. That demand must not and can not be ignored.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	New	Spencer
Calder	Henderson	Newberry	Thomas
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Underwood
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Warren
Edge	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Elkins	Knox	Ransdell	Williams
France	La Follette	Robinson	Wolcott
Gay	Lenroot	Shields
Gerry	McCumber	Simmons

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. NEWBERRY. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has requested me to announce that he is detained in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in closing his very able address referred to the Constitutional Convention.

It was not without very great difficulty, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity, that our fathers in the Constitutional Convention were ever able to compromise their differences and adopt and obtain the ratification of the Federal Constitution. Mason, Randolph, and Gerry refused to sign it, and the eloquent Patrick Henry employed the great powers of his matchless genius in opposition to it. Its opponents picked out supposed flaws in it and predicted disaster to the new Republic should it be ratified.

The opposition was so persistent and so strong that that instrument—the bulwark of our liberties, the guaranty of our freedom—was ratified in the State of Massachusetts by a vote of only 187 to 168, in New York by a vote of only 30 to 27, and in Virginia by a vote of 87 to 79; but, sirs, in the passing years the alleged defects have disappeared. Its beauty and strength have become more impressive.

It is not surprising that Mr. Franklin, while the last members were signing that historic instrument, looking toward the President's chair, at the back of which a rising sun happened to be painted, observed to some of the members standing near him that painters had found it difficult to distinguish in their art a rising from a setting sun. "I have," said he, "in the course of this session and the vicissitudes of my hopes and fears as to its issue, often looked at that painting behind the President's chair without being able to tell whether it is rising or setting; but now, at length, I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting sun."

No doubt, Mr. President, often during the long deliberations of the Versailles conference President Wilson and the American delegates saw in their imagination a like painting, as adjustments of those great questions became so difficult, the failure of the conference growing perilously near, and thought the painting to be one of a setting sun. But to-day, as we approach the end of this long journey, may we with the civilized peoples of the world behold a rising sun.

Never before in the discussion of a great national question has deception been so lavishly practiced and misrepresentation so generously employed.

Every alluring piece of sophistry that oratory could command, every cunning device that politicians could conjure, has been advanced by the opponents of the league here, that in the country reason might be dethroned and prejudice aroused.

No argument has been too fallacious, no illustration too farfetched, for you to seize upon in your desperate efforts to becloud the issue.

Just criticism is always acceptable and sincere analysis ever desired. But when opposition to international policies, such as are contained in this treaty, policies that will conclude the most cruel war, return young men to their loved ones, restrain the hand of taxation, and make for the future peace and happiness of mankind, is founded on rank partisanship and personal dislike—aye, merely to shatter the popularity or retard the growing ascendency of a particular individual—then, sirs, it is worse than Bolshevism gone wild; worse than the scourge inflicted upon the bridegroom in the Ancient Mariner.

The treaty that is now before the Senate for ratification is here not because of you but in spite of you—I mean the Republican leadership in this body.

Long before the peace conference assembled at Versailles your voices were raised in protest against the President of the United States attending as one of our representatives. It was a very quick change upon your part, for when the President came to Congress on the 8th day of January, 1918, and delivered that historic message laying down the fourteen points upon which peace might come and war end, with practical unanimity and loud acclaim you commended it, and Republican leaders throughout the country indorsed it.

Representative CANNON, of Illinois, that sage of Republicanism, that splendid American whom—whether we agree with him or not—we all love for his sterling qualities, said:

I wish this address could be read to every woman and man and thoroughly explained in Germany and Russia.

Mr. FESS, the chairman of the National Republican congressional campaign committee, said:

I am wonderfully pleased with the message.

Here is what the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate [Mr. LODGE] said:

It is an able message and a concrete proposition. I hope it will have a good effect on Russia.

Here is what the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] said:

That paper will stiffen up everybody in the United States and encourage the people of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Serbia, Montenegro, and all other countries.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said:

It was an excellent address, clear, forceful, and a good program.

Will you reflect with me on the conditions with which we were confronted at that time? It was the darkest period of the war. German hordes were pushing back the allied armies day by day. Belgium was prostrate. The English armies were fighting with their backs to the wall. French soldiers were retreating toward the gates of Paris. Cadorna and his brave followers were being pursued over the plains of Venetia. Despair hovered over the Allies' cause, and anxiety filled the breast of every allied country. Hope of success was fading, and Germany, it seemed, was becoming more firmly intrenched with each passing hour. It was at that time that the President of the United States delivered that message firing enthusiasm into our cause and placing the wedge that finally disintegrated the common enemy. The most optimistic did not believe it possible to obtain all the things for which our leader then contended. The most that we could do was to hope and pray.

But this apparent cooperation has long since been lost sight of. You became jealous of the growing ascendancy of this man. He was becoming too popular, too influential in world affairs. The fact that he was a great American, the spokesman of a great country, the Commander in Chief of an Army unsurpassed for discipline, unexcelled in courage, the fact that he was winning glory for our flag and adding brightness to our star in the firmament of nations, has now sunk into insignificance under the pressure of party necessity.

You did not object to the President going abroad as the head of our delegation in that great conference because of any doubt on your part of his ability to faithfully represent us. You knew, as the world knew, that he was at that time the most influential and commanding figure on earth, and that it was through his leadership that the war had been brought to an end. Your opposition arose simply and merely because he happened to be the spokesman and leader of another political party. I had never believed that partisanship would become so acute that jealous leaders would rather see the star of their country dimmed than to witness the ascendancy of one individual because he was of a different political faith. Why, sirs, even though you commended the fourteenth point of the President's speech to Congress in January of last year, when he suggested the association of a league of nations for the preservation of smaller nations and the peace of the world, no sooner had he begun preparations for his European trip—that the people of Europe might be aroused to the league of nations idea—than you tried by every possible means to embarrass him.

It was in face of your constant protests that he won the masses of foreign countries to his ideas and gained the cooperation and unanimous approval of the delegates from all the nations at Versailles. And let me suggest to you to-day that as he has been successful thus far the American people whom you represent will see to it that he is successful to the end.

No task was ever accomplished against such unfavorable odds. There in a foreign country, among the scores of foreign representatives, most of whom did not speak nor understand the English language, against a propaganda conceived by men in this Chamber, adequately financed and consistently prosecuted, that his influence might be destroyed and his plans defeated, he won.

And now, sirs, with the work finished and the signatures of these able statesmen of these allied countries attached to the instrument, you have organized the machinery of this body that their work might be undone. Bargaining has been indulged in and compromises effected that you might carry on your unfair schemes. This country still rings with echoes from the eloquence of the distinguished Senator from Idaho protesting his undying opposition to the elevation of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania to the chairmanship of the Finance Committee. And yet, still fresh in our minds is that scene on the 28th of May, when the erstwhile pretended progressives of the Republican Party buried all their differences and solidly voted for the Senators from Pennsylvania and Wyoming, on whose heads they have for almost a generation poured forth their maledictions, as chairmen, respectively, of the Finance and Appropriations Committees. And to some of us, while it appeared an awakening at the time, subsequent events and the deliberate, willful stacking of the Foreign Relations Committee against this treaty of peace, including the league of nations, explain everything.

Not content with leveling your mud batteries on the league of nations covenant in the treaty, when you had failed you continued to take issue with your representatives at Versailles on practically every important question.

When Italy contended for Fiume and her delegates threatened to withdraw from the council if their views did not prevail, and the united judgment of the conference was against their contention and so decided—when Premier Orlando unceremoniously left the conference at Versailles and returned home to make a report to his people and arouse sentiment in Italy against the united judgment of Lloyd-George, Clemenceau, and President Wilson—it was under these circumstances, and at that very critical period, that your leader took issue with the representatives of his Government and the united judgment of the representatives of France and England and sided with Orlando and Italy. The statement that I desire to read shows very clearly the cooperation he would lend the President in these stormy times. In a telegram to the Italian societies of Boston he said:

In the discussions of the terms of peace I have always declared that the region known as "Italia Irredenta" and all adjoining regions where Italian culture and Italian population are dominant should be returned to Italy, and that Italy should have military and naval control of the Adriatic not only for her own protection but as an essential barrier against any future attempt of Germany to attack the rest of the world as she did in the recent war. I have also said repeatedly that the Jugo-Slavs ought to have access to the Adriatic, which I regard as economically essential to their independence.

From information given me by an Italian deputation whom I saw last spring in Washington, I was assured that Italy was entirely willing to give portions of the Dalmatian coast containing good ports to the Slav population.

It is hardly conceivable that one who voiced such sentiments as these, under such circumstances, and when the issue was so clearly defined between his own country and a foreign country, that the same man could ever have uttered such noble sentiments as I hope to quote before I have finished, sentiments that were intentioned and expressed before his mind was beclouded by partisan prejudice and his heart moved by political expediency.

When China, stirred and influenced by expressions emanating from your leaders on this side of the water, refused to sign the peace treaty, they received the most sincere cooperation and sympathy from you.

When the representatives of America were doing everything within their power commensurate with right and justice to compromise our differences with Japan and maintain our friendly relations with her, your leaders fanned the fires of discontent and did everything within their power to widen the breach. You are still doing it.

Before Germany signed the treaty, public opinion in that country was in a nebulous state, Germany not yet having come to a definite conclusion as to what she would do. And during those anxious days, as their representatives sat with pen in hand and decision hanging in the balance, your leaders in this Chamber, by eloquence that rung the changes and sounded to German ears, showed to them opposition that was sympathetic and akin.

Thirty-nine of your Senators signed and proclaimed the round robin; you conducted a filibuster in the closing hours of the last session; your Foreign Relations Committee reported out the Knox resolution; your chairman printed into the RECORD the amendments in the form of reservations that your side of the Chamber would stand for. Every movement has been started, every plan designed, nothing has been left undone by you, to have "failure" written over the conference door at Versailles. Your action is only comparable to the conduct of the never-ceasing hell hounds Milton stationed at the infernal gates.

I am quite aware that, with two or three exceptions, every opponent of the treaty voices his advocacy for a league of nations. But you are hard to please. You desire to write the treaty yourself, and talk of amending it as you would amend a public-building bill to have erected a post-office building in some little village in your State.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in his very excellent speech to-day incorporated some expressions showing the long formed and settled convictions of the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I shall not reiterate those quotations. However, on another occasion, some time after he voiced those sentiments, speaking on a commencement occasion at Union College, trying to mold the young minds of that institution along right paths, he very eloquently and wisely said:

> If a nation fulfills strictly all its international obligations and seeks no conquests and has no desire to wrong any other nation, great or small, the danger of war can come only through aggression of others, and that aggression will not be made if it is known that the peace-loving nation is able and ready to repel it. The first step, then, toward the maintenance of peace is for each nation to maintain its peace with the rest of the world by its own honorable and right conduct and by such organization and preparation as will enable it to defend its peace.
> What can we do in the larger sense toward securing and maintaining the peace of the world? This is a much more difficult question, but turn it back and forth as we may there is no escape from the proposition that the peace of the world can only be maintained as the peace and order of a single community are maintained, as the peace of a single nation is maintained—by the force which united nations are willing to put behind the peace and order of the world. Nations must unite as men unite in order to preserve peace and order. The great nations must be so united as to be able to say to any single country, "You must not go to war"; and they can only say that effectively when the country desiring war knows that the force which the united nations place behind peace is irresistible. We have done something in advancing the settlement by arbitration of many minor questions which in former times led to wars and reprisals, although the points of difference were essentially insignificant, but as human nature is at present constituted and the world is at present managed there are certain questions which no nation would submit voluntarily to the arbitration of any tribunal, and the attempt to bring such questions within the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal not only fails in its purpose but discredits arbitration and the treatics by which the impossible is attempted. In differences between individuals the decision of the court is final, because in the last resort the entire force of the community is behind the court decision. In differences between nations which go beyond the limited range of arbitrable questions peace can only be maintained by putting behind it the force of united nations determined to uphold it and to prevent war. No one is more conscious than I of the enormous difficulties which beset such a solution or such a scheme, but I am certain that it is in this direction alone that we can find hope for the maintenance of the world's peace and the avoidance of needless wars. Even if we could establish such a union of nations, there might be some wars which could not be avoided, but there are certainly many which might be prevented.
> It might be easily said that this idea, which is not a new one, is impracticable; but it is better than the idea that war can be stopped by language, by speechmaking, by vain agreements, which no one would carry out when the stress came, by denunciations of war and laudations of peace, in which all men agree, for these methods are not only impracticable but impossible and barren of all hope of real result. It may seem Utopian at this moment to suggest a union of civilized nations in order to put a controlling force behind the maintenance of peace and international order; but it is through the aspiration for perfection, through the search for Utopias, that the real advances have been made. At all events, it is along this path that we must travel if we are to attain in any measure to the end we all desire of peace upon earth. It is at least a great, a humane purpose to which, in these days of death and suffering, of misery, and sorrow among so large a portion of mankind, we might well dedicate ourselves. We must begin the work with the clear understanding that our efforts will fail if they are tainted with the thought of personal or political profit or with any idea of self-interest or self-glorification. We may not now succeed, but I believe that in the slow process of the years others who come after us will reach the goal. The effort and the sacrifice which we make will not be in vain when the end in sight is noble, when we are striving to help mankind and lift the heaviest of burdens from suffering humanity.

I have such high respect for the learning and ability and accomplishments of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that, for my part, I would rather accept as his views on this question the one expressed by him after long and deliberate study, unmoved by the exigencies of the hour, uninfluenced by political expediency—the one that he gave in those better days, when reason was supreme and the world was calm and placid and in joint, the one that he would desire to give the young men of this Nation just when they are molding ideals for their future—rather than the one expressed at this time, formed in such a hurry and under such peculiar and abnormal conditions.

Why, sirs, that speech should be taught in the public schools of America. It should be framed and placed on the wall of every educational institution in the land, for its wisdom, truth, and grace of expression. It should be an inspiration to the youth of to-day and should live in history as one of the truly great literary gems of the ages. It should be published, too, alongside of some of the most recent expressions of this distinguished author, that future generations might know that this was an era of political contortionists.

I have stated that the opponents of the league have made unfair arguments and thereby misrepresented and deceived the people touching the league of nations. Let us see. The opponents have said:

First. That Great Britain would dominate it.

Second. Then that the colored people might control it.

Third. Then that the Papacy might control it.

Fourth. That it destroyed our national sovereignty.

Fifth. That it took away our right to regulate our own domestic affairs.

Sixth. That it would abrogate the Monroe doctrine.

Seventh. That it would be impossible for us to withdraw from the league.

Eighth. That it would promote wars instead of peace.

Ninth. That it would compel us to fight Ireland should war come between England and Ireland.

Tenth. That it might affect the rights of labor.

Like the Cornish wreckers, who hung out false lights to allure and deceive the ill-fated mariners, so are these objections raised to allure and deceive the unsuspecting public. There is nothing ambiguous in this covenant. Its terms are plain and simple. Let me discuss briefly the questions raised by the opposition, and I shall do that in order.

THAT GREAT BRITAIN WOULD DOMINATE THE LEAGUE.

It is impossible for Great Britain to dominate the league, for the very reason that in the council—and that is the body that will control the league—she will have but one vote. Great Britain will have no greater power in the council than the United States or any of the other powers that have a voice in the council. The United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, under the terms of the covenant, are at all times to have equal representation on the council, and the other four are to be selected by the assembly.

Great Britain can never dominate the council, because its representation shall never be larger than that of the United States, and in all cases, except matters of procedure and appointment, publishing facts, and making recommendations in a dispute where it can not make a report with any binding effect, the vote of the council must be unanimous.

While it is very true that in the assembly, composed of the representatives of 45 countries, the British colonies of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa shall have a separate vote and separate representation, the assembly is extremely limited in its powers. The only function that it can perform is to regulate its own procedure and appoint its own committees. It is empowered to select the four smaller States to be represented on the council, to approve of enlargements of the council, to confirm the selection of the secretary general, to report upon disputes between nations referred to it by the council or by either of the disputants, to advise the reconsideration by members of the league of treaties that have become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions endangering the peace of the world, and by a two-thirds vote to admit new members to the league. Except, therefore, for some definite powers relating to the organization and membership of the league, its authority in international affairs is confined to making a report in certain disputes and giving some advice to the members. Its action in all matters must be unanimous, and I am quite sure that with countries associated with us in the Pan American Union, whose interests are, in the main, confined to the Western Hemisphere, with their representatives in the assembly, even though the assembly had power, unanimous consent would be prevented from ever obtaining.

The plans for carrying out the objects of the league rest upon the nations composing the council. It is the council that has to formulate plans for reducing armaments, to give advice on restricting the private manufacture of arms and on the means of resisting aggression upon the integrity of a member of the league, to propose steps to give effect to an arbitral award, to formulate plans for a permanent court of justice, to endeavor to effect the settlement of disputes between two members of the league, to conduct inquiries in such cases, to publish facts and recommendations if it fails to reach an effective decision of a dispute, to recommend military contingents in case of an attack upon a member of the league, to make recommendations to prevent hostilities between nonmembers, and finally to supervise the prohibition of trade in white slaves and opium and the administration of international bureaus.

Little reason can be advanced why Panama, with its 32,380 square miles in area and 450,000 population, should have a voice in the assembly, and Australia, with its 2,974,581 square miles and 5,000,000 population, should be excluded. Canada in area is one hundred and eleven times as large as Panama and in population is eighteen times as large. And so I might continue down the list.

And while the four British colonies will have no voice except through Great Britain in the council, why, may I ask, should they be denied a representation in the assembly? For four years and more the people of those colonies sacrificed in every way to win the war and preserve civilization. Unhesitatingly and unselfishly they gave to the cause their bravest and best, and no lessons of heroism are more numerous or inspiring than those that have come down to us from the splendid fighting forces of the British colonies.

While these colonies are still tied to the mother country by a tender thread, they levy their own taxes, raise their own armies, and fight their own battles.

In the league, while the opportunity will not come for them to align themselves on any racial question or question of national sovereignty, their long history would very conclusively show their entire sympathy with us.

But, not satisfied with arousing the prejudice of the people on this "will-o'-the-wisp" argument, they suddenly changed their front and held up as another great menace the possibility of the league being controlled by colored races.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri, in his very eloquent and ingenious speech, voiced with wild acclaim that—

> An examination of the membership of this league will first astonish and then arouse the indignation of every thoughtful man. It will come as a distinct shock that this is a colored league of nations.

Then he quotes at length from the Encyclopædia Britannica, from the World's Almanac, and other publications to show the population and the color and the illiteracy of Liberia, Haiti, Honduras, and scores of other countries in support of his contention. The Senator's design is plain. He desired to prejudice the mind of the people of the South against the league because of the negro population there.

We can not help that Liberia and Haiti and other countries are populated with the Negro race. That the sun has kissed and tanned the countenance of the population of Panama and Ecuador and Honduras is no fault of theirs.

It is beyond the province of man and governments to change the color of races. It was ordained and made possible by One beyond the reach of earthly hands. It was the will of God Almighty that the skins of these people should be dark. But, sirs, they are entitled to live. They know the blessings of peace as well as the arts of war. And if the peace of the world is to be maintained, they must be consulted and must be bound and restrained the same as are the white people of the world. The black man at no place and in no time in history where he and the white man sat at the same council table commanded and dominated. I represent in part a section where the colored people now live in peace and contentment. I come from a State the majority of the population of which is black, and we know the faults as well as the virtues of the negro. We have been able to survive his presence and regulate his actions.

If there be a State that could possibly have any misgivings as to the colored people dominating the league of nations, if it should be effected, it would be the State which, in part, I represent here, and I say to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, notwithstanding his dread of the league falling under the domination of the colored races, the white people of my State are practically unanimous in their advocacy of this league, entertaining not the slightest fear of the alleged dangers that my distinguished friend has pointed out. But this very ingenious and unsound argument having been exhausted, the opponents have appealed to the religious prejudice of the people, saying that the papacy might control.

How great is your desire to sow the seeds of distrust and inflict the poisonous fangs of prejudice! One of the few things that our fathers in the formative period of this country unanimously agreed upon was that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

If we should wait until the peoples of the world become united in religious faith and agreed on the best plan of salvation, the league of nations would be as far away as the sun. We must assume that enlightened people will worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and that as long as salvation is offered to the children of men various doctrines will be taught and different creeds practiced. We can not hope to legislate religion into peoples, nor should we withhold the succoring hand of relief from other peoples simply because either they have not advanced in civilization as far as we or affiliated with us in the same religious faith.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before my colleague passes the last point will he yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask my colleague a question. Has he learned that the negroes in Mississippi have found any way of making the Japanese and the Chinese and the colored races cooperate against the balance of us in the league of nations?

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought maybe not.

Mr. HARRISON. And I never thought that in the United States the argument would ever be used along religious lines in order to arouse the prejudice of the people. One of the few things that our fathers unanimously agreed upon in the Constitutional Convention was that there should be no law enacted by Congress respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof upon the part of our citizens.

In the recent war men of opposite faith measured lances upon the battle fields like men of the same faith, and at the peace conference at Versailles men of the same Christian faith differed with one another quite as often over great questions as with those of different religious faith. Thus it has been throughout time and will be as long as the rivers flow and the sun shines. But, sirs, this Government, our people, should be the last to invoke religious prejudice in the consideration of this great question. It was America, this young giant of the West, that in its early life opened up its rich prairies and wonderful forests and offered them as a playground for the religiously persecuted of every land.

Little did the Pilgrim Fathers think, when two and a half centuries ago, in their little tempest-tossed, weather-beaten bark, they escaped religious persecution and the jaws of the wild Atlantic, and landed at Plymouth Rock, to live in peace and worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, that in this land religious discrimination ever would be invoked. It was here the Hugenot came to find religious freedom. And it was this new land that gave William Penn sweet refuge, an asylum where he and his devoted followers might live in peace and brotherly love.

> Not as the conqueror comes,
> They, the true-hearted came;
> Not with the roll of the stirring drum,
> Nor the trumpet, that sings of fame;
> Nor as the flying come,
> In silence and in fear—
> They shook the depths of the desert gloom
> With their hymns of lofty cheer.

And in this connection it would seem not out of place to quote from a great Methodist, Bishop Frank M. Bristol, who, in a speech in Philadelphia 10 years ago, speaking of the qualities of this good man, said:

> Three hundred and twenty-five years ago William Penn proposed arbitration to the European nations as a substitute for cruel and un-Christian war in the settlement of international misunderstandings. The civilized world is only just catching up with this broad-minded statesman, this philanthropist of the seventeenth century. May that "holy experiment" which sprung from the vision and dream of William Penn, international arbitration, speedily make war as unpopular and as impossible as the good Quakers have always believed it to be un-Christian and inhuman.

Mr. President, I am a Protestant, every member of my family, so far as I know, belongs to the Protestant Church, but I denounce as unfair, unjust, and infamous such arguments against the league of nations.

They say it takes away from us the regulation of our own domestic affairs.

Why, sirs, neither in the first draft nor in the present draft was there anything that might be construed as taking away from us our right to control and regulate our own domestic affairs, and in discussing this assertion I want, at the same time, to draw to your attention the other charge which the opponents make, namely, that it would nullify the Monroe doctrine.

Both of these charges are doubtlessly made on their interpretation of articles 10 and 11. Article 10 reads:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

What language is there that could possibly be construed to mean that the domestic affairs of this country or of the country of any member of the league might be interfered with? Why, sirs, the instrument itself obligates every member of the league to respect the territorial integrity and existing political independence of every other member of the league. If every member of the league respects our political independence and respects our territorial integrity and will live up to that respect by further obligating themselves to assist in preserving that territorial integrity and existing political independence against external aggression, it means that not only will they not interfere with the domestic affairs of other nations, members of the league, but that they stand united in seeing that the right to regulate our domestic affairs is not only respected but that they will all assist in preserving that right against any outside aggression.

Article 11 reads:

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In case any such emergency should arise, the secretary general shall, on the request of any member of the league, forthwith summon a meeting of the council.

Rather than for any excuse to be offered for opposing the league, that the language in either of these articles might be construed to take away from any of the members of the league their right to regulate their own domestic affairs, there was included in article 15 an amendment that is not found in the original draft of the covenant that reads as follows:

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and make no recommendation as to its settlement.

Now, the same interpretation that was placed upon article 11 by the opponents of the league as taking away from us the right to control our own domestic affairs was placed upon article 10 in annulling the Monroe doctrine.

Under no stretch of the imagination could article 10 affect the Monroe doctrine, for the Monroe doctrine is a settled policy of this country, providing that any attempt by a foreign nation to make territorial acquisitions or establish new strategic footholds in the Western Hemisphere, or to secure political advantage in the domestic affairs of American nations, will be looked upon with disfavor by this Government.

If, as under article 10, every nation belonging to the league obligates to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of every other nation, member of the league, as against external aggression, then the foreign nation that would attempt to obtain a foothold on this hemisphere or interfere in the domestic affairs of any nation on this hemisphere would then and there violate the specific terms of article 10.

Article 10, in the plainest language, preserves the Monroe doctrine and makes the Monroe doctrine apply not only to the Western Hemisphere but to every nation that belongs to the league.

But so anxious were our representatives to remove any excuse upon the part of anyone for opposing the league on the ground that it might interfere with the Monroe doctrine, there was included and is now contained in the covenant article 21, that refers exclusively to the Monroe doctrine.

Article 21 reads:

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

But, sirs, it matters not what the covenant might contain, it would seem that it can never please the Senators from Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

While both the Senators, distinguished leaders of the opposition, have been eloquent in their denunciation of the first draft because of the alleged ambiguous language as possibly affecting the Monroe doctrine, when article 21 is included, specifically excluding the Monroe doctrine and removing all doubt as to the effect on it, these Senators become very much aggrieved and apparently offended that this doctrine should become the world's doctrine. Why, only the other day the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, in discussing the Monroe doctrine, employed this language:

It is ours, and it rested, in the first place, upon the broad principle of self-preservation. That is the bottom of the Monroe doctrine. It is all ours; and now it is carried into this league of nations. It is already interpreted by England, although it is wholly our affair, and it is to be determined in the future by the league of nations.

Mr. President, any question which arises in regard to the Monroe doctrine, in my judgment, should be decided by only one power, and that is the power that has declared, interpreted, and maintained it—the United States.

* * * * * * *

And a few days later the Senator from Pennsylvania said:

We, the United States, can not answer anyone else in respect of it. We use it when, as, and to the extent we need it. There can be no limitation upon it except our requirements, our will, and our force of arms. Whatever security we may need within its purview it must give if we ask it.

But if we embody this provision in the league, the Monroe doctrine will cease to be a policy, and it will become in truth a formal agreement.

The distinguished Senators are like the old woman's snake—

That winded in and winded out
And left the people all in doubt
Whether the snake that made the track
Was coming in or going back.

But it is said that the league will promote wars instead of peace.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before we leave the point the Senator has just discussed, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts makes his chief objection on the ground of inaccurate definition of the Monroe doctrine. The treaty mentions the Monroe doctrine eo nomine; in other words, by express name, but it says "regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine." Suppose that I said that a bald-headed man like the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] should have a right to live upon the shore; do you reckon anybody would quarrel about whether the definition was obscure or not, provided I mentioned the name of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think anyone except the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Pennsylvania will raise the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or perhaps his junior colleague; in other words, if I inaccurately described the Senator from Massachusetts as being bald-headed or the Representative from Alabama sitting near as not being bald-headed, if I name either one of them expressly and state that they are exempt from the operations of this treaty, I rather imagine that if the Senator and I should construe a private contract as lawyers or as individual Senators, we would agree that they were excluded, anyhow, whether the description was a misdescription or a right description.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator thoroughly. But the Senator from Pennsylvania says that this will promote war. It would seem remarkably strange that the representatives from the very enlightened countries that met at Versailles, representatives chosen because of their peculiar fitness and their wisdom to do this work, should have patched up, after so long a time, something that would promote war rather than promote peace. It will not promote war. Everything possible has been done to prevent war and make for the peace of the world. Why, sirs, for the last decade the policy of the Senate has been to enter into treaties with nations when disputes arose, which would put off the settlement of them, give cooling time, an opportunity to come together, so that differences would not be settled in the heat of passion.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech stated that the league will legalize wars. But, sirs, is it not remarkably strange that the representatives of these 23 countries, who for months worked so assiduously to perfect this plan, representing countries that were sick and tired and exhausted from wars, countries the people of which yearned and hoped and prayed for peace, a long and lasting peace, should have written and perfected this plan, that although the purposes of which, as expressed in the preamble, are—

In order to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another—would do just the opposite and attempt to devise a plan that instead of doing these things would breed and promote wars?

Why, sirs, the representatives of those countries, while, perhaps, not as able and as well versed in statecraft as those of the opposition in this Chamber, were at least chosen by their respective governments because of their experience and ability and qualities of statesmanship.

No one can read the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania without concluding that he intended to have the country believe that this covenant of a league of nations really made wars more probable than less frequent. No one has ever contended that this plan will guarantee the peace of the world and absolutely prevent future wars. That is impossible, but the whole policy of this country in its international affairs for the last decade has been to arbitrate our differences and to fix a limit of time if these differences were not settled before a war can ensue. This country, within the last decade, entered into about 30 treaties, agreeing to arbitrate our differences and not to go to war against each other under any circumstances until at least one year had elapsed.

That policy was based on the very sensible view that if nations take time and be given an opportunity to deliberate over their differences, an amicable settlement is more likely than if in the heat and turmoil of the hour those differences are attempted to be settled.

If a similar policy could have been invoked and similar procedure followed when the Archduke of Austria was assassinated, this war might have been prevented; but, be that as it may, this we do know and know full well that if the civilized nations of the world agree, by solemn covenant, upon international law, and that they will respect the territorial integrity and political independence of every other nation against external aggression, and agree to join forces with every other nation to see that the territorial integrity and political independence of every other nation is preserved against external aggression, and those nations live up to that agreement, then the cancer of war has been removed.

But, if some difference should arise and, by the terms of the covenant, as it is written, this difference is either sent to the council for investigation and recommendation or to the court of arbitration for award, which delays the controversy and gives opportunity for a cooling period and rational reasoning, it will lessen wars. And when you, under the terms of the instrument, provide, as embodied in this instrument, that when these differences arise and the dispute has gone to the council for investigation or to the court of arbitration for award, that the disputant nation will not go to war until at least three months after the award or recommendation has been made, and not even then, as against that nation that agrees to the recommendation or to the award, you continue to lessen wars.

And, sirs, when that culprit nation that cares not for its obligations, desirous of disregarding the covenant, violates it, it will know that, then and there, the civilized nations of the world belonging to the league will inaugurate a common policy by inflicting a sure punishment on it, and it will think a long time before it takes the step.

In this day of close and intimate relationship, when oceans have been turned into fords and foreign countries made our near neighbors, when it is only a 16-hour hop across the Atlantic, when transportation has been revolutionized and nations can not exist without intercourse one with the other, they can not afford to be divorced from the rest of the world. There is hardly a country to-day that, if it were ostracized from every other nation, its people prohibited from every intercourse with the people of other countries, its trade and commerce stopped, all communication divorced, could live very long.

But, sirs, if these economic powers that are lodged in the covenant to be exercised by the members of the league if necessary do not bring about the desired result and sufficient punishment for the culprit nation, then, in the interest of civilization and humanity and peace, we should be willing, as the foremost nation to-day in the world, to contribute our quota in soldiers, in sailors, and in money toward punishing the culprit nation.

And with that situation staring a nation in the face, I care not how strong its desire may be to go to war and to violate its pledges, it will think a long time before it makes the leap.

It is, sirs, because of this united effort, this common policy, this great strength that would come from these united nations, that wars will be lessened and the peace of the world insured.

Whatever doubt may have been entertained with regard to the first draft of the covenant touching our right to withdraw at any time is removed by the express terms in the treaty. Article 1 gives to each member the right to withdraw after two years' notice, provided it has fulfilled its obligations; and it would seem to me that if the great dangers pointed out by the distinguished opponents of the league are really ominous, that rather than see this country again thrown into the caldron of war, rather than see our sons again torn away from the arms of their mothers, rather than see the hand of taxation again placed upon the stooped and burdened shoulders of the people, rather than see a period of unrest again taking hold of the world, they would vote for this treaty and at least give this league of nations a trial.

And, sirs, if you really desire to go before the people on the issue of whether or not there shall be a league of nations, and the United States shall meet its responsibility in maintaining the peace of the world, write into your next platform, commit your candidate for President on the proposition that if he and a Republican Congress are elected, they will, under the terms of the treaty, serve immediate notice upon the league of the intention of the United States to withdraw from it.

There is not a Republican leader here—there is not a candidate to-day for the Republican presidential nomination, who would now commit himself to such a course as that; and if you do, you will hear the voice of the people, Republican hopes will be forever shattered, and your party ignominiously defeated.

But that is not in keeping with what the Senator from New Hampshire said yesterday. He is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. Let us see what he said. He wants to throw the whole treaty out of the window. Ah! He forgets the condition of the poverty-stricken people of Belgium. He forgets the conditions over the country in Europe. He forgets the just reparation and retribution that is offered, within the covers of that treaty, to those people. He just wants to throw the whole thing out of the window.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. MOSES. I know the Senator is surprised. I was surprised when I read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I was not a bit surprised.

Mr. HARRISON. Ah, sirs, you have tried to arouse the Irish of the Nation into believing that if the league of nations is adopted Ireland's hope for self-determination is gone. You have tried to arouse their prejudice by going so far as to say that if the league is adopted and Ireland should become engaged in war with England, that we are bound to go to the rescue of England and fight Ireland. The same argument has been made touching Korea and Japan. Ah, sirs, we know that Ireland is a part of Great Britain, and that there is nothing in the covenant that binds its members to interfere in the domestic affairs of any member of the league. On the other hand, it specifically provides, as in article 15, that we shall not interfere. It is very true that under article 11 "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any members of the league or not, is declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of the nation."

There is nothing in that language that could be construed as making it obligatory upon the United States to interfere in any war between Ireland and England. On the contrary, while such domestic trouble might be a matter of concern to the league, it can only take such action that might be deemed wise and effectual to make for peace or "safeguard the peace of nations." In other words, if there should come a war between Ireland and England, there is nothing in the covenant that would prevent the United States from bringing to bear every influence that might safeguard the peace of that nation. There is nothing in the terms of the treaty that says that we should side with England in that controversy; we could side with Ireland just as well and extend our good offices on the side of Ireland just the same as we could on the side of England.

But, it is expressly understood that, while we may tender our good offices to bring peace among these warring people, if a war should arise, we could not go to war in that event either on the side of Ireland or on the side of England. The same facts touching that illustration were applied to war between Korea and Japan. In that connection, may I take a case closer to our own doors?

The Philippine Islands are under our control, and there are many peoples in other countries who believe that the United States Government should grant to the Philippines her independence and allow her to set up a separate republic of her own. I am one of those in this country who share in that belief. But, sirs, under the terms of the covenant, if in the future the Filipino should rise and make war on the United States, neither England, under the terms of the covenant, nor Japan, nor any other member of the league, could come to the rescue of either the Philippines or the United States. It would be a war among ourselves, and the only concern that the league might feel about it and action they might take regarding it would be under article 11 wherein it is provided that "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any members of the league or not, is a matter of concern to the whole league."

Of course, it is a matter of concern to the whole league and every member of the league, because the very purpose of it is to maintain peace throughout the world, but under its terms the only thing that the other members of the league could do under that article would be to offer their kind offices to effect some settlement of our differences that might be pleasing to both the Filipino and our own people. Does it make for war or make for peace when we expressly state that any war or threat of war is a matter of concern to the league? Is it supposed that we are to sit idly by and when a war of any kind arises we are not to exert any influence to effect a peaceable settlement among the parties to the dispute?

By giving the matter some concern it does not mean that we are going to get into the war; it does not mean that any party to the dispute must accept our friendly advice or suggestions, but the purposes are good, and while they may not always bring about peace, they certainly can not make the matter worse and bring about war.

Ah, sirs, there is not an opponent of the league, there is not a true American in the United States to-day, who would be in favor of declaring war on England simply because Ireland and England have not been able to adjust their differences and England give to Ireland the right of self-determination. No Senator here feels a more kindly interest and sincere sympathy for Ireland in her fight and her persistence for self-determination than I. I am very much of the opinion that one of the blackest pages in the history of England is her treatment of Ireland, but, sirs, while that is my own individual view, and I am willing to vote for resolutions expressing the sympathy of the United States Senate and of the American people for Ireland, I am not willing for the United States to make a common war against England in order to obtain for Ireland self-determination. And he who to-day holds Ireland in higher respect and in greater esteem than his own blessed United States ought to move to Ireland and assist those good people to settle their problem rather than embroil us in their controversy.

It is said that the covenant "affects the rights of labor."

It is really amusing when we scan this debate to see who are the ones that advance that argument and who are the Senators so solicitous about the welfare of the laboring man.

I want to read from the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

> Read in the light of the provision of article 21, which requires that the high contracting parties shall make provision through the instrumentality of the league "to secure and maintain * * * equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league," the question arises as to whether or not it is the intent of these provisions to put the labor of all countries upon an equality; and if this be the intent and purpose of the document, then the labor of this country may well consider, inasmuch as France has already given notice that it will be impossible for French labor to be put on an equality with American labor in hours of work, whether American is to be brought to the level of French labor in this regard, in order that there may be equitable treatment of the commerce of the two countries.

And now I read from the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]:

> The conditions of labor in this country are better, I believe, than in any other part of the world, and it may be possible that labor in this country will run the risk of an attempt to pull down the standards which prevail here.

I could go further and read from other distinguished Senators of the opposition. Suffice it to say that practically all of them base part at least of their opposition to the covenant of peace on its alleged inattention to and lack of sympathy for the welfare of the laboring man.

Ah, sirs, when did these distinguished Senators become so much interested in the welfare of labor? What is there in their public records to disclose to labor their interest in it or sympathy for its welfare?

Here is what the covenant says about labor, and labor throughout this country will not be misled by the seductive arguments of the opposition:

> The members of the league will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose will establish and maintain the necessary international organizations.

I wonder, sirs, if the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Pennsylvania had been chairman of the American delegation at Versailles, either of them would have invited Samuel Gompers, the head of the American Federation of Labor, to attend and remain there for consultation as to the welfare of the working people? Does anyone imagine that if either of these distinguished gentlemen had been permitted to write the covenant that one word looking to the welfare of the working people of the country would have been incorporated in it? Ah, sirs, already has this seductive argument been exploded, because there is not a labor organization in the United States to-day that has not practically voted unanimously indorsing the league of nations and beseeching you to ratify this treaty. The laboring man of this country will no more be misled by your seductive arguments touching labor than will the white people of the South by the arguments touching the domination of the league by the colored man or the Protestant Christian people of the world by the alarmist assertions touching its domination by the papacy. They know that the arguments are employed merely to attract the unwary, the unsuspecting, and the innocent; that they are mere tubs thrown out upon the waters to attract the whale, so that the miserable and leaky canoe of opposition may float serenely and successfully to shore.

You may place your arguments wherever you will and with all the artistic and ingenious touch of a master, but, sirs, for the most part and in the most instances, your real opposition to this peace treaty arises out of two facts. One is that Woodrow Wilson had a part and a hand in making it; the other is because of articles 8 and 9 of the covenant.

The Republican Party has ever stood for protecting the special interests of America; its policy since its creation has been through a high protective and exorbitant tariff to enrich a few at the expense of the many. It has made no bones about it. It did it under the guise of helping labor, but the facts would not down, and it has been conclusively shown that the processes only robbed the many for the enriching of a few.

It was the high-handed methods of the leaders of the Republican Party in desiring to rob the people in that process to too great an extent that finally drove it from power and caused a breach even within its own ranks. Men who have stood by such a nefarious doctrine as that are very likely to regret very much to see industries in their States that have grown fat and prosperous through the manufacture of munitions of war suddenly thrown out of commission. Millions of dollars in the last decade have flowed into the pockets of the munition makers and manufacturers of armaments in Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts. I might name other States that have profited in less degree.

Article 8 says:

> The members of the league recognize that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations.

Further it says:

> The members of the league agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections.

And further:

> The members of the league undertake to interchange full and frank information as to the scale of their armaments, their military and naval programs, and the condition of such of their industries as are adapted to warlike purposes.

And while it is very true that the council shall formulate plans for the consideration and action of the several Governments touching the reduction of armaments, these plans must be reconsidered and revised at least every 10 years; and while there is nothing in the article that would destroy the right of Congress to raise armies and provide for them, it does limit the power of each nation to increase its armaments without the consent of the council when once the plans formulated by the council are adopted by the nation.

It is that article that is opposed by the munition makers and manufacturers of armaments throughout this country.

It is natural, therefore, that these men should bring to bear every influence possible upon their chosen representatives to see that these interests are protected. It was amusing to see the gallant fight of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania the other night when the Army bill was before the Senate for consideration. The distinguished Senator advocated an amendment to appropriate out of the Federal Treasury $1,600,000 for a munitions plant in his State, in order that the operation of the plant might continue. Do you think that those who owned that plant would be desirous of seeing article 8 incorporated into this treaty?

Let me read some excerpts from the speech that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania made on that occasion:

> It is one of the oldest establishments or instrumentalities in our national defense. It was founded more than 100 years ago and has been the nucleus from which all the arsenals of the country, both permanent and temporary, have sprung. There is a settlement of working men and women residing at Frankford whose fathers and grandfathers worked there before them and who have acquired their own homes. They are an institution.
> I think, Mr. President, that we all recognize that these great institutions and instrumentalities of war are not profit-making concerns. We build battleships that never engage in naval conflict; we build great guns that never fire a shot at an enemy; we manufacture powder that deteriorates and is never utilized.

When I was a boy I became such an expert fisherman that I could not only, in watching the float on my line, tell when I had a bite, but from the way the fish nibbled and struck I could tell what species of fish had my hook.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, apropos of the last statement of the Senator, it might not be inappropriate to refer to the last reported political letter or missive of the late Theodore Roosevelt to the chairman of the Republican national committee. I think this was about the time that the reported split in the Republican senatorial ranks was a matter of so much interest to Democrats. Mr. Roosevelt sent this letter—and I hold a lithographic autograph copy in my hands—which no doubt had something to do with the result to which the Senator from Mississippi has drawn attention. It is very short, but very significant:

Hays: See him. He must go to Washington for 10 days and see Senate and House. Prevent split on domestic policies.

Mr. HARRISON. Who was that that went down?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Hays, I suppose, they were talking about.

Mr. THOMAS. No; this is directed to Chairman Hays, to "see him."

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will bet he saw him.

Mr. THOMAS. Who "him" is, is an unfolded mystery up to this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Sirs, these big munition makers—these men who have grown rich at the expense of the many; these men who desire to see competition among the nations of the world in the building of a gigantic Navy, in the maintenance of a large standing Army, in fortifying our every coast—can not be expected to advocate article 8. It is natural to suppose that they are against any plan that will prevent the competition among the nations of the world in their mad race for naval and military supremacy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I am quite as much devoted to the cause of a liberal tariff as any other Democrat, and I heartily share in the Senator's sentiments on the general proposition of a protective tariff. But I am compelled, with regard to the instance to which he has just referred, to remind him that the subject under discussion was the Frankford Arsenal, which belongs to the Government of the United States and with which no munitions maker has had anything to do. The question which was presented by the Knox amendment there was one which related to the preservation of a very important Government institution which had around it a very valuable organization of skilled workmen, the dispersal of which would in all probability follow from the small appropriation which the House fixed. A delegation composed of representatives of heads of families and skilled workmen came before the Committee on Military Affairs to protest against the small appropriation appearing in the military appropriation bill, not because it might not be sufficient to supply the present needs of the Army but because it meant the disorganization of an integral community of skilled workmen the preservation of which seemed to the committee to be necessary. Personally, therefore, I supported it and voted, as well as the Senator from Pennsylvania, for the increased appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I recall. I happened to be one who voted against it. I voted against it because the War Department stated that there were 1,700,000,000 rounds of ammunition already on hand and that $150,000 was quite sufficient, and that they need only 1,700,000,000 rounds.

If I interpret correctly the wishes of the American people, they prefer, if these nations of the world continue to build battleships, increase the supply of their armaments and munitions, and enlarge their standing armies, to see that we maintain a reasonable increase with them, that we might protect ourselves in the event of possible war; but I very much believe that they very much prefer to see this competition removed, this heavy burden lifted from their shoulders, and some plan, such as is revealed in the league of nations, adopted, that this useless expenditure of money and wild competition may cease.

One of the greatest incentives to war is to clothe a nation with the implements of warfare. When soldiers are trained to fight, when the weapons of warfare are at hand, when every other war material is ready for use, war is most likely. It was the great German military machine, organized, equipped, ready, only waiting for the command to be given, and the great Krupps factory plants casting their shadows over Germany that encouraged and precipitated the war. Long ago every State in the American Union realized that the civilization and peace of society was threatened when individuals were allowed by law to carry weapons of death. Consequently to-day there is not a State in the Union where the carrying, in whole or in part, of concealed or dangerous weapons is not prohibited by law. If such laws against individuals upon the part of States be for the betterment of civilization and the peace of society, then why is it not in the interest of civilization and the peace of the world that nations be restrained in the manufacture and carrying of concealed weapons, in whole or in part, if you please, those dangerous weapons of warfare that defy peace and mean destruction?

Senators, you are leaders of a great and historic party. Men and women are enlisted under the folds of your banner who are as patriotic and as loyal as can be found in the world. You represent constituencies that have given their bravest and best in the cause of democracy and shed undying glory upon this Nation. Do not think yourselves wiser than your masters; do not think that the wisdom of the Republican Party is lodged in your membership. The thousands of men and women throughout this country who have never voted anything but the Republican ticket, who cherish its history and revere its principles, believe that this treaty should be ratified.

The country has read with approval and appreciation the utterances of ex-President Taft, Mr. Wickersham, and a host of other loyal and patriotic Republican leaders. They have been a great force in bringing to this Senate and giving to suffering people this ray of hope, this embodiment of good will and lasting peace among mankind. As a member of the other body, I heard, amid the applause of his colleagues and the approval of the country, a speech made by the then leader of your party in the House. He is a great American, a wise legislator, a safe counselor; and while a partisan Republican, he places country above party, the welfare of mankind above partisanship. Let me suggest for your consideration these words of Mr. MANN:

There seems to me to be quite a tendency on the part of many of my fellow Republicans, not only to criticize severely the President of the United States for his part in reference to a league of nations, but to criticize the idea that the United States shall enter into any arrangement which may tend to prevent war in the future.

We come out of this war owing many billions of dollars. We will leave that heritage to our children, very likely to our children's children and perhaps a generation further on. If the only heritage which this generation gives to those who come after it is an indebtedness of billions of dollars for them to pay at least the interest on, and part of the principal, without at the end of the war doing something to prevent future wars, we will not in the future receive the blessing of mankind, but its condemnation.

I am not undertaking to criticize any gentleman who has spoken upon this subject. I am only saying that in my judgment it is desirable, and I think essential, that something shall come out of the war which may tend to prevent future wars, and not merely leave us as the result of the war almost hopelessly in debt.

In these few words, Mr. President, this distinguished Republican voiced the sentiment of the rank and file of his party; he expressed the earnest wish of the American people.

This treaty, sirs, represents the settled thought of the leading statesmen of the world. It is the consummation of untiring labor and patriotic service.

To obtain it the rational thought of unselfish representatives had to combat the greed and avarice of the selfish.

It is the covenant of peace upon which the aspirations of a just, honest, and ambitious people may rest and within the bounds of which happiness and peace will dwell.

Sirs, if you are to defeat it, let me appeal to you to meet the issue in the open. Do not wait until your victim has passed along the broad highway while you lay along the roadside, ambushed, with your stiletto in hand to drive it in its back. Meet it face to face. Do not put yourselves in the attitude of voting reservations that are meaningless or ratify it with a string tied to it—such a string that will strangle it.

It is now a finished structure, the work of artists. Its strong columns bespeak stability, its symmetry and architectural beauty the understanding of nations. One block of stone removed from it might not only affect its beauty but impair its strength. That one may not destroy it, but as the storms of controversy play upon it its foundations may weaken, its strength may diminish and cause it to crumble into ruins.

Sirs, a crawfish has been known to work its way into the great levee system that holds in check the mad waters of the mighty Mississippi, until the river broke through, carrying destruction in its path. A leak no larger in the beginning than a pinhead can sink the mightiest steamer that ever plied the bosom of the deep.

My colleagues may not agree with me, and while I am hoping, sincerely hoping, that it will not come to pass, it is my deliberate judgment—and I base it in part on your actions and the utterances and actions of the chairman of the national Republican campaign committee—that you will be content to further deceive the people by exercising the power that you wield here in placing meaningless reservations upon this treaty. I do not believe that any reservation that you attach to it will amount to a thing. In your heart of hearts you know it would be disastrous to this country and ruinous to your party's hopes to place such reservations in this treaty as would compel a reconsideration of it by all the signatory powers and destroy the hope of mankind for world's peace, but your adroit chairman only last Tuesday sounded the keynote of your campaign against the covenant when he, in an interview, outlined the Republican demand regarding the league.

But, sirs, my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] spoke of the chairman of the national Republican committee a moment ago, a Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays came down here the other day. He talked to the Senators of the opposition, evidently, and he gave out an interview.

In that interview Mr. Hays sets forth your party's position. He does not agree with the distinguished Senators from Idaho and Washington that the Republican Party should come out against any league of nations. On the contrary, if his utterances are to be accepted in their true meaning, he is in favor of a league, but with certain reservations. Let us see what kind of reservations Mr. Hays desires. He says first, "These reservations must safeguard the sovereignty of the United States in every particular."

Mr. Hays knows and every patriotic American knows that there is not an American to-day from the President of the United States down who favors the league of nations who would vote for a covenant that would affect the national sovereignty of the United States, and Mr. Hays knows that if a reservation declared that nothing in the treaty shall be understood to affect the national sovereignty of this country that it would be buncombe, pure and simple, changing the treaty not one iota, but merely in order to deceive the public and attempt to make the people believe that it was the Republican Party that saved the national sovereignty of the United States.

Secondly, he says reservations must be adopted that will "guarantee the Monroe doctrine beyond the shadow of a doubt." What use would there be for a reservation declaring that nothing in the treaty shall be understood as affecting the Monroe doctrine? Why, sirs, it is specifically stated in the covenant that "nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for the securing and maintenance of peace."

Such an amendment would be puerile, and yet Mr. Hays would have the Republican majority here incorporate such a reservation that would not necessitate the treaty going back into conference and would only declare over again what has already been declared in the treaty. It would be another effort merely to deceive the public and have the unsuspecting believe that it was the Republican Party that saved the Monroe doctrine.

He says, further, that the reservations "must either eliminate article 10 entirely or"—get his language here. See how dexterous he is. See the care with which he selects the words in order to deceive the people and bring the Republican leadership into a more compromising position. "Or," says he, "so modify it that Congress shall be morally as well as legally free, after a specified period, to decide when and where and to what extent our soldiers shall be employed."

I have not heard a single opponent of the league since the final draft of the covenant came to us contest the proposition that the league left it to Congress to declare war and left it to Congress to furnish military, naval, and economic aid. So you will note that Mr. Hays does not say that article 10 should be eliminated, but he is willing that "it be modified to the extent that Congress shall be morally as well as legally free, after a specified period, to contest when and where and to what extent our soldiers shall be employed."

Mr. Hays is about the only one who is presumed to have read the covenant who contends that article 10 or any other article in the treaty will compel the United States, without an act of Congress, to say "when and where and to what extent our soldiers shall be employed."

He further says that reservations should be made that will "retain our full control of immigration, tariff, and all other purely domestic policies." What need would there be for such reservation when it is expressly provided in the covenant itself that the league has no power over domestic affairs? It deals only in international questions, and the immigration and the tariff, being purely domestic, are not brought within the scope of the league; and he says, further, that reservations must be made "that will provide full right to withdraw from the league at any time without hindrance or conditions of any kind, upon giving suitable notice."

Surely Mr. Hays has not read the last draft of the covenant or he would have seen that in article 1 it is expressly provided that "any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal."

Now, if the distinguished chairman of the Republican committee would have his reservation made that the United States shall have the right to withdraw from the league even though it had broken some of the obligations that it had agreed to by joining the league as a member, he should say so and let the people know the hypocrisy of his position. But if that be his position, I am quite sure that no patriotic American belonging to the Republican Party shares the same views.

To read such strictures reminds one of the fly that perched once upon the dome of St. Paul's—observing some slight defect in the gilded covering of that magnificent structure, immediately flew away and commenced to pour into the ears of the neighboring flies its criticisms of the glorious work of Sir Christopher Wren.

Sirs, the treaty takes care of and provides against every danger embodied in the suggestions in that interview, and for the Congress to include a single one of them would be merely superfluous, a reiteration of what already appears in the treaty; but it is the same thing, a very crude piece of Republican camouflage, intended to create in the minds of the people of this country the impression that it is the Republican Party standing for the national sovereignty of this Nation, the regulation of its own domestic affairs, and for the continuation of the Monroe doctrine.

Sirs, if you exercise the power that you hold to support that suggestion and incorporate these reservations, then let me warn you now not to have the audacity to go before the people next year and claim it as a Republican achievement. But I am quite sure that is what you will do.

When we reflect on the sorrows and cost incident to this war and the sleeping hatred in the German breast, it behooves us to look to the future. If it is now within our power to prevent its recurrence, and we fail, our condemnation will be deserved. Remember that it was only a few years ago, sweeping up from the Caribbean Sea and through the Mexican Gulf, a terrible storm struck Galveston. You will recall how the mad waves ate away millions in property and engulfed hundreds of human lives. Great as was the havoc wrought, the good people of that thriving city to-day understand that it was but a notice to them that the same disaster might recur, even to a greater and more disastrous extent. They learned a lesson from their experience and laid their plans for future protection. To-day there is a high sea wall protecting that progressive city, insuring unto its industries protection and unto its citizens safety against the mad and angry waves that ofttimes sweep and beat relentlessly against it.

No cyclone ever visited a community, I care not how remote it might be from the busy life of the city, without influencing those whom it left behind to construct storm pits and other safe places for their future safety. Let us take lessons from the experience of the past and, having gone through this hellish war, hope that Isaiah's prophecy to the Israelites will come true when he said: "And He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

I appeal to you, sirs, to come out from that spell of partisanship. Help us ratify this treaty. Give to the people the peace that they desire. Let it not be said of this historic body that it is the cause of withholding from the poor and bleeding and prostrate people of Belgium, France, Serbia, and other countries the just retribution that is carried within its covers. Let it not be said that it was this body that sounded the bugle for the American forces to again be mobilized, to march again over the war-torn battle fields of Europe. Let it not be said that it was this body that granted postponement for the trial of the Kaiser and a stay of execution for his diabolical and cruel and inhuman acts.

Sirs, if you defeat this treaty the responsibility will be upon your shoulders. You will throw a pall of anxiety and spread a blanket of sadness over the world. You will by your action withhold the hand of succor that is ready to be extended to the poverty-stricken people of Europe. You will encourage Bolshevism and crush the poor struggling people of little nations who are making such gallant fights for stable and organized governments. You will fill the homes of this land with sorrow. You will "break the heart of the world."

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I had given notice that to-day I would address the Senate on the subject of the league of nations; but the hour is late, Senators are fatigued, and I have decided to wait until to-morrow. At some convenient time to-morrow I shall address the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to call the attention of some of the Senators on the floor——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion.

Mr. CURTIS. It is so late that if we are to have an executive session we must have it now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 22, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 21, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of good, right, truth, justice, liberty, righteousness, look with compassion, we beseech Thee, upon this weary, warring world, and lead us to peace and happiness.

Deliver us from race prejudice, hate, and strife, that Thy will may be done in all the world and righteousness become the leading passion of all men; that Thy kingdom may indeed come and bring to all good will. In the name of Christ, our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 19, 1919, was read and approved.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. McARTHUR. I will.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had on July 19, 1919, approved joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Tao Hung Chang and Zeng Tze Wong, citizens of China; and

H. R. 7343. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

RATIFICATION AND CONFIRMATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House joint resolution 147.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 147——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, did not the gentleman from Oregon make the point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. He withdrew the point of no quorum. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920.

Resolved, etc., That appropriations for the service of the fiscal year 1920, contained in the Agricultural, Army, District of Columbia, Navy, and sundry civil appropriations acts, and the "third deficiency appropriation act, fiscal year 1919," shall be available from and including July 1, 1919, for the purposes respectively provided in the said appropriations for the service of the said fiscal year. And all obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of such appropriations in the aforesaid acts as approved are ratified and confirmed from and including July 1, 1919.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa the necessity for this resolution.

Mr. GOOD. The necessity for this resolution is this: The general deficiency bill was approved on July 11. It carries a great many items for the present fiscal year. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was approved on July 11; the Army bill was approved on July 11; the Navy bill was approved on July 11; and the sundry civil bill was approved on July 19. Now, under the ruling of the Controller of the Treasury an appropriation bill is not retroactive, and it is necessary to pass a resolution through both Houses of Congress that will provide that the obligations incurred, that are authorized in those various bills and incurred before they were approved, should be ratified, and the employment of clerks employed from June 30 to July 11, and to July 19 in the case of the sundry civil bill, should be ratified by resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman agree with the opinion of the Comptroller? What is it you call him now, anyway?

Mr. GOOD. Controller of the Treasury, Judge Warwick.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. "Controller," and not "Comptroller"?

Mr. GOOD. Yes, sir. I have not examined his opinion, but I only know it is creating a great deal of embarrassment in some of the departments. The pay of clerks in some cases, I am told, is being withheld, and that could be obviated by the passage of a resolution. So I have believed it my duty to introduce this resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, as a matter of fact, the real reason for this resolution is that the President was not here to sign this bill before the 1st of July.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a great piece of news.

Mr. WALSH. That is the sum and substance of it, anyway.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a great piece of news you are giving here.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to direct the attention of the House to what I think exists in regard to the Agricultural bill. I understand that the enrolling clerk of the House has a receipt from the White House for the Agricultural bill as it passed both Houses, dated July 1, at 10.50 in the morning; that the President did not veto that bill until the date of the 11th of July, and that the Constitution of the United States provides that he must either sign or return a bill with his veto within 10 days. I maintain that he had no power to veto the bill; that the bill became a law before the date that he vetoed it; and that it is now a law notwithstanding that we passed another bill. We are in the anomalous position of providing for a resolution to make a law in order that the President vetoed at a time when he had no right to veto it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, the 10 days' limit runs from the time the bill is presented to the President, and the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois are entirely out of order and not to the point.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] if he would have had the President here on July 1 when it was his duty and to the interest of the people of the United States for him to be somewhere else on that day?

Mr. WALSH. It seemed to be his duty to be on the high seas on that day.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I was not here when the resolution was read. Is it a continuation resolution?

Mr. GOOD. It is not. The effect of the resolution is to make the appropriations retroactive to the 1st day of July, so that the obligations incurred shall be legal obligations and the clerks employed in the interim shall be paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920.

Resolved, etc., That appropriations for the service of the fiscal year 1920 contained in the Agricultural, Army, District of Columbia, Navy, and sundry civil appropriation acts, and the "third deficiency appropriation act, fiscal year 1919," shall be available from and including July 1, 1919, for the purposes respectively provided in the said appropriations for the service of the said fiscal year. And all obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of such appropriations in the aforesaid acts as approved are ratified and confirmed from and including July 1, 1919.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think I have explained already the real purposes of this resolution, but some Members have come in since that statement was made, and perhaps it would not be out of order to again state the purposes of the resolution. The general deficiency bill, which carries a great many items for this fiscal year, was approved July 11, as was the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the Army appropriation bill, and the Navy appropriation bill. The sundry civil appropriation bill was approved on July 19. The Constitution provides that no money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States except in consequence of an act of Congress. These acts were not approved, four of them, until the 11th of July, and the sundry civil bill until the 19th day of July. Hence the obligations made between the 30th day of June and the 11th day of July, so far as they relate to the deficiency bill, the District of Columbia bill, and the Army and Navy bills, and between the 30th day of June and the 19th day of July, so far as they relate to the sundry civil bill, are without authority of law, and in order to permit the payment of clerk hire and the enforcement of these contracts it is necessary to adopt a resolution ratifying these acts. I therefore move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very short address made by Col. Frank Harris, a very distinguished citizen of my State, to the returning soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address of Col. Harris, of his State, relative to the returning soldiers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the address referred to:

MR. HARRIS'S WELCOME TO OCALA'S HOME-COMING SOLDIERS.

Brave soldier boys, as a veteran of the war between the States—and take it from me their deeds of fortitude and valor have rarely been equaled and never surpassed—speaking for them I wish to say to you on this occasion that there are no words in our language strong enough nor beautiful enough for me to express our gladness in having you return in safety to your homes, as there were no words adequate enough for the 100 per cent American to express his admiration of you when you donned a uniform and at the call of your country proudly responded, "Here!" and with handkerchiefs waving and bands playing patriotically and triumphantly marched away.

You have written the proudest and most enduring chapter in the history of the world and in the biggest and brightest letters.

Like the restless tides of the ocean years have come and gone and in their ceaseless march have buried cities of long ago beneath the dust of ages. The ascent has been ever upward, all struggling for a higher civilization.

Greece and Rome appeared upon the map in the world's resistless sweep and both did their part in efforts to make the world better and in doing so performed many brilliant and cheering deeds, but brave and brilliant as they were they do not compare with the heroic part you played because they were not animated nor actuated by the same motives nor inspired by ideals so exalted.

You did not enter upon the theater of war for territorial expansion and aggrandizement nor for world dominion, but for the sole and lofty purpose of making the world a safe place for human habitation and the home a hallowed sanctuary.

In the performance of that duty your splendid courage and your sublime sacrifices will live forever in song and story.

When we witnessed your going, saw you bid farewell to loved ones and friends; beheld your fathers, mothers, sisters, and sweethearts press you to their bosoms in a fond and affectionate embrace, in bidding you farewell we could not but behold the suppressed feelings that were tearing out their very heartstrings, yet bravely bade you go, saying to you: "Do or die." It was then that our whole being swelled with patriotic emotions and we reverently gave thanks that we were born under institutions that were capable of bearing such a priceless fruitage.

We watched you step by step; we heard your proud and martial tread; we saw you enter the training camps and finally saw you cross the treacherous seas; silently and with quivering hearts we saw you enter the dark and gloomy shadows of the Argonne Forest, and when your intrepid commander shouted back to his superior officer of the allied forces that the American khaki-clad soldier knew no such word as retreat; saw you unawed by the roar of cannon and face unflinchingly the deadly missiles of a hitherto victorious enemy, and with a mighty, unfaltering and overwhelming effort turn the tide of battle, we reverently gave thanks to high heaven for giving us boys with blood so rich and rare, nerves so like triple steel, and courage so dauntless.

You by your bravery have given the world a new meaning of liberty born of democracy, and in a baptism of blood you have added increased luster to the Stars and Stripes and have made it a thing of adoration to those everywhere who are yearning for the freedom it symbolizes.

And what shall we say of those who shall never come back—those who made the supreme sacrifice; those who laid down their young lives that you and I might live and enjoy the blessings of peace and live tranquilly and happily, undisturbed by the ambition of heartless rulers.

In the language of John Oxenham in "All's Well":

They died that we might live—
Hail! and farewell!
All honor give
To those who nobly striving, nobly fell,
That we might live!

That we might live they died;
Hail! and farewell!
Their courage tried
By every mean device of treacherous hate,
Like kings they died.

Eternal honor give—
Hail! and farewell
To those who died,
In that full splendor of heroic pride,
That we might live!

We know that a grave has been carved in the hearts of parents, kindred, and sweethearts that no amount of tears will fill nor length of time assauge.

In the language of Lincoln at Gettysburg, may we not ask: "Shall this Nation not resolve that they shall not have died in vain?"

If not so, the immortal supplication of Patrick Henry: "God forbid."

Unless a league of nations is formed and is made strong enough so that the gradual disarmament of nations shall follow, wars with their terrible toll of death and lamentations and mourning will continue.

Let every one of us firmly resolve in every way to give encouragement and aid to the President and those engaged with him in their momentous and arduous task.

Let us girt the heavens in glittering letters of light with the sweet benediction that was heralded from Gallilee: "Peace on earth; good will to men."

For the loved ones who have made the supreme sacrifice and for those who have waited in vain for their coming, we would imprint in the hearts of those who are to come after us the sublime lesson that they died to make the world blossom with flowers and fruitage of a higher civilization; we would make that page so golden that its incense and fragrance shall never wither away, but like the effulgence that reaches to us from Calvary shall bloom perennially through the ages.

We find Europe torn and bleeding; we must heal her wounds; we must minister to her needs. We must feed her hungry, clothe her naked, and restore her sick.

What is the picture she presents?

Where poppies bloom in Flanders field is told by a Belgian hospital worker after two years' service in France upon his revisiting his home:

"Holes and holes and mud. Since the soldiers have left even the birds have deserted the solitary fields. Silence, gloom, devastation, and abandonment show us death in the upturned ground; death in the turbid, yellowish flood and death in the broken stones themselves—so strange and tragical is their shape."

We shall not be worthy of our position as American citizens unless we shall feel a deeper love for the country and its institutions which they gave their lives to save and a greater responsibility for the trust imposed on us that we may make and keep our country and her benign institutions every worthy of their sacrifice.

For the youth they gave and the blood they gave,
We must render back the due;
For every marked or nameless grave
On the steel-torn Flanders way
We who are whole of body and soul
We have a debt to pay.

For the youth they gave and the blood they gave,
For the strength that was our stay,
For every marked or nameless grave
We must pay with a service true;
Till the scales stand straight with even weight
And the world is a world made new.

* * * * * * *

Out of the twilight of the past
We move to a diviner light,
For nothing that is wrong can last;
Nothing's immortal but right.

* * * * * * *

I feel that I can not better conclude these words of welcome than by reciting the following apostrophe entitled "The Return of Our Heroes," sent me by a lady friend in Texas and written for the Fort Worth Record by Miss Annie Taylor:

Here's to America's heroes
And here's to the flag they bear,
Our heart and hand to this stalwart band,
The bravest and best of any land,
And here's to the scars they wear.

Here's to the Nation who gave them
For the sake of a suffering world,
Her stainless name, her deathless fame,
Victory crowneth with loud acclaim,
As the tyrants to death she hurled.

Here's to the hearts who gave them
Life of their life are they,
Yet they bade them to go face the foe
To redeem the world from a cursed woe,
The price with their lives to pay.

And here's (oh, say it softly)
To that still and matchless throng,
Whose bodies sleep where the poppies bloom,
In a distant land, in a stranger's tomb,
Throughout the ages long.

Our flag will enfold them forever
Upheld by an angel guard,
For heaven will hold every heart of gold
That sleeps 'neath a foreign sward.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the first morning after the conclusion of this prohibition discussion, when it is disposed of, and after the reading of the Journal and the cleaning up of the business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Tennessee, Judge MOON, may have permission to address the House for 35 minutes on

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the prohibition enforcement law the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] may have permission to address the House for 35 minutes on postal matters. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I doubt the wisdom of the practice of providing in advance for addresses in this way. I regret it very greatly, but I feel it my duty to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—CLAIM OF MADAME CIGNIER (H. DOC. NO. 156).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State in relation to a claim presented by the Government of France against this Government on account of losses sustained by a French citizen in connection with the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones, which was undertaken by Gen. Horace Porter, formerly American ambassador to France, and, referring to my message of June 4, 1918, concerning this matter, I recommend that an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
21 July, 1919.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon makes the point that there is no quorum present. Obviously there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Edmonds	Kearns	Purnell
Ashbrook	Fairfield	Kettner	Ragsdale
Benson	Fitzgerald	King	Riordan
Britten	Focht	Kreider	Rouse
Browne	Fordney	LaGuardia	Rowan
Caldwell	Freeman	Lee, Ga.	Rowe
Carew	Godwin, N. C.	Lesher	Saunders, Va.
Cleary	Goodall	Lever	Scully
Costello	Gould	Linthicum	Sears
Dale	Greene, Vt.	McClintic	Slemp
Dewalt	Griest	Maher	Smith, N. Y.
Dooling	Hamill	Mason	Taylor, Ark.
Doremus	Hicks	Morin	Tilson
Dupré	Hull, Tenn.	Mudd	Venable
Eagan	Ireland	Neely	Welling
Echols	Jones, Pa.	Platt

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DYER. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection it will be so ordered. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

CORRECTION.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, on page 2894 is printed an amendment which I offered, which should read as follows:

At the end of line 20, on page 23, insert the following:
"But so much of this section which follows the words 'or any part thereof' shall not apply to any room or apartment which is used and occupied as a dwelling and has not been used or employed as a saloon, hotel, boarding house, or store, or as an annex or appurtenance thereto, the intent hereof being that no room or apartment used and occupied exclusively for dwelling purposes by the occupant and his family shall be deemed to come under or within the purview of that part of this section which follows the words 'or any part thereof.'"

As printed in the RECORD the words "is used and occupied as a dwelling and" are omitted. I ask that the RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the amendment the gentleman refers to was sent to the desk in writing, was it not?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes. As I recall it, the words which I have indicated were contained in the amendment as sent to the desk. I have not the copy in my possession.

Mr. MONDELL. When a gentleman sends his amendment to the desk in writing, he ought to abide by it, and the RECORD should not be changed afterwards, at least without the change being presented in writing, so that we may all understand it. The amendment was offered in writing and was voted on. Now, if the gentleman did not present it in writing in the form in which he intended to present it, that is the gentleman's fault. The House voted on an amendment in writing as the gentleman himself sent it up. I do not think the RECORD should be changed by unanimous consent.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May not this have been a typographical error, which I think it was?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman made that error——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not think I did; but, of course, I have not the copy of the amendment before me.

Mr. MONDELL. That side of the House the other day refused to allow the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to amend what was manifestly an inadvertence in offering an amendment. Now, the gentleman wants to change an amendment that was sent up in writing and voted on, and I do not think that change should be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I apprehend the gentleman is mistaken as to the situation. A few words are left out of the amendment as it is printed in the RECORD. The gentleman speaks of my amendment being sent to the desk. I have stated that the error occurred in omitting these words, and I suppose it was in setting up the type in the Government Printing Office. That is the way I presume it came about. It is purely typographical.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has his original amendment, and it is not printed in the RECORD as it was written by him, then it is entirely proper that the RECORD should correspond with the amendment, but the gentleman has not his original amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Of course I have not the original with me now. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has not examined the original, as far as we know.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have not, but I remember the words of it.

Mr. MONDELL. For the present I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas, indefinitely (at the request of Mr. WINGO).

PROHIBITION.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the prohibition bill, H. R. 6810.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does the Speaker get around the positive provision of the rule in section 732:

On days when it shall be in order to move to suspend the rules the Speaker shall, immediately after the approval of the Journal, direct the Clerk to call the bills which have been for three days upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the special rule under which the House has been working suspends all the regular days except Calendar Wednesday. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My only object in making the inquiry is that I do not want the House to get in the habit of dispensing with the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. I think that is one of the best rules ever adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the prohibition bill, H. R. 6810, with Mr. GOOD in the chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he would have any objection to an amendment permitting the delivery of these liquors for medicinal and scientific purposes to officials of the several States. A great many States have independent chemical laboratories conducting experiments on the same line as that done by the department here in Washington.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think that will all be taken care of under Title III. I intend to offer an amendment to that title for that purpose, so as to permit the States or their agents to obtain the alcohol.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact, which, of course, he appreciates, that upon application of the United States attorney the liquors are delivered to some department or agency of the United States Government free of cost. Is there any objection to permitting them to be delivered to some department or agency of the States free of cost, or must they purchase them the same as an individual?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think they should purchase them.

Mr. WALSH. Though the liquor is seized in the States?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. I think so, because these liquors are forfeited to the Federal Government and belong to it just as much as any other property. I think such a provision as that suggested would work more or less discrimination; some States would be favored while others would not.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 5, after the word "Government," insert "or the several States or in the District of Columbia."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, section 28 was incorporated in the bill to carry out the provisions of an act of Congress heretofore passed providing that instead of stores of illegal liquors seized being destroyed or being mandatory to destroy it might be rerectified and converted into industrial alcohol and applied to some legal use. It seems to me that in the extension of this power to any department or the agency of the United States Government we might likewise under the proper care, with the approval of the United States attorney, give this liquor for mechanical, scientific uses to the laboratories and colleges in the States and in the District of Columbia.

My amendment has no other purpose except to extend to the laboratories of all educational institutions the right to procure at little or no cost this particular sort of merchandise that can be used to advantage in their researches in chemical development and laboratory work.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This provision was drawn, as I am informed, by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the exception of the last two lines. The provision which the gentleman seeks to insert will be taken care of in Title III. I have an amendment for that purpose that has likewise been drawn by the revenue department. It seems to me that we had better insert it there. This section is designed to get rid of liquor taken from persons arrested.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says he has a similar amendment that he will offer in Title III. Does not the gentleman think this amendment should be included here so as to preserve the harmony of these two sections?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; because this has no proper relation to that subject. This gets rid of liquor that has been seized from some lawbreaker. It seems to me this should go to the Federal Government and should not be parceled out between the States, because that would give rise to discrimination and favoritism which we ought not to authorize. Under the bill as it reads I believe all the parties provided for in the amendment can get liquor tax free except the States. We will remedy that by putting in an amendment at the proper place that the Collector of Internal Revenue has suggested.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman will agree with me that State colleges should have the benefit of this supply of alcohol which might be used for scientific and mechanical purposes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The State colleges would not want it because this is not pure alcohol. This would be whisky, wine, and beer.

Mr. GARD. But if it can be used after rectification they ought to have the privilege.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is liquor that has been seized because it was being sold or to be sold in violation of law. It is not the alcohol that these institutions care for, it is whisky or other intoxicating beverages.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the debate on this bill some criticism was made as to the enforcement of the law in the State of Virginia. The matter referred to in debate has been made the subject of official investigation, and I think it only fair to the State and the prohibition officers that their review of the matter should be made a part of the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the statement of the prohibition commissioner and the evidence on which it is founded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter referred to.

Mr. HARRISON. It is merely an investigation made by the State of Virginia in respect to the alleged search of women's wardrobes and other things. Here is the official record, which I desire to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in contradiction of statements made on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state if he desires to insert it in the day's proceedings of the House or in the back of the RECORD?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care where it is inserted, so long as it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will make his request that it is to go into the back part of the RECORD in extension of remarks, I shall not object.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. DYER. So that it will not appear in the proceedings of the day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object. We can not have all these prohibition documents printed.

Mr. HARRISON. These are affidavits of the men in charge of the train, of the people whose baggage was alleged to have been searched, and the statement of the prohibition commissioner and of the railroad directors.

Mr. WALSH. They all deny the statements made?

Mr. HARRISON. They say they were not true, and they state what the facts are.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. That the commissioner, his assistants, and all other officers of the United States whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws shall have all the power and protection in the enforcement of this act or any provisions thereof which is conferred by law for the enforcement of existing laws relating to the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors under the law of the United States.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman some questions. Section 29, which has just been read, uses the following language:

That the commissioner, his assistants, and all other officers of the United States whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws shall have all the power and protection in the enforcement of this act—

And so forth. The description of the kind of officers is embodied in the words "whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws." What is meant by that phrase? Does that refer to those who have judicial power alone, or to the process officers, or both, or neither? It seems to me that the language "whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws" is too general where it attempts to describe the class of officers to whom the power is given.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think not. I do not think it could possibly apply to the court.

That the commissioner, his assistants, and all other officers of the United States whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws—would be the class enumerated.

Mr. SMALL. Will the chairman indicate what officers of the United States are included in that language?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The United States attorneys, United States Attorney General, the assistants, the marshals, the deputy marshals.

Mr. SMALL. Then, in the opinion of the chairman, it includes the prosecuting and the process officers of the Department of Justice only?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly; that class of officers that has been enumerated, and no others have been enumerated.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, on page 27, line 12, by inserting after the word "assistants" the words "agents and inspectors."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 27, line 12, after the word "assistants," insert the words "agents and inspectors."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That any person who manufactures intoxicating liquor, or any wholesale or retail druggist or pharmacist who sells liquor in violation of this title, shall for a first offense be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding six months, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one month and not more than five years.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this title, or the provisions of any permit, or making any false record, report, or affidavit for which a special penalty is not prescribed shall be fined for a first offense not more than $500; for a second offense not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than 90 days; for any subsequent offense he shall be fined not less than $500 and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than 3 months and not more than 2 years. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting officer to ascertain whether the defendant has been previously convicted and to plead the prior conviction in the affidavit, information, or indictment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, on page 27, line 22, I move to strike out the word "imprisonment" and insert the word "imprisoned."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 22, after the word "or," strike out the word "imprisonment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "imprisoned."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. And on page 28, line 11, strike out the words "and not" and insert the word "nor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 28, line 11, strike out the words "and not" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the chairman desire to offer a similar amendment to line 2 on page 28?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "and not" in line 2 on page 28 and insert the word "nor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 2, strike out the words "and not" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to call the attention of the committee to the words "wholesale or retail" in line 20. Should not that be stricken out, so that it will leave it "druggist or pharmacist who sells liquor," and so forth?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We deal with the wholesaler and the retailer, but we specify that the retailer must sell through a pharmacist, and a license is issued to the retail druggist, but the license must specify that the pharmacist is authorized to sell.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman thinks this would catch the one as well as the other?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The druggist as well as the pharmacist.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The permit governs that fact; it governs the sale, the method by which the druggist can sell.

Mr. RAKER. My only purpose was to be sure that the provision included the druggist retailer and the pharmacist as well.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it does.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I want to ask the chairman a question in reference to section 30, line 21, after the words "who sells liquor." The term "liquor" in Title II is defined to be "any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids and compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented or not, and by whatever name called, containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume which are potable and capable of being used as a beverage." Now, should there not be inserted in fairness after the word "liquor" the words "as a beverage in violation of this title"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. We expressly except certain industrial articles. We give power to make those and then say that if they are made in accordance with the descriptions and limitations which we specify they are not subject to the provisions of this bill. Consequently it is not necessary to insert those words. We prohibit the sale of all liquors except nonbeverage liquors and expressly provide that nonbeverage liquor may be sold.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The title provides that liquor shall not be sold containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. Now, if the retailer sells this, whether it is to be used as a beverage or not, would he not be guilty?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. If he sells it for beverage purposes he is guilty. But we provide the method by which he can obtain a permit either to manufacture or sell nonbeverage liquor legally. There is no necessity of inserting that at all, and it would simply tend to confusion.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment by inserting the word "intoxicating" before the word "liquor" in line 21, page 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 27, line 21, before the word "liquor" and after the word "sells" insert "intoxicating."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. At the top of page 28 I see it is provided that upon conviction under circumstances recited in that connection they shall be imprisoned "in the penitentiary not less than one month." You do not want the words "in the penitentiary" there.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not think they ought to be there.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in this connection the words "in the penitentiary," so that it will read: "Be imprisoned not less than one month," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 28, line 1, strike out "in the penitentiary."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a like amendment in line 10, which makes it symmetrical.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 28, line 10, strike out the words "in the penitentiary."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, on page 28, line 2, I move to strike out the word "ascertain" and insert the words "seek information."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 28, line 2, strike out the word "ascertain" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seek information."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this says that it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney to ascertain whether the defendant has been previously convicted. It seems to me it places a duty upon the prosecuting officer which may in fact be impossible. All that you can reasonably expect him to do is to seek information as to whether or not there has been a previous violation or a previous conviction.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the thing is to have the information, and unless he ascertains that there were previous convictions how can he convict as charged in the indictment——

Mr. GARD. If he gets the information, let him put it in there. The word "ascertain" may require an impossibility.

Mr. BARKLEY. But he can not find out.

Mr. GARD. The word "ascertain" means to impose a duty which he may not be able to perform. If he seeks information and gets it, that is all we ought to require the prosecuting officer to do. In other words, down in your State if you say it is the duty of the prosecuting officer to ascertain if a man was convicted of burglary it may be impossible to ascertain that, but he might have been convicted, and if he had been convicted and it was not ascertained it might be held to be a breach of duty, whereas all we can reasonably expect a man to do is to seek information along that line and incorporate it in his legal pleading.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; this is supposed to be an indictment.

Mr. GARD. Well, an indictment is a legal pleading.

Mr. BARKLEY. But under the gentleman's amendment all he would have to do would be to "seek information," and whether he found or not he could plead he had been previously convicted?

Mr. GARD. No. My purpose is to get the information and put it in the indictment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and he has to put it in the indictment in order to be convicted by reason of this previous conviction and can restate it afterwards. Under this language as it is now he has to ascertain that fact. He can not charge a previous conviction unless he ascertains that there has been previous conviction, and if the gentleman's amendment is agreed to he can seek information, and whether he finds it or not he can charge the man with being previously convicted.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no; I do not think you can fairly assume that a prosecuting officer would put something in the indictment that he could not prove.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think he would do it, but he could do it.

Mr. GARD. I do not think the gentleman's contention is reasonable. I think my amendment is eminently proper from a legal standpoint.

Mr. BEE. After the word "and," in line 13, are the words "to plead the prior conviction." In other words, I read it in this way, that if he ascertains he is to plead it.

Mr. GARD. That is in there once. I think it is already covered.

Mr. BOIES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Surely.

Mr. BOIES. It is the law in some States, I know, that you must plead a prior conviction in order to be able to introduce any testimony upon that allegation.

Mr. GARD. Yes; I think so.

Mr. BOIES. Now, the duty that is cast upon the man is the same as the duty that is cast upon a prosecuting officer to perform his duty. We certainly do not insure that he will do all the things that some other man did, but that he shall be faithful.

Mr. GARD. I am sure the gentleman will agree with me, since he is a very eminent lawyer and has long ornamented the bench in his State——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANKFORD: Page 28, line 13, after the word "convicted" insert "or has plead guilty"; and on page 28, line 13, after the word "conviction" insert "or plea of guilty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That in addition to the penalties imposed by this act for the violation of any of its provisions the court may, in its discretion, after conviction, require the defendant to execute a bond with security approved by the court in a penal sum of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, conditioned that he will not violate any of the provisions of this act for the term of one year. And if said bond shall not be given the defendant may be committed to jail until it is given or until he is discharged by the court, provided he shall not be confined for a longer period than six months.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. GARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is recognized.

Mr. GARD. I move to strike out section 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Strike out section 31.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this section contains the very unique proceeding that after a man is convicted and after he has received the punishment for the conviction, that in the discretion of the court he may be required to enter upon a security which may not be more than $5,000, and if he can not give that bond he shall be committed to jail until it is given or until he is discharged by the court, provided he shall not be confined for a longer period than six months.

I have been trying so far as I can to call the attention of the members of this committee, and through the members of this committee the Members of the House, who are endeavoring to make a bill for the enforcement of war-time and constitutional prohibition, to what is contained in the bill. I do not think there has been a very general understanding of that which has been contained in the bill, nor do I think there has been afforded opportunity to discuss matters which are entirely new and which the membership of the committee and of the House should know. And I am sure, too, that nobody will ever advance the proposition in any State or in any country that after a man is convicted and you sentence him to six months in a prison, for illustration, if he happens to be poor and some arbitrary judge requires a bond of $5,000, that then you can keep him in jail for six months longer than his term of conviction.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee——

Mr. BUTLER. Did not the gentleman help to frame this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you. What is the idea of this double punishment?

Mr. GARD. I have not the slightest idea what it is.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the argument in favor of it?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GARD. I desire to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. A good answer is that it is to enforce this law.

Mr. GARD. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I do not know whence this came, but I do say, in addition to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called the "double punishment," which is more than that, that it punishes a man not for violating the law, but it punishes him for being poor. In other words, if a man is rich and he commits a crime under this act, and the judge says, "You shall give a bond," the man can give a bond and be discharged, but if a man is poor and he can not give a bond for $5,000, the judge will say, "You go to jail. I have sentenced you to jail for six months or a year, and if you can not give this bond for $5,000 you are to stay in jail for six months longer."

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will ask if the law has not another vicious provision, and that is that it delegates to the judges the power to legislate? That is, the additional penalty that is provided is not one that Congress provides shall obtain in every case, but it will be a part of the penalty provided that the judge can apply to the offender. And is it not vicious in that it delegates to the judicial department by Congress the power to add to the penalties provided in this act?

Mr. GARD. I do not object to the passing by Congress of laws affording wise discretion to the United States courts. I think the court should have abundant power to afford proper sentence, and I would in no way restrict their discretion. But what I am trying to get at is that this act is a double punishment and, in fact, punishes a man one time because he has committed the act, and you fine him and imprison him, and in the same breath you fine him and imprison him because he is poor and can not give a bond.

The bond required is not that the defendant do not repeat the act for which he was convicted but is a bond upon an order restraining him from any violation of this act. It would be impossible for any man, unless he be a rich malefactor, to give such bond.

Mr. FOSTER. As a matter of fact is not this what it does——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the matter ought to be discussed, I ask that I have five additional minutes given to me for the purpose of answering questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. The question I wanted to ask was this, in view of the question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]: Instead of being a double penalty here, is not this what it is? When he is found guilty, the judge who finds him guilty, with all the facts before him, in his discretion may require him to give bond, and then if he fails to give bond he shall go to jail not exceeding six months. If that is the provision there are no two penalties imposed for the same offense. The judge in his discretion is to do this, and that may include consideration of the fact that he is poor and unable to give bond.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman does not read the first line in reference to the penalties proposed by this act.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I have read the first line.

Mr. GARD. He is first sent to jail, and under this bill he will get six months longer.

Mr. FOSTER. That is because he is liable to commit the offense again.

Mr. GARD. That is what I object to, giving such arbitrary discretion to any court.

Mr. FOSTER. The judge can consider the fact that the man is poor, and he therefore imposes imprisonment in lieu of a bond. Last week the gentleman was against the imposition of a bond. Now the gentleman is against giving the court any discretion.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Is not the judge required to impose a penalty under section 30?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, under section 31, in addition to the penalty he is compelled to impose under section 30, he has to impose these additional penalties, which may be 30 days' confinement in jail if he happens to be poor?

Mr. GARD. Yes. He imposes a fine of $5,000, and if the man is poor and can not give bond he must stay in jail in lieu thereof for a period not exceeding six months.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARD. I will yield first to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I only wanted to point out to the gentleman from Ohio this fact, that the original conviction may carry a punishment of confinement for only one month.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And when the judge comes to exercise his discretion, because of the man's failure to give bond, he may imprison him six times as long as the original sentence.

Mr. GARD. Yes. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that anybody who will be punished under the provisions of section 30 has any rights that a court or anybody else is bound to respect?

Mr. GARD. Well, I am seeking to make this bill a proper bill so far as I can.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Would not this constitute a "cruel and unusual punishment," as defined by the Constitution, to permit people to be sentenced in that way in the discretion of the court?

Mr. GARD. It would be a most "unusual" punishment. Whether or not it would be "cruel" I would not undertake to say. But it is improper, at any rate, in that it penalizes a man not for doing an unlawful thing but for being poor.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE], a member of the committee.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. The suggestion I wanted to make to the gentleman was this, that it may carry out the probationary idea; that the judge might desire to fine him a dollar or imprison him a single day. He puts him under bond that he will not violate the provisions of this title, or if he did——

Mr. GARD. There is no probation about it, because it provides that the court has to sentence him; that he may say on top of that, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] well said, "I will sentence you to jail for 30 days, and require a bond for $5,000, and in default sentence you anew to imprisonment for six months."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] may proceed five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is rather a strange attitude for gentlemen to take. This provision is intended to give the court a chance to impose a light penalty. This bond can only be required at the time when sentence is imposed. It must be at that time, because after the man has been sentenced a court can not impose additional penalties; that is a familiar rule of law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I can not yield. In section 30, that contains most of the penalties, there are no minimum penalties for the first offense. If a man comes before the court for sentence for such an offense it can impose a fine of a dollar; if he did so the chances are that the man would go on and repeat the offense. But the court can say to him, "Here you pay a dollar and give this bond and go free; otherwise I will have to impose a heavier penalty." Instead of this being harsh and cruel treatment, as has been suggested, it enables the court to avoid anything harsh.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman said that the penalty, or rather the requirement of the bond, provided for in the section must be made at the time the sentence is imposed—the original sentence.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, may I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to this: In the old case of Leidey against Benedict, as I recall, in the State of New York, the judge, after the sentence had been served and the man had undergone a long term of imprisonment, then sentenced him anew. It is true that in the action for false imprisonment the court held that the judge had no right to do that, but also held that the judicial cloak protected the judge from having done this very unlawful and improper act.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, I do not yield further. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech but for a question.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask the gentleman, in view of that decision, does he still insist——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have only five minutes. The gentleman is making a speech in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I want the House to understand this provision. It is perfectly plain. It is not intended to have the effect that has been suggested. On the other hand, it will serve the opposite purpose. It will relieve the court from the necessity of imposing a heavy penalty.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. It would seem to me it would be a very good provision if, instead of the words "in addition to the penalties imposed by this act," it contained the words "instead of the penalties imposed by this act," so as to leave it in the discretion of the court either to send the man to jail or to put him under bond.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In section 30, the section just preceding this, which covers most of the penalties for a first offense, there is no minimum penalty, and consequently the man might be fined a dollar and required to give a bond.

I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I move to amend the gentleman's motion by making it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota by making it 10 minutes. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana) there were—ayes 58, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this motion to strike out this paragraph. I want this prohibition bill to be such a bill that a Member of this House who believes in prohibition, and at the same time believes in ordinary American justice, may in good faith vote for it. In the consideration of this bill many of the Members who believe in prohibition have been permitting sections to go by which contained provisions in which they did not believe, because they feared that their attitude might be construed as being opposed to drastic prohibition measures. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that there is a difference between a drastic prohibition measure and a measure which does not safeguard the ordinary rights of an American citizen. Some sections which have already been adopted do not safeguard such rights. This provision reminds me somewhat of the Chinese Code, which contains this provision:

> Whoever is guilty of improper conduct and such as is contrary to the spirit of the law, though not a breach of any specific part of it, shall be punished with at least 40 blows, and when the impropriety is of a serious nature, with 80 blows.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this section is not limited to violations of the provisions of the former section, but it says:

> That in addition to the penalties imposed by this act for the violation of any of its provisions.

Think of it! In ordinary criminal jurisprudence the only time we require a defendant to give bond to prevent him from committing a crime is in the case where there is danger of a breach of the peace or something of that sort, and then only after trial; but in this case a man may be carrying some liquor in an automobile in violation of this law; he may be prosecuted and given the limit for that; his automobile may be taken from him and sold; he may be enjoined from further commission of crime under this act, and for some violations of that he may be tried and punished by a judge without a jury; and then, after that, in addition to the penalties therein provided, he may be sentenced under this section to imprisonment for the period of six months. And what is that based upon? Gentlemen, it is based upon this and nothing else: A is haled before the bar of justice, and the judge says, "I think you are going to continue to violate this law." B is haled into court under the same circumstances. A says, "Your honor, I can not give bond." B says, "I can give bond." A is sent to jail for six months, and B gives bond and goes free; not because A is guilty and B is not, but because, both being guilty, A can not give the bond that B can.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; I can not. The provision says:

And if said bond shall not be given, the defendant may be committed to jail until it is given or until he is discharged by the court.

Now, if A and B are both sent to jail, and A's friends get together and get him a bond, he is out in a week; but B, not having the standing to secure a bond, he must go on and serve six months in jail. Why? Not because the offense is different in the case of A and B, but because B is not able to get the bond.

Gentlemen, I think when provisions of the law do not give equal justice to the citizens of this Republic, notwithstanding any criticism that may be launched at us, notwithstanding any false claim that may be made that we are not in favor of drastic prohibition laws, we ought to stand up and oppose those unjust provisions [applause], not because we are opposing drastic prohibition, but because this Congress ought to stand for the liberties of the American people—not the liberty to get drunk, because I do not believe in it. I believe in punishing and preventing drunkenness; but this Congress ought to stand up for the ordinary right of the citizen to be tried before a jury, if it is a jury case, or in any event to have a trial and to have equal punishment, irrespective of poverty, meted out to those who are equally guilty. [Applause.]

Several Members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] was on his feet first, and the Chair recognizes him.

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under the rule——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I refuse to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. Under the rules and under the practice the Chair always recognizes the members of the committee, and I think properly so. Now, the only way a Member can get recognition here is by moving for time beyond that which is limited when debate is closed.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, if it is agreeable, and there is no objection, I want to yield a part of my five minutes to two gentlemen who have asked to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Missouri yielding a part of his five minutes?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, is the time limited to five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time is limited to 10 minutes, and 5 minutes have been occupied.

Mr. DYER. It has been limited, and I will yield a part of my five minutes to two gentlemen.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, there can not be any yielding of a part of the five minutes unless I am given two and a half minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in favor of the retention of this section. It is very important if we enact a law to enact one that will be effective. We are going to have our greatest difficulty when national prohibition becomes a law to prevent the commission of offenses under it. One of these crimes that we want to stop, if we are truly and sincerely in favor of making it effective, is bootlegging.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. No; I will not. This section has for its purpose, and its only purpose, the punishment of those who violate the law in selling and manufacturing intoxicating liquors. That is bootlegginng; that is what is going on now in many of the so-called prohibition dry States. We do not want that in the States now which are in favor of liberalizing with reference to intoxicating drinks.

We in our State and in our city are going out of the wet business in good faith. [Applause.] We propose to see that the law is not violated in our State or in our city, as it has been all through the dry States for years. Bootlegging, the illicit manufacture and sale of the worst kind of whisky, is what is causing all the trouble. It is not light drinks, it is not beer, it is not wine, that is doing the harm; the harm in the dry States is the manufacture and retail of moonshine and the like, and the disposal of it illegally wherever they can sell it. Those engaged in that business deserve to be punished, and in order to stop it while the court proceedings are going on they should give bond, and in every way should give ample security that they will not defy the law.

If people want prohibition as strongly as claimed, let us have it in good faith and in spirit and in letter.

Personally I do not believe that they want prohibition, but we have voted for it in the legal manner. Under the Constitution we are to have prohibition, and whether right or wrong, Mr. Chairman, it is the law of the land, and we intend if we can in this Congress and in this country to see that laws are enacted that will prevent its violation.

I am, as everybody in this House knows, opposed to prohibition, but I am here to work as best I can to enact a law that will make it possible to enforce the law enacted under this prohibition amendment to the Constitution.

I feel that it is our bounden duty to stand by this provision. I do not want to see men prosecuted, but unless they are willing to obey this law in every respect they deserve to be punished.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. VARE. Does not the gentleman feel that this law means one sort of punishment for the rich and another for the poor? Here you have two men before the bar, one is wealthy and the other poor, one is able to give a bond and the other is not able to give a bond.

Mr. DYER. No bond is required for a man who will obey the law. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired and all time has expired.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 18, strike out the word "security" and insert in lieu thereof the word "surety."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARD) there were 73 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. GARD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 83 ayes and 66 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. That in any affidavit, information, or indictment for the violation of this act, separate offenses may be united in separate counts and the defendant may be tried on all at one trial and the penalty for all offenses may be imposed. It shall not be necessary in any affidavit, information, or indictment to give the name of the purchaser or to include any defensive negative averments, but it shall be sufficient to state that the act complained of was then and there prohibited and unlawful.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer some amendments to section 34.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 29, line 25, after the word "trial," insert the words "unless he demands a severance."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this section 34 provides for a new form of pleading in this class of cases which does not exist in any other sort of a case in any criminal statute of the United States. It provides that separate offenses may be united in separate counts, and the defendant may be tried on all at one time.

It affords him no opportunity to demand a severance, no opportunity to have a separate trial upon any one charge, and it provides for a cumulative punishment. In other words, you try him for three different charges in one affidavit of information or indictment and find him guilty of all of them, and instead of imposing a punishment for one you impose a punishment for three. This particular section also provides that in this pleading, and it is a legal pleading, it shall not be necessary in the indictment to give the name of the purchaser or to include any defensive negative averments, but it shall be sufficient to state that the act complained of was then and there prohibited and unlawful, so that what we are endeavoring to do now is to so amend the criminal indictment procedure of the United States to say something like this:

United States of America.

A certain person represents and says that he complains against John Jones and says that a particular act was then and there prohibited and unlawful—

Without regard to the time, without regard to what it was, the particular nature of the charge, or anything which the Anglo-Saxon people have been proud to believe guaranteed their right against illegal persecution. In other words, we have heretofore said that no man shall be put upon trial for his liberty unless he be advised of the charge against him. That is a constitutional provision, at least it was until this particular act comes along, and now we attempt to say that instead of advising a man of what his offense is, it shall be sufficient to say that the act complained of was then and there unlawful and that these may be cumulative, you may add them together and pile them up on him, and not permit him to ask for a severance, or to require the prosecuting attorney to elect upon which of the charges he will proceed, or any of the things which we have so carefully safeguarded to every defendant down through the centuries since the English-speaking people have written law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the gentleman. He apparently has discovered something brand new. The fact of the matter is, the very thing he objects to is in the United States statutes to-day. It is a provision that has been in our statutes for many years. It is the constant practice in the United States courts to charge persons with different offenses in various counts contained in one indictment and cumulative punishments are imposed. As far as that feature of the bill is concerned there is nothing new in it at all. So far as this other matter is concerned, I may say that you need not always allege negative, defensive matters, it is a general rule in criminal pleading that you must, and it is often difficult to determine when it is necessary and when not. Take my own State, for instance. We allege sale without a license. It is not necessary to prove that the offender did not have a license. If he sees fit to raise the question, he must produce that proof himself. That is a common rule in practically every State in reference to this same class of statutes. It is applying to the pleading the common-law rule as to proof. If it is not necessary to make proof, why should we make negative averment in the indictment? There is nothing revolutionary in this. Not even new.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand the gentleman to assert that you may take under one indictment and set out in a separate count five or six separate and distinct offenses?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Misdemeanors.

Mr. BEE. Misdemeanor offenses, and convict a man of all the separate offenses in one indictment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. And accumulate a punishment upon him?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; under our Federal statutes.

Mr. GARD. Where does the gentleman say it only applies to misdemeanors? It applies to any affidavit, information, or indictment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am just told a man may be tried under existing laws for more than one felony in the same indictment.

Mr. BEE. That may be in the State of Kansas.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that in all of the States where they have laws against the illegal sale of liquor, where a man has sold to perhaps 2 or 3 or 5 or 10 or 20 different people, all of those charges can be combined in one action?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly. You do not, as a rule, have to allege the name of the party to whom you sell nor specify each sale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it is possible for any man upon the floor of this House to camouflage his position upon this bill. He may ambush, but he can not camouflage. Now, with reference to the claim of the eminent attorney from Ohio that this section provides, in effect, that no time as to the commission of the offense is required to be stated in the information or indictment drafted under this law, the section itself deals with an affidavit, information, or indictment. A document that did not give the date or did not give the time and the place of the commission of the offense would not be an indictment, information, or an affidavit in a criminal proceeding, because the court would not know whether it had jurisdiction or not. So that every affidavit and every information and every indictment would be required to state under this law when and where the offense was committed in the first part of the instrument. It is well known, I think, by attorneys generally that in the enforcement of the liquor laws any number of offenses may be pleaded in one indictment, but in separate counts. If John Smith has sold whisky to 15 different men in one afternoon, why should this man, whom the gentleman undertakes to protect, have the privilege of casting upon the State or the United States the burden of trying him 15 times?

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOIES. Not now. Now, if he is charged 15 times the Government must prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt upon each count. It is in the discretion of the jury to say whether the Government has furnished sufficient testimony to satisfy the law on all the counts or not.

Mr. RAKER. Right there, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOIES. Not now. The gentleman says it would prejudice the man. It would not prejudice the defendant unless the jury were satisfied that he was guilty under every count that they have introduced testimony upon. That is to say, if there were counts alleged which the jury did not believe had been sustained, beyond a reasonable doubt, they would not convict, and the defendant would not be prejudiced thereby. If he had violated the law in more than one particular he has prejudiced himself and should not be protected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by making it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment that debate close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I may be old-fashioned and out of touch with the prevailing sentiment of this country when I express the belief that if we enact into law the present bill we are considering we are breeding a discontent and disrespect for law in this country beyond anything we have ever witnessed before, and I will say to you frankly I hope I may be mistaken in that belief. I sincerely hope I may be mistaken in it.

Realizing the fact that, in accordance with the manner provided by the Constitution, our country has adopted a constitutional amendment "prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes," and realizing that some legislation may be necessary in order to give this amendment force and effect, I had hoped that the Judiciary Committee in their wisdom might bring to us an enforcement bill which all right-minded persons, not blinded by prejudice nor awed by the political power of the Anti-Saloon League, might support. In this hope I have been disappointed, and the discussion of the bill presented has developed enough to show us that no self-respecting person holding my views, interested only in seeing justice done and the real spirit of the constitutional amendment enforced, can support the measure now under consideration.

Only a blind follower of those who look on the proper use of any intoxicants by others than themselves as a crime can honestly support such a measure as we have before us at this time.

Many influences, some of them absolutely honest, have brought about the possibility of this constitutional amendment, but if anyone believes the American people will sanction such a carnival of inquisition as this bill proposes and would inevitably bring about, he is, in my opinion, very much mistaken.

The abolition of the use of intoxicants is a matter of education and proper and sane laws enforcing the constitutional amendment would, in my opinion, make it easy for the next generation to adapt itself to a diminished use of alcoholic drinks; yet, on the other hand, a law such as we have before us will inevitably breed resentment and fail to accomplish the very purpose which the vast majority of our people had in mind when they advocated and made possible the adoption of the constitutional amendment.

It had not been my intention to say anything during the consideration of this bill, but lest my motives in opposing the bill should be misunderstood I want to say here and now that I can not in good conscience vote for a bill which is little better than, and is a strong reminder of, the witch and heretic legislation of our early New England Colonies, and it is my opinion that the descendants of men who now blindly bow to the decree "support this or run the risk of the displeasure of the Anti-Saloon League" will wonder how their ancestors could have been so narrow and so weak as to attempt to fasten on a free people the left-over legal specimens of an almost forgotten and entirely discredited period in our history.

So far as the legal verbiage of the bill is concerned, it would do discredit to a beginner in the study of the subject of law. As it is presented before us for consideration it shows how arbitrary men can be when obsessed with the fanatical desire to enforce their own narrow wishes and prejudices and placate a power in politics which they fear.

It is no longer an answer to anyone who opposes legislation of this kind to say, "You are dominated by the liquor interests." There are but few such interests to-day, and the much overestimated power of the so-called liquor interests in politics is to-day and, in my opinion, will for all time be a negligible force in our politics. But, regardless of where we may be classed, some of us can not see our way clear to join the procession of those who are always willing to be led by whatever fanaticism is uppermost in people's minds.

Some of the most apparent defects of the bill are the following:

First. It refuses the right of trial by jury guaranteed by the constitutions of the several States and the United States.

Second. It disregards property rights in attempting to fasten liens on property regardless of the manner provided by the laws of the several States and before judgment has been obtained.

Third. It extends the powers of the judiciary beyond anything ever attempted since the shameful days of Chief Justice Jeffreys in England.

Fourth. It sanctions the violation of the sacredness and sanctity of our homes and places our citizens at the mercy of any unscrupulous officer of the law or jealous neighbor, who for spite can invade any home without any reason and for any unlawful purpose.

Fifth. It makes crimes of the ordinary harmless housekeeping acts of nearly every family in our country.

These are only a few of the indictments I present against this measure. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. IGOE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE], a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IGOE: Page 30, at the end of line 15, insert: "In any prosecution under this title for the unlawful manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, exportation, receipt, giving away, furnishing, possession, purchase, or use of liquor it shall be a complete defense, notwithstanding the definition of intoxicating liquor in section 1 of this title, if the defendant shall prove to the court, or to the jury in case of jury trial, that the liquor was not intoxicating in fact."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I raise the point of order that it is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. IGOE. All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, is that this section relates to the trial of offenses under this act, and that is all the amendment does.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does not deal with that matter. It deals with indictment and trial. There is nothing as to the evidence in here.

Mr. IGOE. This act does not deal with evidence to convict anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. IGOE) there were—ayes 36, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, but I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 30, line 5, after the word "unlawful," strike out the period and insert a comma, and then insert "but this provision shall not be construed to preclude the trial court from directing the furnishing to the defendant a bill of particulars when he deems it proper to so so."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of orderly procedure, I move to strike out, after the word "trial," the words "and the penalty for all offenses may be imposed."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 29, line 25, strike out, after the word "trial," the words "and the penalty for all offenses may be imposed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I also move to strike out, beginning on line 1, page 30, and commencing with the word "it," all the remaining language in the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 30, line 1, after the word "imposed," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. That after 10 days after the date when this act has become operative the possession of liquors by any person not legally permitted under this title to possess liquor shall be prima facie evidence that such liquor is kept for the purpose of being sold, bartered, exchanged, given away, furnished, or otherwise disposed of in violation of the provisions of this title. Every person legally permitted under this title to have liquor shall report to the commissioner within 10 days after the passage of this act the kind and amount of intoxicating liquors in his possession. But it shall not be unlawful to possess liquors in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him only as his dwelling and such liquor need not be reported: Provided, The burden of proof shall be upon the possessor to prove that the liquor was lawfully acquired and possessed.

Mr. RAKER, Mr. RUBEY, Mr. WELTY, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. STEELE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] is recognized.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] was not on his feet, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. I yield temporarily to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, on line 6, page 30, strike out "10 days after the date when this," and on line 7 the word

"act has become operative," and insert in place of it "February 1, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 30, line 6, strike out the words "10 days after the date when this act has become operative" and insert in lieu thereof the words "February 1, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in line 14, page 30, strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert in place of them "January 16, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 30, line 14, strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "January 16, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that my amendment be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 30, line 18, strike out the colon and the word "Provided," also lines 19 and 20, and insert the following: "nor shall the penalties provided in this bill against manufacturing liquor without a permit apply to a person for manufacturing nonintoxicating cider or fruit juices in his home for consumption by himself and his family, but such liquor, cider, and juices shall only be used for the personal consumption of the owner thereof and his family residing in such dwelling and of his bona fide personal guests when entertained by him therein, and the burden of proof shall be upon the possessor to prove that such liquor was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not germane to the legislation; that the legislation merely seeks to extend the constitutional provision, this legislation being merely to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, and this seeks to extend it.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the chairman on that point of order to the fact that the purpose of this amendment is to carry out the constitutional provision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that there is nothing in the bill that he can find that refers to the manufacture of nonintoxicating cider or fruit juices.

Mr. STEELE. I will call the Chair's attention in that respect to section 1 of the bill, which, after defining the word "liquor" and the phrase "intoxicating liquor," proceeds, "and in addition thereto any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids, and compounds."

The CHAIRMAN. That has reference to war-time prohibition.

Mr. STEELE. No. That is in reference to constitutional prohibition. You will find it on page 7.

Now, what this has reference to is liquor of that character. Cider has been judicially determined to be in the nature of vinous liquor, and the liquor referred to in this amendment has particular reference to fruit juices. That is the purpose of this bill, and it is directly to carry out the constitutional provisions with reference to nonintoxicating liquor. It restricts these manufactured products to nonintoxicating, but so far as the products are concerned they are all of a vinous or malt character, such as those mentioned in section 1 of this act. This very section here refers to the possession of liquor defined in section 1. It is not only germane to the bill but it is germane to this particular section. I wish to say to the Chair for a moment, too, that this matter has been a matter of serious discussion, so far as I myself am concerned, with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not think the chairman has any serious objection to the amendment as drawn. May I call the attention of the chairman [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to this point?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that is out of order. The chairman is merely one Member here, although he is in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Chair has examined the first section of Title II, and the beverages described in the gentleman's amendment are not referred to in that section. It only refers to certain liquors, and it specifies the per cent of alcohol by volume which those beverages may contain. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania specifically refers to nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices not described anywhere in Title II of the bill, and the point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAKER offers the following amendment: Page 30, line 15, after the word "possession," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 16, 17, and 18, down to and including the word "reported."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to state that I have an amendment which affects the lines which the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] desires to strike out. I would like to offer my amendment before his amendment is put.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RUBEY moves to amend, on page 30, line 18, after the word "reported," by inserting the words "unless the liquor possessed exceeds in value the sum of $50, in which event such liquor shall be reported."

Mr. RAKER. I will be permitted to speak on my motion to strike out after the gentleman has concluded on his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I am in favor of this bill. I do not find any fault with the fact that the bill is stringent in its regulations. You can not pass a law to regulate the liquor traffic and successfully enforce it and regulate that traffic unless you have a law that has got teeth in it. I am in favor of this bill and have supported every proposition to make it even more stringent.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the committee to lines 15, 16, 17, and 18:

But it shall not be unlawful to possess liquors in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him only as his dwelling, and such liquor need not be reported.

My amendment applies to the last part of that provision; it does not interfere with any person keeping or having liquor, rightfully acquired, in his home, but it does require that that liquor when it exceeds in value the sum of $50 shall be reported. Objection has been made to the fact that under this bill the wealthy men of this country, the men of means, have been able to store up in their wine cellars immense stores of liquor. Now, I propose that if the amount stored up in any of those wine cellars exceeds in value $50 it shall be reported. I believe in turning the sunlight of publicity on the stores of liquor that are put away all over this country. [Applause.] My amendment does not interfere with the ordinary man, the laboring man or the poor man, who may desire to put away a few bottles of liquor for his own use and for family use in the years to come. It does not prevent men of means having larger quantities, but it does provide that large stores of liquor shall be reported. All that I want is that large quantities of liquor shall be reported and be made a matter of record, and under the next section, if you will read it, you will find that record is open to the public and the people of the country will know who has it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand it this report is to be made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be a secret document, so to speak, filed down here in the Treasury Department. I wish to know what real benefit from the temperance standpoint would be accomplished by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RUBEY. If the gentleman will read the next section he will find out that this record of stocks of liquor reported is open to the public; and not only that, but it provides that if you wish you may secure a certified copy of that record and use it in any way you see fit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is just it. To what good use could you put your information?

Mr. RUBEY. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a good thing to give publicity to those people who have gotten together great quantities of liquor and have stored them away?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Chicago.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman fear that the publicity so given to these various stocks of good liquor which have been put away will have a tendency to increase the number of burglaries and cause the liquor to be stolen?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not care how soon it is stolen. The sooner it is gotten rid of the better.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This bill to enforce national prohibition is entirely too drastic, and should be amended before it is finally enacted into law. All law-abiding citizens want to see the prohibition law enforced, but they do not want a measure so drastic that it would cause a law-abiding man to go to jail because he had a bottle of whisky in his home for use in case of sickness or because his wife happened to make some wine or cordial which contained one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol on the ground that it was an intoxicant.

The country, through its State legislatures, under its Constitution, ratified the national prohibition amendment, which is to go into effect on the 16th of January, 1920. Now, let us be sensible and practical and enact a law to enforce this prohibition amendment which will command the respect and obedience of the American people. I do not think we should be led astray by a few radical men who would enact a law that would cause our best people to lose all respect for their government. Gentlemen of the House, we should pause and think when men like Judge MOON, of Tennessee, and BEN HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, old Members of this House and men of high character and ability, and who have always voted for prohibition, tell us positively that they will not support this bill unless it is amended.

It seems to me that the strong advocates of prohibition should understand that while a law that would be too lax would be of little good one that is cruel and unjust will do less good, for it will make the very cause they are advocating unpopular. Conservative and fair laws alone are worthy of a great and broad-minded and patriotic people. Is it possible that we can not reason with gentlemen on this floor and amend this bill by eliminating the unreasonable and unjust features that it contains and pass a sensible and effective statute that will be a credit to our sense of justice and right and not an evidence of fanaticism.

I believe that the time is coming when amendments to the Federal Constitution will be submitted to the States for ratification by the direct vote of the people. But I do not wish to discuss that at this time. My object in addressing you to-day is to appeal to the membership of this House to come to their senses and do what the American people want them to do—pass a sensible, practical, and effective law that will punish the offenders of the prohibition law and not destroy the liberty of the law-abiding citizens of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] strikes at the very amendment that I offered—to strike out the whole provision which authorizes a man to keep any quantity of liquor in his home without making a declaration as to the amount. The gentleman's [Mr. RUBEY] amendment allows him to retain $50 worth, but all above and beyond that he must declare. The $50 is inconsequential and infinitesimal, because under present prices $50 worth might mean a few gallons.

The very object and purpose of this legislation is to make the law effective. I am in favor of proper legislation to enforce this constitutional amendment. There are a number of provisions of this bill that are a little unreasonable and that ought to be stricken out, but as a matter of fact we should not therefore defeat the entire legislation.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield for a moment. We should not defeat this entire bill because of those provisions, because we believe they will be corrected in the Senate; but I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this provision breaks down the very purpose and object of your legislation. Before this law became effective a man with a large amount of money could take five or six thousand dollars and fill his cellar full of liquor. A man just as much entitled to it, with just the same rights as an American citizen, working by the day, could not afford to expend more than $5.

Now, you propose to provide that a man, because he has a large amount of money, may lay away a supply, for what purpose? For the purpose of doing the very thing that you say should be prohibited to everybody in this land. We have enacted a constitutional amendment, and now we are trying to pass a law to carry out that amendment. By this provision you make a place for a man to violate the law in secrecy. Why do you not compel him to make a declaration and show the amount of liquor that he has, so that the officers may know where the speakeasy is, so that the officers may know that the man is taking his friends, Jones and Smith and Brown, to the place where he has his private stock of liquor, to give them liquor in violation of the law, simply because he had money enough to enable him to establish a saloon? That is all there is to it. You can not make it anything else, no difference if you call it a dwelling house. An American citizen intent on upholding and supporting the law will not place in his cellar a large quantity of liquor in violation of this law, and if he does it he does it for some evil purpose. There is no question on earth about that. Now, why make it possible for a man to violate the law with impunity and without giving the officers an opportunity to know it. If his declaration is filed and it shows that he has 100 gallons of whisky, or if he has a barrel of wine, when the officers see certain individuals wending their way to this man's place of residence they will know they are going there to get something to drink, and that he is giving it to them.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman is making a fine argument for my amendment. Will he support it?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to support the proposition to strike out this section. No man should have a privilege above anybody else simply because he has a large amount of money, to enable him to run a saloon against the law and because he can hide a stock of liquor in advance. Now, you say you do not want that man to make a declaration as to the amount of whisky or beer or wine that he may have on hand. He should be required to declare the truth. Then let the law take its course. Treat all alike.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I move to strike out the last word. I think we lose sight of one important fact, and that is that this is a bill to enforce prohibition and not a bill to regulate the liquor traffic. I call attention to the joint resolution proposing the amendment, the ratification thereof, and the proclamation of the Secretary of State:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

And, further, that it appears from official documents on file in this department that the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed as aforesaid has been ratified by the Legislatures of the States of Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

And, further, that the States whose legislatures have so ratified the said proposed amendment constitute three-fourths of the whole number of States in the United States.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of State of the United States, by virtue and in pursuance of section 205 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, do hereby certify that the amendment aforesaid has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of January, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

Now, if a person lives up to the purpose of the bill and does not undertake to violate its provisions by furnishing, selling, or giving away intoxicating liquors or dealing in them in any way, he is complying with the wishes of the American people as expressed in this constitutional amendment. They have asked for prohibition. They have not asked us to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquor by manufacturing, selling, or transporting it in any way.

We are told by eminent physicians that it is not necessary for the public health and welfare of humanity to use intoxicating liquor. But I took the floor more particularly for another purpose; that is, in relation to the quantity of alcohol some are asking to get into beer or light wine as a beverage. Lager beer frequently contains less than 2¾ per cent alcohol. That is prohibitive. Another thing: A good deal is said here about labor wanting a provision in the bill so they can use beer and light wine. There is only a very small percentage of the people of the United States who are not laboring people; and the fact that three-fourths, and more, of the States of the Union have declared for prohibition by a referendum vote, including the laboring people, shows that the laboring people themselves are in favor of prohibition. [Applause.]

I want to say one thing further, as chairman of the Labor Committee: I do not think I have had a single petition from a labor organization in favor of 2¾ per cent beer or light wine, but I have received many protests from other organizations—civic societies, manufacturers, professional and business men—against the manufacture, sale, and use of beer and wine. Manufacturers and business men hate to see their men intoxicated. There is not a man of you who would not consider it a calamity to see one of his own family addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor.

Intoxicating liquor has no place in the make-up of the manhood of the country. I do not believe it serves any legitimate or good purpose in the complexion or make-up of our Republic. I think we will be a better Republic, that we will be better men and women, and that our children will grow up to be better men and women if we are temperate and do not use intoxicating liquors. Women are opposed to the use of liquor as a beverage. Good morals are opposed to it, and for these reasons I shall vote for the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move to strike out the last word. This particular part of the section has given friends of prohibition a good deal of concern. Much of the abuse which this bill has received has grown out of what they consider a too strict limitation as to liquors now in the possession of various persons throughout the country. I have consulted with a great many in regard to this matter. The committee came to the conclusion, as I did, that for the time being we had better leave this provision in. If we find that it works badly I think within a reasonable time we can cut it out. I believe the friends of prohibition had better not give aid to those who are bitterly opposed to this bill by striking it out. To do so will help stir up feeling.

I realize that there is objection to this provision, and if I felt that the country would sustain it, if I felt that it would not do any harm to prohibition, I would gladly vote to strike it out. But in view of the situation I shall vote to have it remain in the bill as it is written and add a clause limiting use of this liquor so as to confine it to the home.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. This section does not go further than the eighteenth amendment, does it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not think it conflicts with that amendment. The question has been raised whether we can destroy liquor kept in the home without being used unlawfully.

Mr. FESS. Under the spirit of the eighteenth amendment the objection that is made would not be valid, because, under the eighteenth amendment, it will be unlawful to keep intoxicating liquor in the home, but would not be if it is not intoxicating.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The object of the eighteenth amendment is, no doubt, to prohibit the use of liquor, but there is no express provision against keeping it or drinking it. Consequently I do not think we are violating the amendment by allowing this provision to stay in the bill.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the objection made to the section is an objection made to the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. MANN was recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the learned gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS, just now to say that under the eighteenth amendment it would of course be unlawful to keep in one's home intoxicating liquors, but not if it was not intoxicating. Is that the statement?

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman did not make the statement as I made it. Liquors may be kept in the home but not for beverage uses.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not say anything about "beverage uses," but I am very glad that he makes that correction. I wondered when I heard the distinguished gentleman from Ohio make the suggestion—I wondered if the House had gone so far that one of its most learned Members was legislating upon a very important subject without having read the constitutional amendment and remembering what was in it. [Applause.]

It is perfectly clear that Congress in the constitutional amendment has power to prevent the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquor, and it is quite possible that the courts in construing what constitute intoxicating liquors may pay some attention to the expression of opinion of Congress, but we should not forget that if under the constitutional amendment we are able to do away with the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, that of itself is a wonderful thing, and perhaps may end, to a large extent at least, the use of that character of stimulant. But here is a section undertaking to say what a man shall do about a bottle of beer, defined to be intoxicating under this bill, which may happen to be in his house or in his barn. The bill would undertake to say that if it is in his house he may leave it there, but if it be in his barn he must report it, drink it, or pour it out.

After all, gentlemen, this House is legislating upon a great subject. We went a long way during the war in sending Government inspectors into private offices and private houses, with a feeling very bitter on the part of many people who were not German sympathizers that we were going far beyond our rights. If we can prevent the manufacture and sale and transportation of intoxicating liquor the world will have made a step of progress which is almost beyond belief, but why in the effort to do that should we make the people all over the country feel that the Government of the United States wants to invade their private homes? [Applause.] Let us enact legislation to carry out the provisions of the constitutional amendment, not undertake to say, as the proposed amendment now pending in the committee proposes to say, that if a man has liquor which somebody claims is worth $50 in his home he must report it, and under what penalty? A penalty that if he does not it shall be considered that he has it there for purposes of sale. This is a great question upon which we are legislating, and we ought to meet it in a great manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to speak for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I will not take any more time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I was very glad to hear the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], voice his opposition to the pending amendment, because it shows that there is still some sanity left among the active proponents of this measure. Of course, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just pointed out, this amendment has nothing whatever to do with the enforcement of the eighteenth constitutional amendment, because the eighteenth amendment says not a word about the possession of liquor lawfully acquired.

I sincerely regret that I have not the opportunity to vote for what I can regard as a reasonable measure to enforce the prohibition amendment. It is true that I voted against that amendment, but as it was duly enacted and made a part of the Consitution of the United States I think it was plainly the duty of Congress to provide the machinery for its enforcement.

If this bill stopped at that it might have been possible, though disagreeing with the fundamental principle of the amendment, for me to have given it my support, but this bill goes infinitely further. It is a hodge-podge of all sorts of liberty-crushing regulations in no way connected with the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. In the first place it provides for the rigid enforcement of war-time prohibition when the necessity for it has been declared to have ceased by no less an authority than the President himself. While we are rejoicing at the final conclusion of the peace negotiations we are at the same time legislating as though we were in the direst stress of war. No one ever urged the original enactment for war-time prohibition except on the ground of the necessity for conserving the food supply and protecting the morale of our Army. Since the armistice was signed the necessity for food conservation has entirely ceased and our Army is being disbanded as fast as it is humanly possible to do it. Why, then, should we proceed as though the din of battle still resounded about the world? What we ought to do is to follow the President's advice and repeal the law; not at this late date to provide measures for its rigid enforcement.

Even in that portion of this bill which deals with the constitutional amendment we have gone far afield. We are defining and punishing as crimes acts which the eighteenth amendment does not prohibit, does not refer to in any way. We are vastly exceeding any instructions which could reasonably be construed as having been laid upon us by the American people. We are providing rules of conduct which will take an army of sleuths and millions of money to even attempt to enforce. I am sincerely afraid that this bill will not make for a temperate America. I fear that it will act as a stimulation to the business of the moonshiner and the drug peddler. I can not bring myself to support this measure. I fear that we are sowing the wind and I only pray that we may not reap the whirlwind. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in all good humor I feel like asking the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] who has just taken his seat, and all who sympathize with his utterance praising the President's wisdom, why it is that he and others are unwilling to follow the President of the United States in so many things but are willing to follow him if they think he leads to a beer saloon or a liquor shop?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the President has never issued such an invitation to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I accept this authoritative statement that the President is a wise statesman. [Laughter.] Allow me to say very earnestly that I think it will be a wholesome contemplation at this stage of the debate for us to remember that we who have been seeking to pass the bill that is called drastic have simply been trying to faithfully interpret the spirit of the eighteenth amendment, which provides for stopping forevermore the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and, of course, we are hoping thus to stop the use of them if possible. While I would not leave in this bill any point that would make it legally vulnerable, I am in favor in all heartiness of making it so tight that beer or liquor will not leak through. I want to remind the gentlemen opposing these drastic measures that there is not one provision in this so-called drastic bill that will touch a single law-abiding citizen on the American continent. [Applause.] If these gentlemen who want this law enforced—and they say that the evils of drink are undenied—I want to ask why it is that they continually seek to make it easy for the man who proposes to violate this law, which has fought its way into the Constitution through the efforts of the God-fearing people of America for the last half century.

It is dangerous to our present and our future, dangerous to our national ideals and to the youth of America, and dangerous to our self-respect and safety at home and to our reputation abroad for the great lawmaking body of the first prohibition nation on earth by constitutional enactment to find itself making laws that are tinged with sympathy for the criminal instead of sympathy for humanity.

Let us make it so tight that nobody would ever say that the American Congress was powerful enough to put a law on the statute books but was not wise enough to make it strong enough to be enforced. Let me remind you of another thing. We have heard much talk during this debate about "the sanctity of the home." I want to ask any living man here if he has ever known either the legal or the illegal liquor sellers to care anything about the sanctity of the home when they were trying to line their pockets with money that was stained with human blood and human sorrow. [Applause.] There is no answer to that proposition. I remind you of another thing. If you allow "any old" amount that anybody wants to put in their homes kept there, we are going to do the very thing suggested by the gentleman from California—we are going to leave among the American people a source of drinking evil and an increasing sentiment of unrest that says that the rich man can fill his cellar with wine but the poor man can not have his own beer. Let us be consistent, gentlemen, and endeavor to carry out the law we are about to pass with sanity and an uncringing demand for sobriety and righteousness. Looseness in enforcing such a law will only intensify the influence of the statement made by the festive, genial gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] only last week, where he called upon all Congressmen to stand up and tell how much liquor they had stored. All over the country, in plate matter in country papers, as well as the daily press, I am seeing the story where that misleading charge was made. It was made here in a spirit of festivity and good humor, perhaps, but we have to remember that it looks very different to people who read such charges in cold type—people at a distance who do not know the high character of this Congress, whether they live away out in California or down yonder in my Georgia district. Destroy the faith of the people in their lawmakers and the Nation is in danger of death and decay; destroy the faith of the people in the integrity and efficiency of our laws and the morale of our citizenship is fatally shattered. Again I urge that we pass a law and enforce a law that will prove our sympathy, not for the criminal who tramples our laws and desecrates our homes, but for humanity, that has suffered so long and that has come at last, thank God, to the day of its victorious emancipation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that all debate close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves as an amendment that all debate close in 40 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to close in 25 minutes.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois move that all debate close in 25 minutes.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 16, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I read the speech that the gentleman got permission to extend——

Mr. DYER. Regular order!

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making it 20 minutes. I think that is but fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making it close now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon moves an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that all debate be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now recurs upon the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section and all amendments thereto is now closed. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, so much discussion has been had that I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 2, noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 30, line 17, after the word "used," strike out the words "by him only as his" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "exclusively as his and," so that the sentence will read: "Used exclusively as his dwelling."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, division.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. RUBEY and Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, we do not know what we are voting on.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 31, noes 58.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that vote.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELTY: Page 30, line 18, strike out all after the word "reported" and all of lines 19 and 20.

Mr. WELTY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes. I think it is a very important——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a correcting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEELE: On page 30, line 18, strike out the colon after the word "Provided," also lines 19 and 20, and insert the following: "But such liquors must be used for the personal consumption of the owner thereof and his family residing at such dwelling, and his bona fide guests when entertained by him therein, and the burden of proof shall be upon the possessor to prove that such liquor was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. That it is not germane to the purposes of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOIGT: Page 30, line 16, after the word "in," strike out "one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him only as his dwelling," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a building which is in whole or in part used or kept by the possessor in good faith for dwelling purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 30, strike out lines 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and the words "of this title," in line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 30, line 17, the word "only" after the word "him" and insert on page 30, line 18, the word "only" after the word "dwelling," in order to make the word "only" refer to "dwelling" and not to "him."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Page 30, line 17, after the word "him," strike out the word "only," and in line 18, after the word "dwelling," insert the word "only."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. That it shall be the duty of the commissioner to file the reports, statements, and information required by this title as a part of the file of the office in a permanent record alphabetically arranged, and to permit any and all persons desiring to do so to inspect the said statements at any time during office hours. It shall be the further duty of said commissioner to furnish certified copies of such statements to any persons requesting the same, upon payment of the reasonable fees therefor, and the said original statement or certified copies thereof shall be competent evidence in any suit or proceeding in which the same may be relevant. All records required by this act to be kept by any manufacturer, wholesale or retail druggist, physician, or transportation company shall be subject to inspection at any reasonable hours by any of the officers authorized to enforce this title, including the peace officers in the State where the record is kept.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 30, line 23, to strike out the word "file" and insert the word "files."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 30, line 23, strike out the word "file" and insert the word "files."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in the same line, on page 30, line 23, strike out the word "the" and insert "his," where the word occurs the second time in the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 30, line 23, strike out the second word "the" and insert the word "his."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 30, line 24, after the word "arranged," insert "and indorse on each the date when filed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 31, lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, strike out: "statements to any persons requesting the same, upon payment of the reasonable fees therefor, and the said original statement or certified copies thereof shall be competent evidence in any suit or proceeding in which the same may be relevant," and insert in lieu thereof "reports, statements, information, and of his indorsement thereon of the date when filed to any person requesting the same, upon payment of the reasonable fees therefor, and such certified copy shall be competent evidence in any suit or proceeding in which said original report, statement, information, or indorsement would be competent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. GARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is recognized.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, on page 30, line 25, after the word "said," on the bottom line of that page, insert the word "reports"; and, after the word "statements," insert the words "and information."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 30, line 25, after the word "said," insert "reports"; and after the word "statements" insert "and information."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, that was reported by the committee. I presume the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is willing to adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, on page 31, line 9, I move to strike out the words "transportation company" and insert the word "carrier."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 31, line 9, strike out the words "transportation company" and insert in lieu thereof the word "carrier."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] whether in inserting this last amendment on page 31, line 9, the word "company" was stricken out or just "transportation"?

Mr. GARD. I proposed to strike out the words "transportation company" and insert the word "carrier."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment adopted was to strike out the words "transportation company."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has the floor.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in support of my motion I desire to read in my time a statement by a great woman, Lady Somerset. What she has to say——

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent to have the Clerk read the statement indicated.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, because we do not need any information from Lady Somerset.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman objects to the Clerk reading the statement in my place, notwithstanding my cold, I will read it myself, and I will point out why it is in order upon my amendment.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection, in view of the gentleman's condition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the statement by Lady Somerset could not be in order on a motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide.

Mr. SABATH. This section 36 provides the duties of the commissioner and also the reports showing how this law should be enforced. The statement that I desire to have read will tend to show that that is impossible of enforcement, and to prove that I desire that this statement be read in support of the contention I am making that this prohibition legislation is not possible of enforcement. Will the gentleman object to the Clerk reading it?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman shall speak in order.

Mr. SABATH. I have made my statement as to why I believe it is in order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the statement that he sends to the Clerk's desk be read by the Clerk.

Mr. BLANTON. I object. I insist on the gentleman speaking in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] is recognized.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that there are many mistakes in this bill. This is evident from the discussion that has developed here from time to time. That it is too drastic there is no question. This bill provides means whereby anyone can be subject to suspicion of having liquor whereupon he may be arrested, and the onus of proof is on the arrested person. This bill would take property away from men and make half the men in the United States policemen, with power to arrest without warrant. In addition to that this bill has gone further and brought back into existence the abridgment of a man's right to a trial by jury, the principle which the working people of the country fought so long and hard to exterminate, that of arrest and trial for contempt. Whether this is done at the instance of the big trusts or not I know not, but you put in the old injunction plan again. You set loose the Huns of the law, the Pinkerton detectives, and the coal and iron police, and such blood hirelings, to make war upon the citizen. Instead of burning down buildings and blowing up mines as formerly, and charging it to the strikers, as has been proven was done in days of injunction, all they have to do is to plant a small phial of liquor on a man who is striking for living wage or against a great wrong and charge contempt. He goes to jail by the injunction route without trial by jury. He is hauled up with an injunction and you take him into the court, and you——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GARLAND. The gentleman is trying to shut me off.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The point of order is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not speaking on anything that is before the House.

Mr. GARLAND. I am speaking of one of the things in this bill that the gentleman from Minnesota and others will have to answer for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to a discussion of the striking out of the last word.

Mr. GARLAND. I am confining myself to the striking out of the last word.

I say this bill has arranged a means whereby the police can break up any strike in the United States. You set these Huns of the law loose to prey on men on strike. I warn you to be careful. You are nearing a great crisis. Congress is made up of about 90 per cent lawyers, and lawyers seem to have in this instance lost sight of the real issue and thought only of the lawyer. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] urged that it was necessary to have an enactment of this bill for the reason that he could not get a conviction from a jury of 12 honest men. This statement confronts us with the fact that the belief of the lawyer is that the law must be so made that he can convict even against the judgment of 12 disinterested, honest men—a case of 1 man being right and 12 men being wrong. By this law conviction only is considered, without respect to right or to innocence. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] said that these little differences, he hoped, will be fixed up over in the Senate. Is this the kind of legislation that this House is enacting? Do we legislate with the idea of having the Senate fix up our legislation? It looks like it. No wonder the people throughout the country sneer at the action of the House and say, "The Senate will have to correct those mistakes."

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is speaking about the Senate dictating legislation?

Mr. GARLAND. No; about the Senate correcting our legislation.

Mr. WINGO. If rumor is correct, the Senate is dictating, and your party, in charge of the Senate, is responsible.

Mr. GARLAND. Oh, no. But I say, go on, if you will, drive into the gulf, if you want to; but, I say, have a care for the consequences.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the same request. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, there has been plenty of opportunity offered to these gentlemen to give expression to their opinions, and I now object, and will object to every request hereafter to extend remarks.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to revise the remarks that I made a few moments ago upon this section, on page 30—only to revise, not to extend.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have no objection to that, and I desire to withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], because I understand he spoke and simply asked permission to revise the remarks which he made. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. No request is pending. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SABATH. I made the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the interest of good construction of the language of the bill. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to this amendment. In lines 24 and 25 I move to strike out the words "and all persons" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "persons," so that it will read:

And to permit any persons desiring to do so—because the word "persons" certainly includes all persons.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: In lines 24 and 25, on page 30, strike out the words "and all persons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "persons."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. That all provisions of law that are inconsistent with this act are only repealed to the extent of such inconsistency and the regulations herein provided for the manufacture or traffic in intoxicating liquor shall be construed as in addition to existing laws. This act shall not relieve anyone from paying any taxes or other charges imposed upon the manufacture or traffic in such liquor. No liquor revenue stamps or tax receipts for any illegal manufacture or sale shall be issued in advance, but upon evidence of such illegal manufacture or sale such tax shall be assessed in double the amount now provided by law, with an additional penalty of $500 on retail dealers and $1,000 on manufacturers. The payment of such tax or penalty shall give no right to engage in the manufacture or sale of such liquor, or relieve anyone from criminal liability, nor shall this act relieve any person from any liability, civil or criminal, heretofore or hereafter incurred under existing laws.

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil cause arising under this title before bringing action in court; and with the approval of the Attorney General he may compromise any such cause after action thereon has been commenced.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said in the course of this debate in reference to the "drastic provisions" of this measure. This is simply a culmination of what has been taking place in the United States for many years preceding this time. This is no sudden conclusion arrived at by the American people, because we can all remember when this question began to be considered many years ago, and the movement has grown in volume from then until the American people made up their minds that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors shall cease. The result of that determination was the adoption of the eighteenth amendment for national prohibition, and this bill is intended to enact provisions of law to enforce that amendment which is now a part of the Constitution and thereby secure nation-wide prohibition.

This measure is not so much to "regulate" the liquor traffic as it is intended to "prohibit" it in accordance with the will of the American people as expressed in the eighteenth amendment which has been adopted, showing the sentiment existing among the people of the United States. Forty-five States out of the 48 in the Union promptly ratified this amendment in one-seventh of the time which was given within which ratification should take place. Mississippi was the first State to ratify the eighteenth amendment.

As a further evidence of the sentiment of the American peopeople, we have the expressions and votes of Members of Congress on this floor reflecting the desires of their constituents at home. Therefore, my friends, there is no question or doubt that the people of the United States desire a measure which shall be sufficient in force and strength to enforce this eighteenth amendment to such an extent as to prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, and dealing in intoxicating liquors throughout this country from one end of it to the other.

It is the purpose and object of this bill to accomplish that result, and if it is enacted into law I believe that result will follow, and when it does follow then the wishes of the American people will be carried out. For that reason I do not believe the criticisms which have been voiced upon the floor of this House so often, that it is too drastic and extreme, are well founded. On the contrary, its provisions are intended only for the purpose which I have indicated.

It is true that some of the provisions of the bill are drastic. It is true that they are in some respects extreme, but we who have observed in times past the means adopted by those engaged in the liquor traffic unlawfully, in order to accomplish their purposes, know that it is necessary that drastic measures should be enacted in order to bring about the desired result. The men engaged in the unlawful liquor traffic move in doubtful and devious and submarine ways in order to accomplish their purposes. Therefore, it is necessary to deal with them with an iron hand in order to thwart them and in order that the American people may have their way instead of the liquor-selling minority having their way.

I do not criticize the gentlemen upon the floor of this House who have furnished the opposition to this bill. I have no doubt they voice their own sentiments and the sentiments of the people whom they represent. Therefore they are performing their duty as they see it, and some amendments have been offered by some of these gentlemen at different places in this bill which have resulted in good legislation. Therefore I do not criticize them, and I have no unkind words for them. But when we do not criticize them, why should they so often criticize us who differ with them and who believe that this eighteenth amendment should be enforced by a law which has real enforcing power in it and which will bring about the result intended to be accomplished in the enactment of it and in the placing of it on the statute books. What the people want is prohibition, and that is what we intend to secure by the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. HULINGS. I move to amend the motion.

Mr. SABATH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Mississippi was recognized in favor of his motion and spoke five minutes. Am I not, or some other Member, entitled to five minutes to oppose his motion?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the time for debate is limited by some action of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. The time was not limited and the gentleman was recognized in favor of the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi made a pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Minnesota moved that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed, and that motion is in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by fixing the time for debate at 10 minutes, and I want 5 minutes of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota making the time 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to close debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. That if any provision of this act shall be held invalid it shall not be construed to invalidate other provisions of the act.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any occasion to discuss this section, and I move that all debate on the section and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. WALSH. That is not in order before there has been any debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], whom the House so greatly honors and on many occasions has delighted to follow——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think that speaking well of the gentleman from California is out of order?

Mr. SABATH. No; but the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. HULINGS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULINGS. I would like to know how the gentleman from Michigan got his place on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan was demanding recognition and no one on the floor asked for recognition and the Chair recognized him.

Mr. HULINGS. But the motion was to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was made and sustained, and therefore the Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SABATH. For what purpose was the gentleman from Michigan recognized?

Mr. CRAMTON. I move to strike out the section, Mr. Chairman. Section 38 provides that if any provision of this act shall be held invalid it shall not be construed to invalidate other provisions of the act.

A few days ago the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], speaking upon this floor, discussing the relation of prohibition to crime, stated it to be his opinion that prohibition legislation leads to lawlessness, and quoted certain figures with reference to conditions in the city of Washington, D. C.

It is not my desire now to discuss that question at length, further than to call the attention of the House to the fact that the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] has well demonstrated that crime has not increased under prohibition in the city of Washington. But it seems to me that the inquiry of the gentleman from California ought to be carried forward, and in addition to considering Washington, where prohibition had been in effect before the 1st of July, to consider in the way of comparison——

Mr. SABATH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor and the gentleman can not take him off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SABATH. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. I submit to the Chair whether the gentleman from Michigan is confining his remarks to the amendment striking out the section.

Mr. CRAMTON. Section 38 has a very important relation to the enforcement of this legislation and to its validity. But in connection with that it is to be considered whether legislation of this kind should be enacted that is valid and what its effect on the country will be. In connection with that I would like to call the attention of the House to the conditions of crime in a city similar to Washington where prohibition has not been in effect. A gentleman told me that he could not imagine three cities being dry—New York, New Orleans, and San Francisco. Therefore, I want to call attention to an article from the San Francisco Chronicle of July 12, the day the gentleman from California spoke in this House.

I do not want to weary the House with reading the article, but I will put it in the RECORD, if permitted. The article, in brief, shows that in San Francisco for the year ending June 30, 1919, there were 4,278 cases of burglary, while in 1918 there were 3,398, an increase of something like 30 per cent. That, in a wet city, with all the booze that anybody wanted. Attempted burglaries in 1919, 234, and in 1918, 138; robberies in 1919, 807, and in 1918, 578. Attempted robberies in 1919, 82; in 1918, 57; grand larcenies in 1919, 1,366, and in 1918, 1,132; embezzlements in 1919, 160, and in 1918, 157. Property loss by crime increased from $267,000 in 1918 to $357,000 in 1919.

I will not weary you with reading the rest of this, but in order to be fair I think the full statement should appear in the RECORD. But, gentlemen, I make this prophecy, that while prohibition was not to blame for that increase of crime during the last year, that in 1920 the city of San Francisco will show a decrease in crime due to prohibition. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. SABATH. I object.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GALLIVAN) there were—ayes 4, noes 48.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the count indicates that there is no quorum present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-eight Members present, a quorum.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. That nothing herein shall prevent the storage in United States bonded warehouses in the custody of a United States collector of internal revenue of all liquors manufactured prior to the taking effect of this act, or to prevent the transportation of such liquor for purposes not prohibited when the tax is paid.

A manufacturer of any beverage containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume may, on making application and giving such bond as the commissioner shall prescribe, be given a permit to develop in the manufacture thereof a liquid containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, but before any such liquid is withdrawn from the factory or otherwise disposed of the alcoholic contents thereof shall under such rules and regulations as the commissioner may prescribe be reduced below such one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. The alcohol removed from such liquid, if evaporated and not condensed and saved, shall pay no tax; if saved, shall be subject to the same law as other alcoholic liquors.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: After the word "liquor," in line 17, page 32, insert the words "to such warehouses or any wholesale druggist for sale to such druggist," and at the end of line 18, page 32, insert the words "and permits may be issued therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in line 16, page 32, I move to strike out the word "to" at the end of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 32, line 16, strike out the word "to" at the end of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEELE: Page 32, line 23, after the word "liquid," insert the following: "such as beer, ale, porter, or wine."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is simply to clarify the provision which relates only to beverages on line 19, and to define the beverages that are intended by that section. This amendment meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee. I am authorized to state that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 32, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEELE: After the word "liquors" and the period, on page 33, line 6, insert the following: "The words 'beer, ale, porter, or wine' mentioned in section 1 of this title shall not be construed as included in the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' where they contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, but none of the liquors mentioned in section 1 shall be sold for beverage purposes under the names therein mentioned, and the burden of truth shall be upon the one selling such beverage to show the same contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is also to clarify this section, and also the first section. There was some doubt whether the absolute prohibitive words did not apply to those beverages that contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, and this is intended to remove that doubt. This meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is the same language——

Mr. STEELE. Identically the same agreed upon.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Prohibits the sale under the name of beer, ale, and wine, and so forth.

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 49, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 32, lines 14 and 15, I move to strike out the words "in the custody of a United States collector of internal revenue."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 32, line 14, after the word "warehouses," strike out the words "in the custody of a United States collector of internal revenue."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there are two classes of United States bonded warehouses. One is for distilled spirits manufactured in this country and the other is for imported distilled spirits. Neither, however, is in the custody of a United States collector of internal revenue. The collector of internal revenue recommends to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the assignment of a United States storekeeper and gauger, who shall have custody of a warehouse. As a matter of fact, he does not have exclusive control of the warehouse. The control or right of entry to the warehouse is in the hands of both the United States and the owner of the warehouse. There is no such warehouse in existence as "a United States bonded warehouse in the custody of the United States collector of internal revenue." Therefore I move to strike out those words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer another amendment. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota, who is in charge of this bill, to the last line and a half of the section, which is found on page 33 in lines 5 and 6. The language is as follows:

The alcohol removed from such liquid, if evaporated and not condensed and saved, shall pay no tax; if saved, shall be subject to the same law as other alcoholic liquors.

"Other alcoholic liquors," as mentioned in this bill and in existing laws, are divided into two parts, some that pay taxes and some that do not pay taxes. Therefore the language "and other alcoholic liquors" is not quite clear. I believe it would be clear, however, if the saved alcohol were taxed as distilled spirits are now taxed. "Alcoholic liquors" and "distilled spirits" under this plan are made to be two different things. Alcohol is distilled spirits, but all distilled spirits is not alcohol. I invite the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the language as it now is, to say that it is meaningless, that it may or may not be taxed, but it certainly should be taxed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Some might pay tax and some might not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the trouble. You say "and other alcoholic liquors," but if you were to say "as other alcoholic liquors are taxed," that might save it.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. COOPER. Would not the words "subject to tax" after the word "liquors" cover that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it would.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. WALSH. By putting in the words "subject to tax" there you certainly would not say——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I do not think that would make it. I will say in answer to the gentleman that I now agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. I do not think that would cure it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. What I had in mind in drafting it—and I was somewhat responsible for this language, though I am not for all in this bill—was that it occurred to me that there are some liquors subject to tax and some that are not, and each depended upon the use. Now, we simply say it shall be subject to the same law as other alcoholic liquors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe if the gentleman would insert the word "taxable" between "other" and "alcoholic" that would cure it, "as other taxable alcoholic liquors."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But may not be taxed. Suppose it is withdrawn to use for denaturing purposes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If it is "saved," it ought to be taxed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But it does not need to be taxed. Suppose it is used as denatured alcohol?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me invite the gentleman's attention to the whole text of the paragraph.

The alcohol removed from such liquids, if evaporated and not condensed and saved, shall pay no tax.

Now, let me read the alternative.

"If saved, shall be subject to the same law as other alcoholic liquors.

I submit the proposition to the gentleman and he can do as he pleases.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it is all right.

Mr. Chairman, in line 15, on page 32, I move to strike out the word "liquors" and insert the word "liquor." We have tried to preserve that all the way through, and there is a reason for it. We define "liquor" in the first part of the bill, but we do not define "liquors."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 32, line 15, at the end of the line strike out the word "liquors" and insert the word "liquor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate going on here with exemplary patience during all these windy days. I have sought to obtain the floor many times to speak on matters that are now decided, and I feel a good deal like the man who went down to the pool of Siloam, who always found somebody else that preceded him. I do not, however, mean to say that this House is anything like the pool of Siloam, because the pool of Siloam was supposed to be a sacred place of healing. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a bill to abolish the alcoholic liquor traffic. The people of this country have decreed that this traffic shall be abolished. Complaint is made that this bill is too drastic. I confess there are some features in it I do not like. I do not like the provision that judges may summarily punish for contempt not committed in the presence of the court. I think the meanest and poorest citizen in the country, before being deprived of his liberty or his property, shall be entitled to the right of trial by jury. I do not like very much the idea that some men of means can stock up with these liquors and have the liquor in their homes protected while the poor fellow, by reason of circumstances can not do it, is obliged to go dry, and I tell you that that will create more prejudice against this bill than any other one thing in it; but, Mr. Chairman, 90 per cent of the people of this country are law-abiding citizens. They will obey the law whenever they know what it is. There is no trouble about that, but this legislation unfortunately must be directed against citizens of the United States who as a class are notorious lawbreakers, and your law must reach them or your legislation will be of no avail at all. If this bill should be too drastic, and I believe that it is in some particulars, the law-abiding people of this country can change it in a legal orderly way and in the meantime, unless you provide the agents of the law with rakes with teeth in them you never will catch these lawbreakers. There is no such thing as conscience in a bootlegger or the keeper of a blind tiger; you can not appeal to their patriotism or public spirit, and those are the people you have got to reach in this prohibitory legislation. The rest of the country is law-abiding and will submit to the law until it can be legally changed. You will have no trouble with them at all. Satisfied that unusual, even drastic, remedies must be provided yet, I have supported many of the amendments of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] because I believed they were in the way of making a more reasonable bill for the enforcement of the constitutional amendment and less liable to prejudice. Those amendments for the most part have been thrown aside. The spirit of this House is not favorable, and therefore I have subordinated my own judgment as to many of the details because I am in favor of the real purpose of the House, and that is to pass an act that will prohibit. [Applause.]

I have never been a party Prohibitionist nor even claimed to be a total abstainer, but I have always been in favor of abolishing the traffic. Local option has been tried, State prohibition has been tried, and now the public sentiment of the whole country demands that the traffic be cut out, root and branch, and I believe this bill will do it.

Mr BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Ten minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin, a member of the committee, wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. CLASSON. Mr. Chairman, page 33, line 5, after the second word "saved," in that line, insert the word "it."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLASSON: Page 33, line 5, after the word "saved," where it occurs the second time, insert the word "it."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend that by making it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment to close debate in 10 minutes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes semed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for tellers.

Mr. DYER. I will give the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw it, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that debate close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia and Mr. HUSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 33, line 5, after the word "shall," strike out the words "pay no" and insert the words "not be subject to."

Mr. HUSTED. The object of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is simply to perfect the text and to make good English. The bill as it reads provides that the alcohol shall pay the tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. To make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The committee just closed debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee closed debate in five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman from Texas did not——

Mr. DYER. I yielded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. WINGO. One gentleman must be recognized, and he is recognized for five minutes only.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman consumed but one minute.

All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby respectively authorized to appoint and employ such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees as they may deem necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as may be required for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 33, line 10, after the word "employees," insert "and to purchase such supplies and equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this amendment that I have offered carries out the intention of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia and Mr. IGOE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. IGOE. I desire to offer an amendment as a new section. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to speak to this present section?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Then I will withhold.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, on July 11, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] while discussing the bill now under consideration, stated in substance that should this bill become a law, then under its authority policemen could come in "as they did in the State of Virginia, when they entered trains and ransacked the wardrobes of women." His exact language referring to the agents enforcing the prohibition law in Virginia was that "they entered trains, ransacked the wardrobes of women, and committed assaults which bordered on indecency."

I wish to say in this connection that the gentleman from Massachusetts is absolutely mistaken in this reference to conditions in my State. There have been no incidents in Virginia of policemen ransacking the wardrobes of lady passengers, or committing assaults that bordered on indecency. We have been engaged in vigorous efforts to enforce the law of our State against illegal shipment of intoxicating spirits partly from Boston and partly from Baltimore. In utter defiance of the law an organized band of conspirators has endeavored to smuggle whisky into Virginia. Some of it has come into Virginia by train, and automobile through Alexandria, and by the highways from Maryland into Virginia. Large consignments have also come into Norfolk and Richmond by water. I am glad to say in this connection that we have secured the arrest and punishment of many of the parties engaged in the unlawful traffic. But there have been in Virginia no assaults bordering on indecency as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] has given us at times very pathetic descriptions of the conditions that in his judgment will exist in his own and other States, as soon as national prohibition becomes effective, I think I will put into the RECORD a few extracts from the Christian Science Monitor, one of the most conservative, accurate, and reliable newspapers in the United States, and published I believe in Boston. These statements relate to the effect of war-time prohibition in Massachusetts, and particularly in Boston. The statement which I now read is very interesting, and is taken from the Monitor of yesterday:

The decline in arrests for drunkenness was the first effect of prohibition generally noticeable. In Boston, for example, the number of such arrests on a day just before prohibition became effective was 412. A week later, approximately, the city court, which had almost daily since July 1 set new low records for drunkenness cases, had only one such case.

It seems to me that that is a very satisfactory showing for prohibition, even in Boston. A further item that I will read in this connection is from Bridgewater, Mass. The headlines of this citation are: "Dry law reduces jail inmates; must hire help." I read:

BRIDGEWATER, MASS., July 20.

Prohibition is playing havoc with the State prison farm.

In the two weeks before prohibition went into effect 54 men were sentenced to "the farm" for drunkenness, while only 15 have been sent there since July 1. As a result the shortage in prisoners has cut down the laboring force, and it has been necessary to hire workers.

Does the gentleman from Boston object to a reduction in the number of the inmates at the prison farm of his State, even if that reduction is a by-product of prohibition?

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman tell us how about the conditions in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is as cognizant of conditions in the District of Columbia as I am, and if he desires can put the facts as to those conditions in the RECORD. Indeed they have already been put into the RECORD very effectively. One more citation from the Christian Science Monitor:

The second noticeable effect has been, as mentioned, the decrease in crimes involving cruelty. In some cities a noticeable diminution of industrial and other accidents has been reported. It has been the rule that in the past many automobile accidents were due to intoxication on the part of the chauffeur or of a pedestrian. Recently, in this city, the statue of Edward Everett was badly damaged by an automobile the driver of which, it is alleged, was intoxicated.

FURTHER DECREASES EXPECTED.

Once prohibition becomes habitual, police officers believe, there will be a decrease in major as well as minor crimes. In Boston the pawnbrokers' business has fallen off, because men are not pawning goods for money with which to buy liquor and their wives are not forced to seek the pawnshop's aid after the husbands have squandered their pay on liquor. The effect generally, it is believed, will be to make the wage-earner's money go further, to stimulate thrift, to promote the purchase of useful articles, such as clothing and household furniture, and, by relieving economic stress and improper living conditions in many families, to remove incentives to crime.

Many merchants, for example, say that after the country has become adjusted to prohibition they expect a large increase in trade. A part of the money that once went over the bar will go over the store counter and the rest will go into the bank. Buffalo stores, in particular, are making extensive preparations for a deluge of trade within the next few months.

These positive and immediate effects of prohibition, testified to in such emphatic terms by a leading newspaper of Boston, should not, I submit, be regarded as other than desirable, even by the most ardent and enthusiastic antiprohibitionists. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 40.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, there is a committee amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURKE: Page 33, line 7, strike out all of section 40.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I again go on record in opposition to this bill, because it goes to extremes and is too drastic in effect. A bill like this, with its search-and-seizure clause, its denial of the right to a trial by jury, is un-American. Instead of gaining support, it is losing ground, and the eyes of the Nation are watching Congress and its action on this measure. Advocates of prohibition are not for some of its features, because we are Americans first.

No one man or set of men has the right to thrust upon the people of this country a bill or law that violates every vestige of American freedom and outrages every sense of justice. We attempt with this bill to do things that are repugnant to every true-minded American. It has been said that you want to put teeth in the bill. Well, it has teeth, and its claws are pretty sharp, but it does not seem as though its creators had cut their wisdom teeth or were in very close touch with the sentiment of the American people.

A bill like this would be all right emanating under a government of tyranny, but it has no place and no right in a country which has a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

It is laws like these that make for Bolshevism, and the men that would seek to thrust such laws upon the people of this country or any country are responsible for lawlessness. You take away from the people a cherished right given them by the Constitution of the United States, and you can not expect anything else but discontent and dissatisfaction. Even those opposed to drink are not in sympathy with the severe features of this bill.

America is looked upon as the guiding lamp of the world. She has been the haven of the oppressed and the dispenser of justice to all. Her light has shone with such a brilliancy that the name "America" stands for all that is great and glorious. The people of this great Nation believe her a divine institution. They will see that the things she stands for and represents will not be crushed; that laws will not be enacted that will make of her justice a mockery and of her brilliancy a faded light.

Let this Congress take heed of public sentiment; public sentiment is against making the name of American liberty and American justice a byword; it is against establishing fanatic rule for American rule; it is against taking away from men the inherent rights they possess under American laws—the right to be innocent until proven guilty, and the American right of an American trial by an American jury. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close in five minutes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Missouri moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the gentleman's motion by making it 10 minutes. I have an amendment here that I want to have considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York amends the motion of the gentleman from Missouri by substituting 10 minutes for 5 minutes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 51.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, five Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Mr. SIEGEL. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-nine Members present, a quorum. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have another amendment, which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will be given an opportunity to offer his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 33, line 11, after the word "act," insert "but such clerks and other employees shall be appointed under the rules and regulations prescribed by the civil service act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 90, noes 17.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 33, line 11, after the word "act," insert "Provided, That the commissioner and Attorney General in making such appointments shall give preference to those who have served in the military or naval service in the recent war if otherwise qualified."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, there are a number——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the time was limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no debate since the time was fixed by the committee, and five minutes remain.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment would simply give the boys who served in the recent war a preference in this employment if otherwise qualified.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman want to include the marines?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do, and the words "naval service" are meant to include the marines.

Mr. BLANTON. Those words do not include them.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, yes. The words "naval service" have always been understood to include the marines. Under no conditions would I except them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Recently at this session of Congress we adopted a provision, which is now the law, which provides that preference shall be given to these soldiers, sailors, and marines in all appointments in the Government service, either here in Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. SIEGEL. That will probably be held to apply to those acts passed previous to that one.

Mr. DYER. Oh, no; to all acts.

Mr. SIEGEL. If so, what objection is there to putting this provision in this act?

Mr. DYER. It is not necessary.

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentleman from Missouri is mistaken. Many of these boys have come back with arms and legs gone and otherwise disqualified to obtain employment. If we are going to have men to enforce this law certainly these men who have been in the military and naval service, if otherwise qualified, should be given a preference. That is the least Congress can do for them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman believe what has been stated, that all these returned soldiers are against prohibition?

Mr. SIEGEL. Many, if not all, of them are against prohibition, but I am certain that regardless of whether they are for or against prohibition they will enforce the law as you put it on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. COADY. What is the probability of the gentleman's amendment eliminating very many of these Anti-Saloon League advocates?

Mr. SIEGEL. It may, but time will tell that story. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. I rise to a point of order. Under the rules of the House, when operating under the 5-minute rule, if a Member is recognized for 5 minutes, even though debate has been limited to a particular time—5, 10, or 15 minutes—that Member can not yield any part of the 5 minutes. He can not reserve it, he can not transfer it. When the gentleman yields the floor, that time expires. I think if the Chair will consult the parliamentarian he will find that that has been decided time and again, and decided at this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. This question was raised a short time ago in the consideration of this bill; and the Chair, without consulting the authorities, held that the five minutes could be consumed by any Member of the House; but upon making a more thorough investigation the Chair finds that a contrary ruling has been made at this session of Congress and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 6 for this purpose: There has been some question as to what ought to be done in regard to the power to provide wine for sacramental purposes. Various parties have been consulted, and we have agreed on a provision that ought to be inserted if there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 12, section 6, to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, why not get through with the bill first?

Mr. WALSH. This belongs in this title.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Reserving the right to object, if we go back to section 6 would it deprive one of the privilege of offering a new section under Title II as section 41?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, add a new section as section 41, as follows:
"That nothing in this title shall be construed to prohibit the making and keeping on one's own premises wine or cider or cordials made from apples, berries, or fruits for the use and personal consumption in the home, not to exceed 5 gallons at any one time."

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. BARKLEY made points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the ground of the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not germane and not in accordance with the purpose contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nothing in this title shall be held to apply to the manufacture, sale, importation, possession, or distribution of wine for sacramental purposes, except sections 6 and 10 hereof and the sections of this act prescribing penalties for the violation of either of said sections. No person to whom a permit may be issued to manufacture, import, or sell wines for sacramental purposes shall sell, barter, exchange, or give any such to any person not a rabbi, minister of the gospel, or priest, nor to any such except upon an application duly subscribed by him and indorsed by an official specially designated for such purpose, by the head of the conference or diocese or other ecclesiastical jurisdiction in which he is officiating, which application shall be filed and preserved by the seller. The head of any conference or diocese or other ecclesiastical jurisdiction may designate any rabbi, minister, or priest to supervise the manufacture of wine to be used for sacramental purposes, and the person so designated shall be entitled to a permit, to be issued by the commissioner, authorizing him so to supervise such manufacture: Provided, however, That the foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to any officer, minister, priest, or rabbi of any church or religious organization who is unwilling or unable to comply with the same, but such officer, minister, priest, or rabbi may manufacture, purchase, possess, and use wine for sacramental purposes under permits issued under and subject to the provisions of this title.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it, and the ayes had it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there was no negative vote, and the Chair said that the ayes seemed to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a good deal of confusion in the House, and the Chair was not sure that there were no negative votes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were 98 ayes and no noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VENABLE: Insert as a new section the following:
"That in all cases where the property of any citizen is proceeded against, or wherein a judgment affecting it might be rendered and the citizen is not the one who in person violated the provisions of the law, summons must be issued in due form and served personally if said person is to be found within the jurisdiction of the court."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VENABLE) there were—ayes 26, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks upon this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, if he is going to insert any newspaper extracts about what Lady Somerset said, I shall object.

Mr. SABATH. I merely desire to straighten out the remarks that I made.

Mr. WALSH. I object if the gentleman does not care to answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I think all should be treated alike, and I suggest they take the matter up in the House instead of in the committee. I object to all such requests.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to suggest that we have added two sections, and there ought to be authority given to renumber the sections.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III.

INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL.

That when used in this title—
The term "alcohol" means that substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirit of wine, from whatever source or whatever processes produced.
The term "container" includes any receptacle, vessel, or form of package, tank, or conduit used or capable of use for holding, storing, transferring, or shipment of alcohol.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, in line 17, before the word "that," the words "Section 1."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 32, line 17, before the word "that," insert the words "Section 1."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDUSTRIAL-ALCOHOL PLANTS AND WAREHOUSES.

SEC. 2. That any person now producing alcohol shall, within 30 days after the passage of this act, make application for registration as proprietor of an industrial-alcohol plant, and as soon thereafter as practicable the premises shall be bonded and permit may issue for the operation of such plant, and any person hereafter establishing a plant for the production of alcohol shall likewise before operation make application, file bond, and receive permit, except that no manufacturer of vinegar under section 3282 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall be required to register as the proprietor of an industrial-alcohol plant.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, on page 34, the language commencing, in line 9, with the words "except that." This amendment was not put on by the committee. It was offered and pending, and by mistake the Clerk included it in the bill. There is another provision covering this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 34, line 9, strike out the words "except that" and all of lines 10, 11, and 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. What did the gentleman say about that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This was never agreed to by the committee. By mistake it was put into the bill. There is another provision, on page 37, covering this subject.

Mr. GARD. This is a proper provision, is it not, as it exists?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know what the object is, and there is no necessity of putting it in. We never agreed to it.

Mr. GARD. My impression is that it was considered by the committee and put in, though I may be mistaken.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was not.

Mr. WALSH. It was put in by mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 34, line 4, before the words "for registration," I move to insert the words "to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 34, line 4, after the word "application," insert the words "to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will note, on page 7, line 18, the word "commissioner" is defined to mean the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I suggest if the gentleman will just insert the word "commissioner"——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I accept the amendment. Strike out the words "of Internal Revenue," so that the amendment will read, "Make application to the commissioner for registration, and so forth."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 4, after the word "application," insert "to the commissioner."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language used in section 2 and also in section 4. Section 2, which is now under consideration, reads:

That any person now producing alcohol shall, within 30 days after the passage of this act, make application to the commissioner for registration as proprietor of an industrial alcohol plant—

And so forth. Then down in section 4 I find this language:

That alcohol produced at any registered industrial alcohol plant,—

And so forth. By the language in section 2 the proprietor of an industrial plant is registered and not the plant itself, while in section 4, at the bottom of the page, the plant is registered and not the proprietor. It has been the rule throughout all legislation concerning this subject to have the plant registered, and I believe that the language in section 2 should be changed to conform with the language in section 4.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This language was drawn by the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—the whole of this title, with very few exceptions—and there is practically no change of the language at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue only recently took that office, and it has been physically impossible for him to acquaint himself with the law upon this subject, and I believe it has been impossible for him to have acquainted himself fully with the provisions of this bill. Now, it was drawn by somebody in the office who was not any better prepared to prepare a bill than the gentleman from Minnesota or myself.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman, I think, will move to strike out the words "as proprietor" in line 4 of section 2, that would meet the situation, and it ought to be done I am sure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, line 4, section 2, the words "as proprietor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 34, line 4, strike out the words "as proprietor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 33, line 15, insert a new section, section 41——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention of the gentleman to the fact we have passed Title II and are now reading Title III of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. I did not know we had passed that, and I ask unanimous consent to return——

Mr. DYER. I will object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, further to clarify the language of section 2 I move, on page 34, line 4, after the word "registration," to insert the words "of his plant."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CURRIE of Michigan: Page 34, line 4, after the word "registration," insert the words "of his plant."

Mr. GARD. Can not we have that amendment read. There seems to be some confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan will be again read.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GARD. May we not have the language as it now exists read?

The Clerk read as follows:

So that it will read, "That any person now producing alcohol shall, within 30 days after the passage of this act, make application to the commissioner for registration of his plant, as proprietor of an industrial-alcohol plant——

Mr. RAKER. That is already stricken out by the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I want the word "as" to follow the word "plant," so the amendment will read——

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Would it not be better for these gentlemen, in order to avoid confusion, to put their amendments in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk in writing.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we consider some other amendment while the gentleman is doing that.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, I believe this language will be clear if in line 4, page 34, we strike out the word "an" and insert the word "his."

Mr. WINGO. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he change the word "of" to the word "as."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the other amendment withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered previously. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CURRIE of Michigan: Page 34, line 4, strike out the word "an" and insert the word "his."

Mr. GARD. May we have it reported as it is amended? It is impossible to follow the text.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CURRIE of Michigan: On page 34, line 4, after the word "of," strike out the word "an" and insert the word "his," so that the paragraph will read:

"That any person now producing alcohol shall, within 30 days after the passage of this act, make application to the commissioner for registration of his industrial-alcohol plant."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The amendment that was presented by the gentleman from Michigan was withdrawn?

Mr. DYER. It was modified as last reported.

Mr. RAKER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CURRIE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That warehouses for the storage and distribution of alcohol exclusively for other than beverage purposes may be established upon filing of application and bond, and issuance of permit at such places, either in connection with the manufacturing plant or elsewhere, as the commissioner may determine; and the entry and storage of alcohol therein and the withdrawals of alcohol therefrom shall be made in such containers and by such means as regulations may prescribe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what is meant by the expression "such means," in line 20?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That may mean by a pipe line; it may mean by a trunk or almost anything. Under present regulations and under a good many of the statutory provisions, it is very difficult to transfer from one place to another, and almost impossible, and this is with a view of liberalizing it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In line 14, after the word "alcohol," does not the gentleman think the words "to be used" should be inserted, so that it will read: "That warehouses for the storage and distribution of alcohol to be used exclusively for other than beverage purposes," and so forth?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would not object to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 34, line 14, after the word "alcohol," insert the words "to be used."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That alcohol produced at any registered industrial-alcohol plant or stored in any bonded warehouse may be transferred under regulations to any other registered industrial-alcohol plant or bonded warehouse for any lawful purpose.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I would like to ask the chairman a question. Alcohol has been described in the preceding section very minutely. Here it is simply "alcohol." Does the gentleman want any qualifying words such as "for beverage purposes"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The word "alcohol" is defined in the title.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Section 3 carries those definitions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any distilled spirits produced and fit for beverage purposes remaining in any bonded warehouse on or before January 16, 1920, may, under regulations, be withdrawn therefrom either for denaturation at any bonded denaturing plant or for deposit in a bonded warehouse established under this act; and when so withdrawn, if not suitable as to proof, purity, or quality for other than beverage purposes, such distilled spirits shall be redistilled, purified, and changed in proof so as to render such spirits suitable for other purposes, and having been so treated may thereafter be denatured or sold in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in line 16, after the word "therefrom," I move to insert the words "and transported."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 35, line 16, after the word "therefrom," insert the words "and transported."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think we ought to insert those. There is no limitation upon the transportation of this. This is industrial alcohol, and I do not think we ought to mention it specially, because it ought to come under the general regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SABATH. I do so for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. There is no provision that I see in the bill as to such alcohol after January 16, 1920. It says, "In any bonded warehouse on or before January 16, 1920."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know whether I correctly heard the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SABATH. This section provides what can be done with the alcohol remaining in the bonded warehouse on or before January 16, 1920, but there is no provision there that any alcohol or spirits that remain in the bonded warehouse after January 16, 1920, can be rectified or redistilled.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is a provision in here that it may be rectified or redistilled, but there is no more to be produced except for medical and medicinal purposes.

Mr. SABATH. But it says "on or before January 16, 1920," and there is nothing after that date.

Mr. DYER. There will not be any after that date, because the amendment goes into effect then.

Mr. SABATH. You still may have some spirits in the warehouse after that date.

Mr. DYER. It must be in the warehouse before that date. It can not be put in after January 16, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FESS). The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That industrial alcohol plants and bonded warehouses established under the provisions of this title shall be exempt from the provisions of sections 3154, 3244, 3258, 3259, 3260, 3263, 3264, 3266, 3267, 3268, 3269, 3271, 3273, 3274, 3275, 3279, 3280, 3283, 3284, 3285, 3286, 3287, 3288, 3289, 3290, 3291, 3292, 3293, 3294, 3295, 3302, 3303, 3307, 3308, 3309, 3310, 3311, 3312, 3313, 3314, and 3327 of the Revised Statutes; sections 48 to 60, inclusive, and sections 62 and 67 of the act of August 27, 1894 (28 Stats., 563–568).

Regulations may be made embodying any provision of the sections above enumerated.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORDNEY: Page 36, line 23, strike out the period after the word "enumerated" and insert the following: "and from such other provisions of existing laws relating to distilleries and bonded warehouses as may by regulations be declared inapplicable to industrial alcohol plants and bonded warehouses established under this act."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that that makes any sense. Regulations may be made embodying any provision of the sections above enumerated, and then it goes on to say, "That upon the filing of application and bond," and so forth.

Mr. FORDNEY. The alcohol manufacturers requested me to introduce that amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the gentleman that it makes no sense in the place where it is offered as the last part of section 9.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman offer it as a separate paragraph or separate section?

Mr. FORDNEY. No, sir. I offer it as an amendment to that section.

Mr. GARD. It does not follow the text.

Mr. DYER. I suggest to the gentleman that the proper place is at the end of line 21. That is where it should go.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not object to having it put there. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment inserted at the end of line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the amendment be inserted at the end of line 21. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read, to be inserted at the end of line 21, page 36.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we ought to put that in, because it seems to me that it delegates to the commissioner the power to repeal existing law. There is a general rule well recognized that allows Congress to delegate power to determine some fact upon the finding of which an enactment becomes operative. But we must make the law. We can not delegate the power to legislate. This, it seems to me, leaves to the commissioner the power to say what part of existing law shall remain in force and what not without laying down any rule from which it can be determined with any certainty what is law and what is not. There was a provision substantially of this kind in the bill that we struck out in the consideration of it in the committee.

Mr. DYER. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, we struck it out in the committee because the gentleman from Minnesota stated it was going into the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means; that it was their business to repeal statutes affecting the revenue. This does not repeal any statute at all. It only makes certain provisions of the Revised Statutes inapplicable to provisions of this law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; that was not the reason at all. The committee discussed it, and the same objection that I am raising to it now was raised in the committee; that is, that it delegates to the commissioner power to legislate. As I view it, it does not come within the rules under which we may delegate power. We may delegate the finding of a fact and declare that upon such finding the law as we declare it shall become operative.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to be adopted. There is nothing objectionable in it. It only makes it inapplicable to industrial alcohol, and I know every Member of this House is anxious to encourage that great industry which is now trying to get a foothold in America for the first time. Germany has had this industry for many years, while we in this country are but beginning to get started.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. DYER. I refuse to yield to the gentleman to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that the gentleman from Michigan offered his amendment, the Chair recognized him, and he has not been given an opportunity to present his amendment.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Michigan yielded the floor.

Mr. FORDNEY. I presented the amendment and yielded to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this industry is engaged in the manufacture of industrial alcohol for heat, for light, for power, and many other important uses. It is absolutely necessary in hospitals and chemical laboratories, and is used in the home in many ways. It is hampered by these antiquated laws passed at various times since the beginning of this country's history. In those days we did not have any industrial alcohol, and the laws were passed with reference to alcohol used in beverages. Now that we have come to the point where we are making industrial alcohol, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is only to make inapplicable certain old sections and statutes that interfere with the manufacture of industrial alcohol, which should be repealed. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. GARD) there were—ayes 51, noes 32.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks for tellers.

Tellers were refused, three members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That alcohol produced at any industrial alcohol plant or stored in any bonded warehouse may, under regulations, be withdrawn tax free as provided by existing law from such plant or warehouse for transfer to any denaturing plant for denaturation, or may, under regulations, before or after denaturation, be removed from any such plant or warehouse for any lawful tax-free purpose.

But any person permitted to obtain alcohol tax free, except the United States and the several States, shall first apply for and secure a permit to purchase the same and give the bonds prescribed under title 1 of this act, but alcohol withdrawn for nonbeverage purposes for use of the United States and the several States may be purchased and withdrawn subject only to such regulations as may be prescribed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 37, line 18, add: "Spirits of less proof than 160 degrees may, under regulations, be deemed to be alcohol for the purpose of denaturation, under the provisions of this title."

Also, after line 18, page 37, insert a new paragraph to follow the above:

"That alcohol may be withdrawn, under regulations, from any industrial plant or bonded warehouse, tax free for use of the United States or any governmental agency thereof, for the several States and Territories, and the District of Columbia, and for the use of any scientific university or college of learning, any laboratory for use exclusively in scientific research, or any hospital not conducted for profit."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield the floor?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. What has become of the gentleman's statement a while ago that he was going to take care of the proposition that no manufacturer of vinegar should be required to register as the proprietor of an industrial alcohol plant?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. On page 37 the gentleman will find the following provision:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to require manufacturers of distilled vinegar to raise the proof of any alcohol used in such manufacture or to denature the same.

It was claimed that in manufacturing vinegar a liquid containing only 28 per cent of alcohol was necessary, and consequently the law should not require a higher percentage. The change from alcohol to vinegar is in effect a denaturing process. In order to be denatured alcohol it must be 160 proof, as I understand. So we have adopted the amendment which has been voted on.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think that covers the provision that was heretofore included, or not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; it was presented by Mr. HUSTED, a member of the committee, and was accepted in the language in which he drew it. I am sure it is all right.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says it was drawn by the attorney of the vinegar companies?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; who was there before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, on page 37, line 24, after the second word "States," by inserting the words "Territories and the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 24, after the second word "States," insert the words "Territories and the District of Columbia."

Mr. AYRES. Does not the gentleman think it should go in also in line 20?

Mr. GARD. No; I think it is covered by the last provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the commissioner shall from time to time issue regulations respecting the establishment, bonding, and operations of industrial alcohol plants, denaturing plants, and bonded warehouses authorized herein, and the distribution, sale, export, and use of alcohol which may be necessary, advisable, or proper, to secure the revenue, to prevent diversion of the alcohol to illegal uses, and to place the nonbeverage alcohol industry and other industries using such alcohol as a chemical raw material or for other lawful purposes upon the highest possible plane of scientific and commercial efficiency consistent with the interests of the Government, and which shall insure an ample supply of such alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and the development of fuels, dyes, and other lawful products. All regulations so issued shall have the force and effect of law.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, page 38, insert as section 13 a the following:

"SEC. 13 a. That whenever any alcohol is lost by evaporation or other shrinkage, leakage, casualty, or unavoidable cause during distillation, redistillation, denaturation, withdrawal, piping, shipment, warehousing, storage, packing, transfer, recovery, or use of any such alcohol the commissioner shall remit or refund any tax incurred under existing law upon such alcohol, provided he is satisfied that the alcohol has not been diverted to any illegal use: Provided also, That such allowance shall not be granted if the person claiming same is indemnified against such loss by a valid claim of insurance."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that provision. That is merely an attempt to incorporate a tax provision into this legislation.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, that matter was before the Committee on the Judiciary and was stricken from the bill because of the fact that the chairman and members of that committee thought that it rightfully belonged to the Committee on Ways and Means, as it affected the revenues of the Government. The chairman called my attention to the matter, and I took it up with the Committee on Ways and Means, and I have been authorized to offer it here as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this had been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means in connection with this legislation and that it had authorized him to offer it?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I took it up with the committee and was authorized to offer this amendment, as I have.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That whoever operates an industrial alcohol plant or a denaturing plant without complying with the provisions of this title and lawful regulations made thereunder, or whoever withdraws or attempts to withdraw or secure tax free any alcohol subject to tax, or whoever violates any of the provisions of this title or of regulations lawfully made thereunder shall be liable, for the first offense, to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both, and for a second or cognate offense to a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000, and to imprisonment of not less than 30 days nor more than one year. It shall be lawful for the commissioner in all cases of second or cognate offense to refuse to issue for a period of one year permit for the manufacture or use of alcohol upon the premises of any person responsible in any degree for the violation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 38, line 23, after the word "withdraw" insert "from bond."

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand that the term "withdraw" also applies to the withdrawal of liquor from the plant?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The tax attaches to alcohol under the provisions of this bill just as soon as it is produced as such. There are no withdrawals contemplated in the law except withdrawals from bonded warehouses.

Mr. WALSH. This attempts to withdraw it from the plant, from the distillery.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the word "a" in line 7 on page 39 should not be inserted after the word "year"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "a" after the word "year" in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 29, line 7, after the word "year," insert the word "a."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That where any property is seized for violation of this title it may be released to the claimant or to any intervening party, in the discretion of the commissioner, on a bond given and approved.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 15 of page 39, between the words "seized" and "for," insert "or a lien is claimed and has attached pending a suit," and on line 16 strike out the word "title" and in lieu thereof insert "act," so that as amended section 16 shall read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That where any property is seized, or a lien is claimed and has attached pending a suit, for violation of this act it may be released to the claimant or to any intervening party, in the discretion of the commissioner, on a bond given and approved."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. I think the gentleman will accept the amendment that I have introduced. It allows the commissioner to accept a bond not only in the cases where property has been seized under this title, but also in cases where a lien is claimed and has attached under any provision of this act. In other words, I would have the commissioner invested with the right to take a bond where property has been seized under this act, not alone under this title but under any section of the law, and also take a bond and approve it in the case where a lien has attached pending suit, so that in the cases provided for in Title II, where for an alleged violation of some of the provisions a lien has attached, the commissioner may during the pendency of the suit release the property, provided proper security be given to the Government, and in cases where property has been seized, as, for instance, automobiles or cars or any kind of property under Title II, a bond may be accepted. As drawn in this bill the commissioner is restricted to taking a bond in the case of such seizures only as are provided for in Title III, and can not take bond in many of the cases where the law would impose a lien under Title II. Unless the commissioner be given such authority, which would by the way amply secure the Government, great injustice might often result to owners of property and property tied up during protracted litigation. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment I have offered.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it ought to be accepted. I do not think this ought to be changed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This would authorize the commissioner in cases with which he has nothing to do, in cases begun under Title II, in the case of seizure of property, to receive the bond. That ought not to exist and the amendment ought not to be here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That titles 1 and 3 and sections 1 and 40 of title 2 of this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the passage and approval of the act. The other sections of title 2 shall take effect and be in force on and after January 16, 1920.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 3, on page 40, by inserting after the last figure "1" a comma and the figures "39."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 40, line 3, after the second figure "1" insert a comma and the figures "39."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the figures "1," "3," and "2" be changed to the Roman numerals "I," "III," and "II," where it refers to titles in lines 3, 4, and 6, page 40.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman restate his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That the numbers designating titles in lines 3, 4, and 6 be changed to Roman numerals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the numbers in lines 3, 4, and 6 be changed to Roman numerals. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, has the chairman of the committee secured consent to have the Clerk renumber the sections and correct errors in spelling? I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to renumber sections and to correct any misspelled words.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WALSH. I make the motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the Clerk be authorized to correct any mistakes in spelling and be allowed to renumber the sections where they are not numbered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Is that motion in order—to authorize the Clerk to revise and rewrite the bill?

Mr. WALSH. It is usually done by unanimous consent; but, of course, the gentleman from Chicago, who has been filibustering for the last three weeks on this bill, thought he would execute a smart maneuver at the final end of the bill and object to what has heretofore usually been granted by unanimous consent. I ask for a vote.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know what the gentleman is talking about——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that it is not in order to return to prior sections of the bill, and the Chair is inclined to think that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WALSH. I am not asking to return to prior sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be an amendment to prior sections, of course, to renumber them, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3, line 3, where a mistake occurred by inserting the word——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 3, line 3, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Regular order!

Mr. GARD. Let us have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. GARD. Let us have the amendment reported.

Mr. SABATH. I object.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6810, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, under the rule is the previous question now considered as ordered on the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. The first question is, Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on what is called new section 26½ as it appears on page 2902 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 19.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a separate vote on the amendment indicated. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on what is known as the Steele amendments to section 39.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Barkley amendment to section 26, which provides for a search warrant to private dwellings to be used for sale, and so forth. I do not know what the exact language is.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment which struck out section 31—the bootlegging section.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment inserting the word "hereafter" after the word "shall," in line 3, on page 2.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on the amendment to section 35.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first separate vote is demanded on section 26½.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for one minute to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for one minute?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. It is nearly 6 o'clock, and the previous question has been ordered, and it seems to me, and I want to suggest it to the chairman, that it would be better to take the vote to-morrow.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I suppose there will be a roll call on several amendments and on the bill itself. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Well, we will know what the amendments are in the morning. I appeal to the gentleman that he consent that the vote on the amendments and the bill go over until morning, when we can have the amendments in the RECORD.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Are you going to drive this through to-night?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says "yes." Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON and Mr. MCARTHUR) there were—ayes 116, noes 107.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands tellers. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will stand and be counted. [After counting.] Sixty-five gentlemen have arisen.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, you do not take any opposition vote on the call for tellers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. What is this vote on? Is it on one of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. On the motion to adjourn. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 219, not voting 61, as follows:

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. No; I was outside, here. I want to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify himself to vote.

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House decides not to adjourn. The question is upon agreeing to section 26½ as a new section, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the printed CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows on page 2902 that an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] was adopted. The record at the desk, so I am informed by those at the desk, shows that it was not adopted. My inquiry is whether it was or was not adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds in the RECORD and is informed at the desk that it was adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the new section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 15, after the word "process," insert a new section, section 26½, as follows:

"SEC. 26½. Any State officer having power to make arrests for violating the laws of the United States under section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall have power to issue search warrants under the power granted in title 11 mentioned herein."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if there are any amendments upon which no separate vote is asked, can not they be adopted?

The SPEAKER. They have been adopted.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I wanted to ask about.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Seventy-two gentlemen have arisen. The Chair thinks that that is a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a sufficient number. Does the gentleman demand the other side?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed to taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] On the other side there are 70.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor striking out this amendment will, when their names are called, answer "aye"; those opposed will answer "no."

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. Speaker, the vote is not on striking it out.

Mr. BARKLEY. The vote is on agreeing to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. Those who favor the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 286, answered "present" 2, not voting 69, as follows:

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "nay."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. LITTLE. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment on which a separate vote is requested is on the Gard amendment to strike out section 31. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are we voting on these amendments according to their places in the bill or according to the order in which the requests were made?

The SPEAKER. According to the order in which the requests for separate votes were made. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, lines 15 to 24, strike out all of section 31.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 114, noes 110.

Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. FESS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULINGS. I rise for the purpose of asking what we are voting on.

The SPEAKER. The amendment was reported. It is to strike out section 31.

The Clerk will call the roll.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. SANFORD with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

On this vote:

Mr. DOUGHTON (for) with Mr. HARDY of Texas (against).

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded is the Steele amendment to section 39, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 6, after the word "liquors" insert the following: "The words 'beer,' 'ale,' 'porter,' or 'wine' mentioned in section 1 of this title shall not be construed as included in the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' where they contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume; but none of the liquors mentioned in section 1 shall be sold for beverage purposes under the names therein mentioned, and the burden of proof shall be upon the one selling such beverage to show that the same contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume."

Mr. BLANTON. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays.

The question of ordering the yeas and nays was taken, and 18 Members rose in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 179 ayes and 32 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members, a quorum, and the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded is the Barkley amendment to section 26, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 11, after the word "such," insert the following: "Unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor or."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was being taken, when Mr. IGOE demanded the yeas and nays.

The question of ordering the yeas and nays was taken, and 49 Members arose.

The SPEAKER. Forty-nine Members, not a sufficient number.

Mr. IGOE. I ask for the other side.

The other side was taken; 176 Members arose, and 49 being a sufficient number the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 166; not voting 56, as follows:

YEAS—208.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. DOUGHTON (for) with Mr. HARDY of Texas (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. BENHAM with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. SINCLAIR with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. WASON with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. EAGLE. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment upon which a separate vote was demanded is the amendment in line 3 on page 2 of the bill, which the Clerk will report. This is the amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] asked that there should be a separate vote upon. Will the gentleman be more specific, as there are two amendments at that point.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is the amendment after the word "shall."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BENSON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "shall," insert the word "hereafter."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There are two amendments meaning the same thing, and one of them ought to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Is this just for the correction of the text, by striking out unnecessary words?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded is to section 35, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEELE: Page 30, line 18, strike out the colon and the word "provided," also lines 19 and 20, and insert the following: "but such liquors must be used for the personal consumption of the owner thereof and his family residing in such dwelling, of his bona fide guests when entertained by him therein; and the burden of proof shall be upon the possessor to prove that such liquor was lawfully acquired and used."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the reading of the engrossed bill. Obviously that is impossible.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, the engrossed bill not being here to be read at this time, it will not preclude the offering of a motion to recommit after it is read?

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit will be in order after the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to ask that the Clerk be authorized to renumber the sections?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to renumber the sections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to renumber the sections. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following motion to recommit, which I desire to present at the proper time, be printed in the RECORD at this point for the information of Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may have printed in the RECORD at this point a motion to recommit, which he intends to offer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion to recommit is as follows:

Mr. IGOE moves to recommit the bill H. R. 6810 to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That whoever, on or after the date when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, shall knowingly manufacture, sell, or transport within the United States, or import into the United States or export from the United States, any intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors shall investigate and report violations of this act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who is hereby charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as in the case of other offenses against the laws of the United States; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors may swear out warrants before the United States commissioners or other officers or courts authorized to issue the same for the apprehension of such offenders. Section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby made applicable in the enforcement of this act.

"SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby respectively authorized to appoint and employ such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees as they may deem necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be required for the enforcement of this act."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DOUGHTON, for one week on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. SEARS, for to-day on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 22, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting a proposed paragraph of legislation for inclusion in the next appropriation bill to be considered by Congress (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 22, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee this morning ever dependent upon Thy guidance and Thy blessing. In the midst of the world's confusion, in the midst of the blood that runs high, in the midst of antagonisms of race and of peoples, we come to Thee. Thou art the God of order and of law. We pray that as Thou hast called us to this high and holy office we may follow the Divine commandments and work out the plans for the protection of the world in the interest of peace, and establish above all things a reign of righteousness among men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5726. An act to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States;

H. R. 6810. An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries; and

H. J. Res. 147. Joint resolution to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a petition from the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The petition is as follows:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Honolulu, Hawaii, July 7, 1919.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, at the request of the Tenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, senate concurrent resolution No. 32.

Very truly, yours,
C. J. MCCARTHY,
Governor of Hawaii.

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas a substantial increase in the compensation of the officers and employees of the Territory of Hawaii and its political subdivisions is warranted by the high cost of living which now exists and which will probably become much higher in the immediate future on account of the tremendous demand for foodstuffs, materials, and supplies of all descriptions; and

Whereas the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii for the year 1919, fully appreciating the seriousness of the situation, has, by proper legislation, substantially increased the compensation of practically all such officers and employees; and

Whereas there are certain officers, namely, the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, and the governor, whose compensation can only be fixed by the Congress of the United States, and who are entitled to have such compensation increased: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully requested to enact such legislation as shall increase the compensation of the members of the legislature from the sum of $600 to the sum of $1,000 for each regular session thereof, and as shall increase the compensation from the sum of $200 to the sum of $500 for each special session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, and as shall increase the compensation of the governor of Hawaii from the sum of $7,000 per annum to the sum of $10,000 per annum: Be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the Territory of Hawaii be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America and to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the Delegate from Hawaii.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, April 29, 1919.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on April 29, A. D. 1919.

CHAS. F. CHILLINGWORTH,
President of the Senate.
O. P. SOARES,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, April 30, 1919.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on April 30, A. D. 1919.

H. L. HOLSTEIN,
Speaker House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a couple of telegrams protesting against the schedule of discounts issued by the Grain Corporation. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BELLEVILLE, KANS., July 21, 1919.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.:

Schedule of discounts issued by United States Grain Corporation is a hardship on wheat growers of Kansas. We pray that you will give this matter your consideration and that you will make recommendations that may result in a revision of these exorbitant discounts and assist the growers of Kansas in securing a reasonable price for their low-grade wheat.

R. B. WARD
(And 100 others).

HUTCHINSON, KANS.

Senator CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.:

Farmers of Reno County in mass convention assembled protest vigorously against action of Grain Corporation on cumulative and excessive discounts on lower grades of wheat; also against action of Grain Corporation in refusing licenses to competitive exporters. Grain Corporation's yield of Reno County wheat will not average over 10 bushels per acre and will not test over No. 3.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a resolution of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce indorsing the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution indorsing National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico.

Whereas for a period of eight years there has been nothing but chaos in the Republic of Mexico, nothing but an elemental civilization; during most of this period the only light that shone in the darkness was that which flashed from the cannon's mouth in the incendiary blaze of revolution and unrestricted banditry, which has had so disastrous an effect upon the lives and property of foreigners in that country, especially Americans; and

Whereas the people of Mexico themselves have been the chief sufferers from the chaotic conditions which have seriously menaced the moral and economic fabric of the entire Republic and caused untold loss of life and property; and

Whereas Americans and other foreigners have, in good faith, invested hundreds of millions in Mexico in the development of her resources, thereby adding to that nation's assets what would otherwise have remained a liability, and through the individual enterprise of Americans within her borders her financial, industrial, and commercial institutions have been established on a sound basis of credits and trade relations and employment afforded for thousands of her people; and

Whereas the future economic and commercial development is largely dependent upon American capital and enterprise, neither of which will be available unless the Mexican laws provide for, and the Mexican officials recognize, the rights of American citizens and actually afford adequate protection to their lives and property as well as other foreigners; and

Whereas certain sections of Mexico are infested with outlaws, revolutionists, and bandits, who spasmodically blow up trains and trackage, rob railroad cars, burn bridges, and convert themselves into "consignees" of any foreign merchandise obtainable, and thereby paralyzing commercial intercourse, which is the life blood of national existence; and

Whereas the Federal Government of Mexico being unable to maintain vigilance and guarantee any degree of safety to shipments of merchandise of any character in these sections, comprising some of the richest territory of the North American Continent; and

Whereas the Federal Government of Mexico being unable to afford protection to the industrial and commercial institutions owned and operated by Americans, thereby failing to perform the functions for which such a government ordinarily exists; and

Whereas through its President the Federal Government of Mexico has fostered, promoted, and caused to be enacted such anti-American legislation as contained in article 27 of Mexico's new constitution, which provides among other policies, radical in the extreme and as it is retroactive is confiscatory of the property rights of Americans, "among other things providing that—

"(a) No foreign corporation or individual can legally acquire or hold any mines, oil wells, land, or other real property in Mexico unless he renounces his citizenship.

"(b) The ownership to all minerals, solid, liquid, or gaseous is declared to be vested in the nation, regardless of existing rights based upon the old constitution"; and

Whereas the full textual contents of this constitution is significant of the Federal Government's anti-American policy being given expression through its President on many occasions; and

Whereas we know as a matter of fact that throughout all this period Americans have suffered gross injustices in Mexico, and no means have been tendered by the Federal Government of Mexico to prevent or suppress to any positive extent these crimes against our people, although some individual officials have done all that they could consistently do under authority of their President to offer means of protection; and

Whereas the American people of this great border district, extending 2,000 miles in length, have for the past eight years been forced to witness crimes against American citizens on the American side of the border, committed by Mexicans of all factions, and they are now seeking some means whereby this maelstrom of elements may be cleared, not only for the sake of our own people, but as much for the masses of Mexico who are bleeding from this unabated revolutionary and banditry reign, in order that they might throw away their armor and take the plow and open the furrows and plant the seed; and

Whereas the United States Government is spending over a million dollars a week to maintain an army on the Mexican border, intended for the purpose of protecting lives and property of Americans from raids by bandits, the necessity and wisdom of which is not questioned; and

Whereas bad faith has been shown in many ways by the Federal Government of Mexico in matters pertaining to rights of American citizens, and our people having failed to coordinate their efforts to prevent repetition of these same acts against the rights of Americans along the border and in Mexico; and

Whereas the inaccurate reports of conditions in Mexico have served to do injustice to the people of Mexico, who are working fearlessly for the readjustment of their country's affairs, and there are many of these people in Mexico; and

Whereas the ill-informed people of the United States have given expression to affairs of Mexico of which they know not, and have thereby caused undue agitation; and

Whereas it is now possible, through the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, to organize and assemble data in the form of sworn affidavits affecting foreign industries and enterprises in Mexico, and to investigate all decrees, laws, and regulations and other general developments affecting American rights in Mexico; and

Whereas through this medium the individual American citizen, as well as the large companies with holdings and interests in Mexico, may expect to obtain relief from the present conditions by becoming affiliated with this national association; and

Whereas this association proposes to and is actually combining the mass efforts and intelligent force of the American people for the purpose of bringing a concerted action to bear upon our Government in pressing the importance of this problem and the necessity for its solution in a manner accruing honor unto ourselves and affording the relief for which every intelligent, unselfish, and patriotic citizen of Mexico is hoping for; and

Whereas this condition of stability and responsibility can only be accomplished by an unselfish desire to assist the people of Mexico to recognize their obligations toward American citizens; and

Whereas our Government in the past has rendered unselfish service to small nations of people, torn by oppression and revolution; and

Whereas it is plain enough how our rights as a free people and our honor as a sovereign Government and other Governments have been violated, notwithstanding the numerous pledges made that foreign rights in Mexico would be protected; and

Whereas a body of the most representative citizens of this country have instituted a plan to educate the general public of America as to the true conditions in Mexico, and is now combining the economic and moral forces of patriotism for the realization of this purpose: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, representing over a thousand of the leading men in El Paso, through its board of directors, in meeting assembled, declares its approval of the principle, and does unqualifiedly indorse the program of the National Association for Protection of American Rights in Mexico; and be it further

Resolved, That without bitterness or hate toward the Mexican people, but with an unselfish desire to assist them to end the reign of terror that is undermining her national life, we urge upon our Government the necessity of some definite corrective action; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Representatives and Senators in Washington, our State senators, the governor of Texas, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Texas Chamber of Commerce, and the various chambers of commerce through Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, and that a copy of this resolution be placed upon the official records of the organizations named, requesting these organizations to pass resolutions of a similar nature.

EARL M. ROBERTS, General Manager.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present resolutions of the American Federation of Labor, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1919.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Committee on Commerce,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg leave to call to your attention the following preambles and resolutions, which were considered and adopted at the recent session of the American Federation of Labor in Atlantic City, June 9–23, relating to an act approved March 4, 1915, known as the seamen's act:

"Whereas the purpose of the seamen's act, as stated by its promoters, was to equalize the wage cost of operating American and foreign vessels and to bring the American to sea; and

"Whereas the wages of foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States have since August 1, 1916, when the act became effective, followed the wages paid on American vessels from the same ports, like a cart following a horse to which it is hitched; and

"Whereas the wages paid in English ports is the same as paid in the port of New York, and the wages paid at Scandinavian ports in the overseas trade is within $3 of wages paid at the port of New York; and

"Whereas the wage paid from Italy has already risen to within $10 of that paid seamen in American ports; and

"Whereas the number of native Americans employed on American vessels sailing from the Pacific coast ports has risen from zero to about 24 per cent of the whole crew, and on the Atlantic coast from less than 10 per cent to about 30 per cent, since the seamen's act became operative: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we denounce the bills introduced by Senator CALDER and Congressman GOULD to repeal the important clauses of the seamen's act as hostile to the national interests of the United States, as hostile to the development of American sea power, and as serving the interests of European and Asiatic shipowners, who under this act are gradually being compelled to meet the American shipowner in a fair competition on the high seas; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be submitted to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, to the Shipping Board, the Department of Commerce, and, if necessary, to the President of the United States."

Your committee recommends the adoption of the resolution.

The report of the committee was adopted.

On behalf of the American Federation of Labor I urge you to oppose this bill, H. R. 491, and all other measures having for their purpose nullification of provisions of the seamen's act.

Respectfully, yours,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Pensacola, Fla., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Harrison bill relating to naval stores, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of Slovenic National Benefit Society No. 267, of Sublet, Wyo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation prohibiting the admission to the mails of any matter printed in a foreign language, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Yazoo City, Miss., remonstrating against the proposed plan of the Secretary of the Interior to reclaim arid and swamp lands, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RELIEF AND PROMOTION OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 98) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2575) for the relief of Furness, Withy & Co. (Ltd.); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2576) to require street railways carrying passengers in their cars within the District of Columbia to provide equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races, and to prescribe punishments and penalties for violating its provisions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 2577) granting a pension to Adelia Sullivan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 2578) granting a pension to Rufus E. Bean (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2579) granting an increase of pension to Jerome Schamp; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 2580) granting an increase of pension to Esli A. Bowen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 2581) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 2582) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts of August 4, 1914, August 15, 1914, March 3, 1915, September 7, 1916, and June 21, 1917; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 2583) granting an increase of pension to William A. Karnes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2584) to regulate pawnbrokers and their business in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 2585) granting an increase of pension to William K. Brown;

A bill (S. 2586) granting a pension to John W. Gilpin;

A bill (S. 2587) granting an increase of pension to George W. Swiger;

A bill (S. 2588) granting an increase of pension to John P. Fetty; and

A bill (S. 2589) granting a pension to Annie Gilmore; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 2590) to incorporate a foreign finance corporation to provide means of acquiring and selling public and private foreign securities, extending credits against the same and assisting in the development of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 2591) authorizing the sale of inherited and unpartitioned allotments for townsite purposes in the Quapaw Agency, Okla.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS (by request):

A bill (S. 2592) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine the claims of certain Choctaw Indians not heretofore finally enrolled to whom privileges were guaranteed under the treaty of 1830; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HARDING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) for the relief of the relatives of the officers and enlisted men of the Naval collier Cyclops; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LODGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to Belgium; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SUSAN F. BURDINE.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 130) which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Susan F. Burdine, widow of William T. Burdine, late a private of the Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PEACE TREATY AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I give notice that following the address of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on Thursday I wish to submit some remarks on the treaty of peace particularly with reference to the league of nations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, much of the correspondence with me regarding the proposed league of nations is based upon the assumption that the adoption of the league will establish permanent peace in the world. On Tuesday the 29th after the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] I give notice that I shall address the Senate upon that phase of the subject.

ADDRESS OF DR. SOUTHARD (S. DOC. NO. 56).

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have here an address on the prevention, control, and cure of tuberculosis by Dr. Southard, of Fort Smith, Ark. It is a particularly able and valuable paper and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not catch the title of the address which the Senator from Arkansas desires printed as a document.

Mr. OWEN. It is on the prevention and cure of tuberculosis, and has been prepared by Dr. Southard, of Fort Smith, Ark. It is very short and, I think, is of value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONFIRMATION OF THOMAS H. TULLEY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at the last executive session of the Senate the nomination of Thomas H. Tulley for collector of customs at Denver, Colo., was confirmed. The President was not notified of the confirmation because of the absence of my colleague [Mr. PHIPPS], who consents to his confirmation as in executive session. Therefore, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified of the confirmation of Thomas H. Tulley.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 5726. An act to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

H. R. 6810. An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research, and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. J. Res. 147. Joint resolution to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MCNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will yield to me, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gore	McCumber	Robinson
Bankhead	Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Beckham	Hale	McLean	Sherman
Calder	Harding	McNary	Simmons
Capper	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Culberson	Harrison	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Cummins	Henderson	Nelson	Smoot
Curtis	Hitchcock	New	Stanley
Dial	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Sutherland
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Swanson
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Thomas
Elkins	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Fall	Kenyon	Owen	Underwood
Fernald	Keyes	Page	Warren
Fletcher	King	Phelan	Watson
France	Kirby	Phipps	Williams
Gay	Knox	Poindexter	Wolcott
Gerry	Lodge	Pomerene

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, conformable to the practice of the Senate, I announced on Friday of last week that, following the morning business, on this day I would discuss the league of nations. I trust I shall not be asked to yield while I occupy the floor, as I would not like to have the continuity of my speech broken; but at its conclusion, if I am able, I shall be happy to answer any questions asked me.

Mr. President, I have repressed whatever desire I may have had to discuss the treaty of peace until through conventional channels this important document reached the Senate Chamber.

At this time I shall address myself to that all-absorbing portion of the terms of peace dealing with the character and defining the functions of the league of nations. I indulge the hope that I approach a discussion of this important subject free from partisan bias. The issue created by the movement to combine nations to insure peace rises far above political platforms or party expediency. The subject, therefore, should receive that calm and just consideration made possible only when partisanship is adjourned. The quicker we forget our party affiliations the sooner will we be able to reach the proper solution of this tremendous problem.

Mr. President, I am stoutly in favor of the principle embodied in any effort to insure the permanent peace of the world, and I am willing to accept the covenant of the league of nations contained in the peace treaty. The time is back of us for a discussion of this subject in general statements of the sublimity of peace, or indulging with owlish wisdom the ominous predictions of a disgraced and destroyed Republic. The people of America desire to know what the covenant contains of substance, and will go there to obtain their understanding.

I think it may be assumed that, aside from those who are opposed to this Nation becoming a member of any organization calculated to make wars more difficult of birth, the objectionable provisions are but few in number, though substantial and grievous to those who oppose the present covenant or who desire to effect material amendments.

Of the objections of this character I take it that article 10 is the most obnoxious and productive of the most controversy. The statement most generally made is that this article collides with our Constitution and runs across the path of our sacred traditions. This statement may well be challenged. Repeatedly the argument has been advanced that article 10 casts upon this Government an absolute obligation to go to war under any conditions, however bereft of justice. This indictment, in my opinion, is untenable.

Properly to analyze this provision of the covenant a distinction must be made between the first and second parts of the article defining our obligation in the event of the happening of the contingency for which it proposes to prescribe a rule of national conduct. For obvious reasons I shall consider the divisions of the subject in order of inversion.

> In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat, or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

In this sentence no obligation, moral or legal, presses upon any country to adopt the method to repel aggression advised by the council. The adoption of the means is left to the election of the various nations, though in all human probability, if a situation would arise whereby concert of action was sought, the advice of the council as to the means would be followed if believed to be practicable and just. By the force of another article in the covenant the council, in arriving at a decision, will be governed by unanimous vote, the power of veto standing between this country and an unwise remedy. That part of the article about which the controversy wages is as follows:

> The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.

Indisputably this provision casts upon this country and every other nation a member of the league a joint and several undertaking to go to war to protect an associate of the league from invasion through external force, but this obligation is in no proper sense a legal one, but purely a moral obligation, entirely dependent upon the condition that the cause of the war and the war itself is violative of the moral conscience of the American people.

Having stated my premises, I shall proceed briefly to assign the reasons for my deductions:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur. (Art. II, sec. 2.)
> This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land. (Art. VI.)

Thus it will appear that the architects of the Constitution were very generous in the quantity and the power conferred upon the Executive and the Senate in the matter of treaty making. However, the power is not unlimited, though conferred in general terms. Without doubt the two branches of the Government which have to do with the treaty making are not hedged about with restrictions like the law-making power which the Constitution carefully specifies may deal with certain enumerated subjects. The text writers, discussing this subject and the decisions of the Supreme Court, declare that whatever the Constitution positively forbids may not be done by a treaty any more than by any different means. In the case of Geofry v. Riggs (133 U. S., p. 267), the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Field, said:

> The treaty power, as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter, without its consent.

When the court said that by treaty nothing could be done which is forbidden by the Constitution it gave implied expression to the rule that which the Constitution directs shall be done in a particular way may not be done through the medium of a treaty in a manner other than the one prescribed in the Constitution. The treaty-making power can not legally usurp any prerogative of the legislative branch of the Government conferred by the fundamental law, consequently when the supreme law of the land provides how and by what agency war shall be declared, that agency then works in an exclusive field and its right to function in this particular field can not be abrogated, lessened, or enlarged by the treaty-making power.

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, * * * provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, * * * to declare war, * * * to raise and support armies, * * * to provide and maintain a Navy, and make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. (Art. I, sec. 8.)

In no sense, therefore, can the executive branch of the Government, aided by the Senate, cast any legal obligation upon this or any future Congress to pass a declaration of war upon any nation, however unjustly offending. The wisdom of our forefathers was never employed to better advantage than when this limitation by intendment was placed upon the power vested with the treaty-making body.

Viewing this subject as I do, it is not consistent with reason to argue that article 10 of the covenant lays a legal duty upon some future Congress to declare war against any nation that attempts by the use of force the invasion of the territory of a member of the league, nor the more unpleasant duty of requiring the Government to send our splendid soldiers to some foreign land to suppress "external aggression" defined in the covenant.

Over and above that, it must not be said that this interpretation would mislead any other member of the league of nations to its injury or operate to our dishonor, for the very solid reason that international law recognizes the constitutional limitations under which a nation makes its treaty. It is legally obligatory upon the signatories to the covenant of the league to observe and to respect these limitations. They must consider and be guided by the limit of power placed in the hands of the treaty-making agency. In close analogy is this doctrine to the one in the law of agency, that a principal is liable only for the acts of an agent within the real or apparent scope of his authority, and a person dealing with that instrumentality must inform himself of the extent of the power conferred. Nations can not be heard to say that they relied upon the provision of a treaty when that provision is outside of the treaty-making sphere.

In my opinion, the extent and nature of the obligation imposed by article 10 is not involved by any doubt as to its proper solution. This Nation is under a moral bond to fulfill its obligations and go to war, if need be, whensoever the fulfillment of the obligations is justified by the rules of morals.

If I have in part developed the thought that the article places upon the American people a moral duty to assist an associate nation to repel external aggression only when the doing of the act of assistance comes within the rule of proper moral conduct, then much of the force of the argument used against the article is destroyed. While no one can predict with any considerable accuracy what the future course of Congress would be in the event that one nation would wantonly strike at another nation by forcible invasion, yet without a league it may be said in safety that in order to repel the assault the sentiment of this country would supply the momentum to persuade Congress to declare war, that the peace of the earth might be maintained. We would not stand by supinely and again see the world drenched by human blood, in the absence of the moral obligation assumed, nor does the assumption that the undertaking imposes a duty prevent this Nation from being the sole judge in deciding whether the contingency comes within the scope of our moral pledge.

As a Nation we have never faltered in the practice of virtue in endeavoring to secure peace by conflict, and I make bold to hazard a prediction that if the world was again menaced by a cruel, relentless foe the conscience of the American people would be so aroused as to exert its supreme power through constitutional channels to extinguish the madness by a declaration of war, enforced by our soldiery and armaments.

This moral force in the obligation imposed upon the nations of the world, in my opinion, will do much to chill the ambitious designs of nations that heretofore have been the cause of cruel wars, and for that reason I shall oppose by my vote any eradication of article 10 from the covenant. It is the pillar section of the association of nations contemplated under the league, and is the assurance of mutual support against any external aggression. It speaks the voice of freedom among the nations and guarantees to each its full share of sovereignty. It makes possible and encourages the reduction of armaments, as no nation will disarm unless assured that it will not be attacked by another nation. Nations which disarm or progressively deprive themselves of the weapons to repel an assault must protect themselves either by erecting a superstate, with an international armed force to guard them, or by entering into a compact to come to each other's aid when an outlaw nation threatens the use of force. This principle has been recognized by students of history from the time thought was first given to plans for the promotion of world peace. The late ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, discussing the prevention of war through arbitration treaties, in an address at Christiania, Norway, May 5, 1910, said:

> I believe that these treaties can cover almost all questions liable to arise between such nations, if they are drawn with the explicit agreement that each contracting party will respect the other's territory and its absolute sovereignty within that territory and the equally explicit agreement that (aside from very rare cases where the nation's honor is vitally concerned) all other possible subjects of controversy will be submitted to arbitration.

In a world league accompanied by an agreement for reduction of armament the necessity of a covenant containing the moral virility of article 10 is manifest.

Mr. President, a close dissection of the covenant justifies the statement that, in addition to supplying a great moral force augmented by actual force, if agreeable to the moral conscience of this Nation, article 10 defines a principle of conduct among the nations of the world that will be carried into execution by the other provisions of the covenant. It calls for no action until all other checks and remedies have failed to pacify a quarrelsome nation or in the event of extraordinary emergency, such as a sudden and unprovoked assault by an outlaw country.

It is not my purpose to open the covenant and analyze each article; that has been done by others. I only desire to observe that in articles 11 to 17, inclusive, provisions are made for the peaceful settlement of disputes through arbitration, by mediation, by the strength of universal boycott and economic pressure, and by covenants restraining war for a period of time.

Article 10 is devoid of any substance justifying members of the league to summon their strength to prevent any nation from making a change in its form of government, nor does it, nor the force it commands, prevent a nation from separating into distinct political units through the process of revolution. The article has nothing to do with internal uprisings that find their source in the genial soil from which springs the desire for self-determination.

Doubt has risen with regard to the understanding of certain contents of the covenant. From the opponents of the league comes a demand for amendments and reservations without proper regard for the results that will flow from such a course. An amendment would mean such a substantial change in some article of the covenant as to require the concurrence of the signatory nations thereto, and probably lead to delay and much controversy and possible rejection. Without doubt, by acquiescence, followed by an acceptance of some benefit under the treaty by a nation, the covenant would be limited by the amendments, so far as this country is concerned. An amendment is a change in substance, and requires ratification by all the other nations. In the discussion of this matter the term "reservation" is used to perform the same office as an amendment. We are not interested in the expression employed to perform the operation, but instead the thing that is done. This treaty, carrying the luggage of amendments or reservations, must of necessity go back to the original signatories and be accepted by them before it would be a binding contract.

Justice Brown, speaking for the Supreme Court in the Diamond Rings v. The United States (183 U. S., 167), says:

> Obviously the treaty must contain the whole contract between the parties, and the power of the Senate is limited to a ratification of such terms as have already been agreed upon between the President, acting for the United States, and the commissioners of the other contracting power. The Senate has no right to ratify the treaty and introduce new terms into it which shall be obligatory upon the other power, although it may refuse its ratification or make such ratification conditional upon the adoption of amendments to the treaty.

However, the Senate could without postponing the day of the ratification of the treaty or requiring its resubmission to the other nations by a resolution place its interpretation as to the meaning of articles in the league susceptible to one or more meanings. For example, article 21, which reads:

> Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

By many it is argued with much display of learning that the Monroe doctrine is in no sense a "regional understanding," and therefore it is not fully protected. Many others who have studied the covenant hold that this traditional policy is fully protected. Consequently without altering the terms of peace and with evident propriety the Senate could attach to the treaty a resolution stating its understanding of the article by again defining and declaring the doctrine of Monroe. Resolutions of this kind which in their purpose are not supposed to amend or alter, but only to interpret, the treaty do not operate to effect a change in the terms as to require ratification by other nations. If we should go further in this regard and attempt by an explanatory expression, whatever it may be called in name, to introduce a substantial change in an article, it would be in effect an amendment and would require resubmission to the other signatories.

To strike from the covenant article 10 would clearly be an amendment, such as to require ratification by the other parties to the treaty. To limit, alter, or modify the moral obligation would, in my opinion, operate as an amendment. We must not forget that if we attempt by general reservations or amendments to alter the splendid purposes of the covenant or weaken it so far as it affects our duties, it can not be expected that other nations will not follow our lead. Having demonstrated our altruism and unselfishness in this war and our overpowering strength and sublime heroism, is it not rather beneath our ideals to ask special privileges when the peace of the world and the welfare and happiness of mankind is involved?

That part of the covenant which refers to the exemption of domestic matters from consideration by the league says:

> If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement. (Art. 15.)

Upon reading this provision of the covenant those opposed argue that the language does not place important matters of domestic concern, like immigration and tariff, out of the jurisdiction of the council or of the assembly. They propose reservations exempting the consideration of these matters from the league. This action I think unnecessary, for the reason that the highest tribunal in our land has decided that by the rules of international law subjects of this kind are absolutely and exclusively within the jurisdiction of this country, inherent as a right of sovereignty and therefore impossible of alienation by treaty.

Mr. Justice Gerry, speaking for the Supreme Court in the case of Nishimura Ekin v. The United States (142 U. S., 651), said:

> It is an accepted maxim of international law that every sovereign nation has the power as inherent in sovereignty and essential to self-preservation to forbid the entrance of foreigners within its dominions or to admit them only in such cases and upon such conditions as it may see fit to prescribe.

In the Chinese Exclusion case (130 U. S., 581) Chief Justice Field, of the Supreme Court, said:

> The power of government to exclude foreigners from the country whenever, in its judgment, the public interest requires such exclusion, has been asserted in repeated instances and never denied by the executive or legislative departments.

In the same case Chief Justice Field cites with approval a letter written by Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State under President Pierce, to our minister to Switzerland:

> Every society possesses the undoubted right to determine who shall compose its members and it is exercised by all nations, both in peace and in war. It may always be questioned whether a resort to this power is warranted by the circumstances or what department of the government is empowered to assert it, but there can be no doubt but that it is possessed by all nations and that each may decide for itself when the occasion arises demanding its exercise.

This same doctrine was enunciated by Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State under President Hayes, and later by Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State under President Arthur, who write:

> This Government can not contest the right of foreign governments to exclude * * * American citizens from their shores.

Sharing the belief that our Supreme Court has correctly stated the rule of international law as applied to a nation's internal affairs, I can find no serious complaint with a policy that shall annex a resolution to the treaty redefining an established doctrine of the law of nations. This action of the Senate, in my opinion, would not be an amendment nor change of treaty in substance requiring ratification. While a work of supererogation, if found comforting, it would have its own reward.

A stronger reason interposes its unyielding force, and that is that questions of a domestic character will never arise to embarrass this Nation for the reason that the other members of great white race, the dominant peoples of the league in the sense of civilization and power, are as jealous of their sovereign rights to adjust and decide all domestic questions as are we.

In fine, we have been told that our sovereignty has been dangerously diminished, the Monroe doctrine endangered; that we have surrendered our control over certain vital domestic matters; that we could be plunged into war without a declaration of Congress.

No one of these statements is believed by the advocates of the league to have a foundation in fact. Therefore, by the avenue of reservations in the form of interpretations, these questions could be placed beyond the pale of controversy. Action of this character would require no ratification by the other powers, as it would constitute only a restatement of that which already adheres in the covenant.

Mr. President, the world is so impoverished of substance and wasted of man power and economic force as to be incapable of a serious conflict of arms for decades beyond the life of any of the Members of this Senate who are to pass upon the terms of peace, and may we not with almost certain security of peace take time and give deliberations to necessary amendments and changes in the form and character of the constitution of the league? The constitution of the league is not the final and unalterable judge of the world's opinion; it is the present repository of a world desire to create a moral and economic force calculated to act as an insuperable barrier against future armed conflicts. The constitution contains nothing of the finality of the historical laws of the Medes and the Persians. It is simply an instrument for the execution of some of the terms imposed by the treaty of peace—the establishment of a moral force to bring on this earth a permanent peace. Time opens the way and presents opportunity for all needed amendments. The present is crying for mankind to introduce some institution to lessen the probabilities of future wars. Let us not fail to accept the opportunity to unite with other enlightened peoples to bring into existence this ideal that has ever yearned in the human heart and in the bosom of the heroic dead who have yielded their lives to the demands of brutal wars.

The constitution of the league should be the fundamental law of nations, similar in operation in a universal field to our own organic law. Necessarily such a document can only define general principles for the conduct of governments, leaving matters of procedure and administrative detail to rules to be promulgated by the council and general assembly.

Within this league will ripen a new code of international law and justice that will guide the nations of the world by the path that leads to peaceful settlements of all international disputes that will avoid controversies which result in war.

Mr. President, in a discussion of this great subject I have taken the position that all rational men hate war and love peace and would commit their lives to the perpetuation and establishment of any scheme in which they had utter confidence that would bring into existence universal peace and its sublime rewards, and therefore I have not attempted to paint the manifold blessings which will in my judgment come from a creation of this society of peace. But, on the contrary, I have been content to discuss some of the weaknesses and fallacies of the arguments of those who honestly differ with the advocates of the league of nations.

From this thought, born of the force that reflects the pains and burdens of a cruel war, will grow an international structure that shall protect humanity from the savagery of conflict so long as mankind and his institutions endure.

You say this is a hope founded on faith. Yes; so long as faith abides, the fruits of faith ripen and flourish. The peoples of the world are heartstricken with sorrow, and upon their energies rests the burden of a ponderous tax that will require many decades of patient toil to absorb. This occasion is too serious for anger and recrimination, too big for partisanship, too full of good for personal consideration. Let this country be committed to a step in the direction of everlasting peace, and it is my sincere belief that the league of nations is the greatest step the world has ever taken toward peace; therefore I shall support the league, as it is the hope of the world.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Oregon, who has just delivered to us a very thoughtful and excellent address, whether I am correct in understanding him that the proper way to write into, not the treaty, as I understand him, but to write into the record a particular understanding would be by interpretations instead of by reservations.

Before the Senator commits himself unreservedly to that proposition, I want to call his attention to an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States, which I sent for some 10 or 15 minutes ago, but which has just arrived, and therefore I can not call his attention to the specific language; but it is the case of the New York Indians against The United States, where the Supreme Court laid down the rule that you could not do that thing for the reason that explanatory interpretations were the mere ex parte expressions of one of the parties to the contract and had no effect at all upon the contract, and that the contract would have to be construed according to its terms. [Reading:]

> It appears by the records of the proceedings of the Senate that several amendments were there made to said treaty, including a new article; that the ratification was made subject to a proviso, the text of which is stated in the opinion of the court; and that in the official publication of the treaty, and in the President's proclamation announcing it, all the amendments except said proviso were published as part of the treaty, and it was certified that "the treaty, as so amended, is word for word as follows," omitting the proviso. Held, that it is difficult to see how the proviso can be regarded as part of the treaty or as limiting at all the terms of the grant.

I do not know whether the Senator is familiar with this case or not. It is reported in One hundred and seventieth United States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have some familiarity with that decision. I have very carefully looked through the digest of the Supreme Court cases as to treaties with the Indians, and there are a number in point. That opinion absolutely supports my contention. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania perhaps did not grasp my position. A proviso, an addition, an amendment, a reservation, or whatever it may be called, that enlarges the scope of a treaty or amends it in substance can not be made at all without resubmission to the parties; but an explanatory statement of anything already in a treaty is not an amendment or a reservation. That was the distinction I was trying to draw. As I say, Mr. President, I am one of those who contend that the Monroe doctrine is already preserved in the covenant, but I say it will be harmless to restate it; that it is already there, but it might find its reward in comforting some of the timid minds that oppose the covenant.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, the foremost question in the minds of the American people to-day is, "What can we do, if anything, to prevent future wars?" The question is pertinent and is now up for decision. Have we reached the time in the history of the world when mankind shall be ruled by law and order or by the sword?

The greatest question the Senate of the United States has been asked to consider since the formation of the Government itself is before us now, coupled with consideration of a treaty, the magnitude of which has never had an equal. They are presented to us to adopt or reject.

We are here to-day to study and discuss the plans worked out at the peace table at Versailles, unanimously presented to us by the representatives of the civilized nations of the world, who spent many months in its consideration. It is a question which will affect the welfare and happiness of more people in the United States in future years than any that has heretofore been considered.

They have presented us with this wonderful document—this league of nations plan—as their conclusions. How strange it has been in our imagination and how intricate our conceptions of its provisions until we have received it. But it has come at last, and we find on careful study that its obligations and requirements are reasonably plain and clear.

President Wilson said in his speech when presenting it to the commission constituted by the preliminary peace conference that the simplicity of the document "seems to be one of its chief virtues." He further said that it was a "definite guaranty of peace. It is a definite guaranty by word against aggression. It is a definite guaranty against the things which have come near bringing the whole structure of civilization unto ruin."

And so, my friends, we are to-day face to face with what we are asked to do, and upon each of us rests a solemn, sacred duty; and we will do our duty as we see it.

The foundation idea of this league of nations, as I see it, is to force all treaties between nations out into the open so that the people of all nations may know what is going on between their government and other governments, and thereby give them an opportunity to have something to say in the settlement of any differences that may arise in the adjustment of the same, instead of having everything done by their rulers, which has caused most of the trouble in the world in past ages. This is a great step in the right direction and will no doubt make the people of all countries inclined to perform their obligations and agreements with other nations. If for any reason they do not live up to their promises, this league of nations, interwoven with the peace treaty, will surely encourage them to do so, because there will be force enough behind it to compel them if necessary.

I think we all realize to a great extent that fear of the law—publicity and punishment—is among the most powerful inducements for men or nations to obey the laws of the land. The real object of this covenant is to encourage nations, and, if necessary, compel them, to live up to their treaties and prevent future wars.

The entire world has been shaken to its foundations in the past four years by the greatest war in the history of mankind. The lands of Europe have been bathed in blood. On battle fields and in the seas sleep millions of its victims. Destruction and want cover Europe to-day, and famine and desolation reign everywhere. Fifty thousand of our boys are buried in that land and many thousands more lie under our own skies. A hundred billion dollars will be our price to pay when we are through, and we had made only a beginning when victory was won. Our country knows practically nothing of the horrors of it all. Can you reason that we gained anything by helping to conquer a people who sought to enslave the world if we still permit old conditions to exist, and thereby make it probable that the same great sacrifice will have to be made again?

Let me repeat what Maj. Louis W. Bicknell, of Webster, S. Dak., who has just returned from France, related to me this morning.

He tells me that on a trip the first of this month through the sector in which the Canadian and English troops operated in the Battle of the Somme in 1916 he learned that the men engaged in cleaning up the ground still find hidden in the woods and marshes the bodies of men who fell more than two years ago. The country, he says, presents a spectacle which can not be described. Not a single building stands in the city of Lens, once a prosperous mining center of 30,000 people. Even the old graves of the dead were burst open by shells and bombs. The village of Vimy does not exist. In Arras not a house is untouched. The cathedral is a wreck and ruin. The city of Albert is only a pile of rubbish. Going from Paris toward Arras the factories which once gave employment to the workers are all ruined. Conditions are thus briefly described by a reliable eyewitness.

Germany thus violated with fiendish ruthlessness all the rules of war which she was pledged to respect. Ought not civilization to league the nations against the perpetration of such atrocities?

The discussion of this proposed league of nations has been going on in this body and by the press and pulpit for months. Many misrepresentations have been made. The country has been bewildered and confused, and no wonder, because it has been attacked by its enemies everywhere. This body has been a sort of "resolution school," with resolutions introduced by the opponents of this measure, with the hope in their hearts, no doubt, that some of them might stumble on to a resting place and find some logical reason to present to the people why it should not be adopted. But I do not think anyone has been really deceived, except it be those whose prejudices make them willing to be deceived.

I recognize that there are those among us who conscientiously hold to the view that the policy of our Government should still be that of noninterference with foreign affairs. Those who hold this view are not necessarily critics of this particular document, but are opposed to a league of any kind. The opinions of all such, conscientiously held, are entitled to the highest respect and consideration.

Let me recall what must be evident to every observing Member of this body, that long before we had been asked to do any particular thing the fight against this covenant commenced. It began before it was framed, before the delegates had taken their seats around the table at Versailles, and it has increased with increasing fury since it began. But I believe it has been generally recognized by the people at all times that in its early stages it was more a fight against President Wilson than against the league of nations itself.

I desire especially to direct my remarks from the viewpoint of our moral and national duty, and would not forget our obligation to provide material safeguards for our Nation. My Bible tells me that as we sow so shall we reap. I am just old fashioned enough to believe it. I believe that principle applies also to nations as well as individuals. And I do not believe that any government not based on morality and justice can long endure. Our Nation has been sowing for many years past. Now we are beginning to reap what we have sown. Let us not think we can escape our responsibilities. Some day, some time, and in some way we have got to pay the price, and I sometimes think the day of settlement is nearer than we think.

We are told by some Members of Congress, and the opponents of this document, that now the war is closed European troubles are no concern of ours; that we should stand out and not become mixed up in their affairs; that we are the greatest Nation on earth, amply able to take care of ourselves; that we do not need them, but that they need us. Aside from the fact that we are the greatest Nation on earth, I am not able to subscribe to any such doctrine. We are great, of course we are, and that we are strong no one denies. Even Germany admits that; but it is true that no nation or man has ever been or ever will be strong enough to stand alone. That is the reasoning of a selfish man or nation, and its acceptance would bring upon us the just condemnation of all liberty-loving people. It is exactly the same line of argument that has been used among the nations in ages past. It destroys the morals of a people and encourages wars such as we just passed through. It is the basis of that reprehensible sentiment now prevalent in Germany and which makes her an unrepentant nation to-day.

We all know that we were drawn into this war by the attack of Germany upon our moral sentiment as well as the industries of our country through the treachery of foreign ambassadors, the destruction of our commerce, and the murder on the high seas of our women and children. And so, my friends, if we are opposed to an alliance with other great nations to prevent war—from the arguments referred to—if we have reached a time when we really believe that a war in Europe is no concern of ours, then we might as well at once prepare for another, for the actions logically to follow such a position will be the same as have always been taken in olden times, and will of necessity encourage future wars, for our position will be exactly the same as have caused most of the wars for the past 2,000 years.

History tells us that ancient empires swept away peoples with resistless force and little opposition. They also were strong, but they fell. So it has ever been and so it will continue to be if we follow the ancient policy of selfishness which is always the program of despotism.

Would any of you have us become a party to creating new States, new boundary lines, new small republics, as has been done in a number of instances, and then abandon the peoples and countries we have helped to make free? It does not seem possible that the opponents of this league, who expressed themselves on all occasions as favorable to the war to make the world a fit place in which to live, will not now be ready to help these people stand alone. Such arguments will not go far with the American people. This body must be consistent with its own principles and its own past, and I believe it will.

We have now reached a period in the development of inventions when the greatest cities in America and their people can be destroyed and strangled by poisonous gases and high explosives dropped from the air, without a chance to protect themselves. The ocean can be crossed in two days by squadrons of hydroplanes, which in the future will circle the earth and practically annihilate distance. The isolated position which nature gave to America can no longer be relied on to make us safe from attack by foreign foes. To sustain in any degree the argument that has been advanced about America standing alone, those who are interested are met by the credible information that even since the signing of the armistice the destructive power of the aeroplane has increased manyfold and that greater destructive powers are being accomplished every day.

The next war, should it come, will be fought almost entirely from the air and under the water. The old bravery of soldiers in open warfare will be no more. It will be so fierce, so destructive, so terrible in its consequences that the power of good government may cease to exist. We may help to destroy our own institutions, our own Government, and hate, power, brute force, and anarchy may again rule the world. Then the destruction of the English-speaking race will be complete. It is time people became awakened to the situation as it exists to-day, and not allow themselves to be lulled to sleep in imaginary security.

Surely it can not be that with such knowledge in our possession we will not realize this great danger to our country, but stand here and oppose plans presented to us by the best intellects of the world as a remedy, or at least a partial remedy, after months of careful consideration and study, a plan to hold these awful consequences in check, and which if successful will end all this murderous warfare perhaps forever.

It does not seem to me there should be a single man in this body, knowing these facts, knowing that under the terms of this covenant any signatory nation may withdraw from it in two years if it so desires, who will favor sitting back in his dignity and independence on the theory that it is no part of our business to mix up with European affairs.

There may have been some, but very few wars have been fought that could not have been avoided by arbitration. And settlements of disputes which led to war had to be made after the war was over, just as is being done in this case.

Mr. President, I have always been a firm believer that the things that would keep us out of war would be agreements similar to this proposed covenant. I was in favor of the plan inaugurated by Mr. Bryan a few years ago when Secretary of State. I was friendly to the score or more treaties ratified between our country and various other countries for the advancement of general peace. And I am in favor of this plan for the league of nations, composed by representatives of the leading nations of the world, and I would be favorable to and vote for any plan given us by all the leading statesmen of the world after six months of deliberation.

We recognize that not everything in this document suits us. We would all probably make some changes if we could. I know that if I had the power the first thing I would do would be to eliminate Germany for the next 50 years or, at least, until she had shown some different feeling from what she has shown since the war closed. I would not permit her to be a partner in this league. She has covered the earth with blood, yet seems to have no sorrow for her crimes. She is not fit to become a member. Her word, her promises, her treaties, have all been false, and, if she were able, she would plunge the world into another war to-morrow if she believed she could emerge from it alive. I do not see how it would be possible for the civilized nations of the world to have any confidence in that people, either in the league or out of it.

According to published reports, some of their leading papers are now printing articles stating that this treaty will not be respected by the German people; that it will be regarded there merely as a "scrap of paper"; but, thank God, there will be force behind it which will change it into a stern reality, which force is the only thing which Germany recognizes as worth consideration.

There is another change in this plan which I would like to see made. I would like to have had an agreement to add to section 8, or to have had a new provision inserted, making it legally impossible for destructive inventions, such as deadly gases, high explosives, and destructive shells, to be ever again made for use in warfare. And that for the future all treacherous, death-dealing, and destructive inventions should be entirely withheld, making the penalty so heavy upon the inventor, the manufacturer, or the seller, as to constitute a complete barrier to all future output of such deadly weapons, because if something of the kind is not done the danger to good government is increased manyfold. If you will study this question, I do not believe you can reach any other conclusion. I would go still further. I would destroy all the war material of the world more destructive than the ordinary Winchester or Springfield rifle, because if we permit these inventions to continue and be used for war purposes the danger of world destruction through anarchy and lawlessness will be increased manyfold. But, Mr. President, these changes can not be made by us in good faith, because an amendment can not be made or anything eliminated without the necessity of ratification by other members of the league, which would complicate, delay, and entangle matters more than they are now.

My friends, history will repeat itself if something is not done to stay the awful craze that is running wild over the world to-day. You may say you can not see how this can be possible. Neither could we understand a few months ago how war which has destroyed the lives of 20,000,000 people and impoverished hundreds of millions more could come upon us almost over night. Neither could a million mothers understand why their sons were snatched from them and hurled into the trenches of disease and death to keep the world safe from the horrors and brutalities of the Hun, the consequence of which is that 50,000 of the flower of American youth sleep to-day in the blood-stained fields of Europe.

Wars have cursed the world since the beginning of history; and largely, in my opinion, because of the selfishness and ambitions of rulers and the ignorance of the people; and likewise for the further reason that the false idea has prevailed that war upon other countries was none of their business. Under the old order, with ideas then prevalent, it may be there could be no interference, and this false idea is just what I desire to help change by my vote. Fear of punishment is the one great influence, perhaps the greatest, operating to deter men and nations from unjust and criminal acts. I desire every civilized nation under the sun to be able to say to its neighbors that they shall not do an unjust act to a smaller nation. Under the former rule whenever a powerful nation subdued a smaller one it meant that the robber nation's power for evil was increased. It is my wish that whenever any nation proposes to aggrandize itself at the expense of a weaker one, we may have a league which will call a halt and, if necessary, destroy the offending nation's power for evil. That is what I want, and I especially want my vote on this league of nations to help put the shackles on Germany, Bulgaria, Turkey, and all the renegade despotisms of the Old World, and to have them brought to a realizing sense that it is their lot to wear them forever.

Do any of you believe that if England, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States had had power to say to Germany in 1914, with all the authority of a solemn league, "You shall not invade Belgium, and you shall respect the rights of man," that this war would have been begun? I do not, and I believe you are in agreement with me. But we did not have the right. England and France did not have the right. There was no league of nations, and that is the reason why the great World War was not prevented. What I wish now is that we may all have that right by international agreement with other civilized countries of the world, and see if by this means we may not prevent such catastrophes in the future. We owe it to our children to take the step. Let the allied nations disposed to justice decree that in the years to come no nation reveling in power shall usurp the rights of the weak.

We boast to-day of our advancement in all the things which make the world better, our great schools of learning and our religious institutions, all of which are legitimate objects of national pride. If we acknowledge anything of worth in the conclusions of philosophy and religion, why question the accepted fact that moral force exceeds the force of the brute? Is it true that our Nation in this twentieth century can not devise a plan to achieve justice without following the tactics of the Hun? Remember your obligations to generations unborn. If we fail the world here, I shall look upon it as the greatest national sin we have ever committed, and I shall likewise feel that we have been deliberately neglecting our material interests as well.

Have you ever considered the position of danger we would be in if the great commercial nations enter into this league and we remain aloof? Our commerce extends to the limits of the entire globe, and we desire that our merchant marine shall penetrate to all ports of the world. Suppose we refuse to enter this league, which has for its object the protection of the world from the aggressions of predatory nations. Why would we not be regarded with enmity and suspicion? Our great commercial interests, rich lands, our favored geographical position, would soon place us in the position of standing alone, with the other civilized nations combined against us. The time might come when there would be a vast combination against us to refill their treasuries and discharge their debts. To my mind, such an opportunity should not be given under any pretext, and this should be given careful consideration in determining our course regarding this alliance.

We have another reason for urging this compact. In the Far East at this time signs are increasing that Bolshevism with its reign of terror may yet without our help overrun Europe. The armies of France, England, and our allies are the only influence now stemming the tide. We entered this war in good faith for the purpose of making the world safe, not for lawlessness, but for democracy with its law and order. Will they believe we were acting in good faith as we claim if we abandon them now when, with the possible exception of time when we were at their side on the decisive battle field, they are at the most critical time in their life's history? And, Mr. President, if France is at a critical time from this cause, the crisis is also upon England and all the civilized countries, including our own. If France should be engulfed, the calamity is not her own alone. The danger of it hovers over us as well as them.

Paragraph 10 has been more largely commented upon and cited as a dangerous paragraph than anything else in the covenant. Let us see how it reads:

ARTICLE 10.

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

Mr. President, I am unable to see anything in this that is not perfectly plain and clear. Further, I am unable to see how it would be possible to have a covenant at all with any virtue or effect without the provisions which this paragraph embodies.

Opponents of the league have commented on Washington's views as expressed in his Farewell Address, advising against "entangling alliances" with foreign nations. This advice, Mr. President, was sound and wise for his time and the then existing circumstances, but conditions change as time goes on. Men change to meet those conditions. That which was best and wise over a hundred years ago is not necessarily best for us to-day. We love our country, we cherish its history, but that should not prevent us from seeing new conditions and duties which have been forced upon us. The truly progressive man permits no cloud to obscure his vision and knows that part of the past which is worth preserving and perceives that which is obsolete. Europe is calling for our help, and in helping her we help ourselves. Is it possible that the bloodiest war the world has ever seen has taught us nothing? Will not our Nation profit by the experiences just passed through? The world looks to America to-day for our answer as they look to no other nation on the globe. Will we answer them "yes" or "no"? The only hope that I can see is in this league of nations, to direct the world into the ways of peace. Have you who oppose this measure a better plan? If so, what is it? What do you propose to do for the millions of innocent, law-abiding men, women, and children of Europe? What is your plan to relieve them from conditions worse than death? Can you be a good citizen of America and not be a good citizen of the world?

So I say in conclusion we may say to the other nations of the earth, "We do not wish to get mixed up with your affairs. Your wars are no concern of ours. You go your way and we will go ours." But if we do, we will both inherit and deserve the hate of all the millions of honest, liberty-loving and God-fearing people of Europe, who look to America to save them and their countries from destruction.

I am going to vote for this league of nations on account of the protection of my family in future years. And when I vote for the good of my family, as I see it, I vote for the good of your family and for the good of every family in our great country. I shall vote for it because every German sympathizer in the world wishes it to fail; because every Bolshevik, every "I. W. W.," every man in the world who does not believe in law and order would vote against it, as they would vote against anything to compel them to obey the laws of God and man. Germany, Turkey, Bulgaria, and what is left of Austria-Hungary would like to see it fail. And I do not propose that my vote shall be registered with that group.

None of us can see further than to-day. The future is sealed to our vision. The good that this league may do for our country we do not know. But those of us who favor it hope and believe it will be great. And, seeing that way and believing that way, the finger of duty points only in one direction. And so in casting my vote on this proposed covenant of the world I shall cast it with a consciousness of having discharged my duty. We are under obligations to every citizen of our land to bring this peace about at the earliest possible moment. We owe this to every man who went to the defense of our country. We owe it to every mother in this great land who gave her sons for freedom. We promise it to every soldier living and every soldier dead, and I am ready to vote to redeem my promise.

PROPAGANDA ON PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] has given notice of a speech to be delivered at this time. I gave notice yesterday that I would try to address the Senate at some time when I could get the floor on the league of packers' propaganda. I do not want to take the time of the Senator from New Hampshire, except to put in a telegram or two about the matter. I realize that any speech I have to make on the subject will have to be made between speeches on the league of nations.

I said on yesterday that, in my judgment, the greatest propaganda that ever had been inaugurated in this country is now in full swing with reference to the bills which have been introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and by myself for some regulations of the packers. Telegrams have poured in to Senators and Representatives in Congress by the hundreds, and letters likewise, from people who know nothing about these bills, having been stimulated to do it by the active agents of the packers all over the United States. They have reached the banks now, and telegrams and letters are pouring in from the banks.

I say that the packers have agents in their employ traveling around the United States interviewing retail merchants, telling them that these bills will destroy them, borrowing letterheads from certain merchants to send in letters to Members of Congress, stimulating commercial bodies and banks to believe that these bills will simply destroy the Nation. This battle is going to become a battle to find out whether the packers with their combination and their monopoly are so strong that they can prevent practically the consideration of bills to regulate them.

I have interviews here with a manager of the packers in a certain city, one in which he virtually states that it is nonsense to believe that there can be any regulation of the packers; that they are just as large as the Government. They form the most powerful monopoly that we have ever had in this country.

I am not claiming any perfection for these bills. I am not claiming that the packers should not be heard. There will be extensive hearings. The bills are in the committee now, and the hearings will not commence for a month. I am simply anxious that when Senators receive such telegrams and letters they may know that they are inspired by these gentlemen who are trying to get a monopoly upon everything the people of the country have to eat.

I have trespassed enough upon the time of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I want to have this telegram read at the desk as illustrating the methods which are now in use, together with these two letters, one from New Mexico and the other from New Hampshire, illustrating other methods. As the debate on the league of nations proceeds, I shall try between speeches, every once in a while, to get something into the RECORD on this matter, in the hope that it may get before the American people, so that they may know the kind of propaganda that is going on to influence legislation and the inspiration of that propaganda, because the question will eventually come to the Congress whether there is power enough in the people of the country, the everyday people, who find themselves faced with a monopoly that is attempting to control everything they eat, to control that monopoly, and the battle line will be drawn, and men will take their places on one side or the other of it.

I ask that the telegram be read and that the two letters be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). If there is no objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CUMBERLAND, MD., July 21, 1919.

Senator W. S. KENYON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Armour Co. representatives actively working this section among retail grocers influencing them write or telegraph Washington opposition to Kenyon bill (S. 2202) in Senate, introduced to prevent monopoly food products by Big Five Packers. If you are flooded with protests in their behalf you will know what pressure is being brought to bear by Big Five Packers. Just advised using same methods through the South. No doubt all over the country many retail grocers may be influenced. Communicate with you their behalf by smooth tongued trained representatives. One of Armour's representatives admitted all their salesmen were called into meeting. No doubt they will be instructed along this line as well as other distributors. Food products are beginning to feel pressure of control in canned goods. Rice, salmon, and many other lines other than meats. Unless Kenyon bill is passed we believe it will practically be but one source of supply. Food commodities competition is the life of trade and will be obliterated. We only ask to be placed on a competitive basis and that special privileges enjoyed by the Big Five Packers in transportation be discontinued.

THE KENNEWEG COMPANY WHOLESALE GROCERS,
JOHN G. LYNN, President.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., July 16, 1919.

Mr. ALFRED H. BECKMANN,
Secretary, National Wholesale Grocers' Association,
No. 6 Harrison Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: The Armour Packing Co. is asking the retailers in the city to let them have the use of their letterheads for the purpose of preparing letters to our Senators and Congressmen for the retailers' signatures. These letters are intended as an indorsement of the packers' privileges in use of refrigerator or peddler cars. We doubt if they will be able to obtain many indorsements as our retailers' association is cautioning its members against signing the letters which the packers are preparing. At any rate, it will be advisable for the association to make the wholesalers in the country acquainted with above so they will put their customers on their guard.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES ILFELD COMPANY,
MAX NARDHANS, President.

KEENE, N. H., July 18, 1919.

NATIONAL WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN: We are inclosing with this letter a copy of letter which one of our banking friends received from one of the large packers in the West, and which is self-explanatory.

You will note that the opposition which they are trying to create to the passage of the Kenyon bill is of a somewhat subtle nature. We have been informed that one of the large packers intends to get petitions signed by a large number of retailers protesting against the passage of this bill.

We thought you might be interested in having this information, showing that the packers are not asleep by any means, but that they appear to be anxious in a quiet way to create a public sentiment in their favor, if possible.

Yours, truly,

THE HOLBROOK GROCERY CO.,
E. S. HOLBROOK, President.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 18, 1919.

The NATIONAL WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: We are informed by one of our salesmen that in Harlan County, Ky. (a district in which the packers operate extensively), Armour & Co. are trying to get the merchants to sign some kind of blanks to put up a rebuttal by the packers in complaint lodged by the wholesale grocers before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We do not know the exact nature of this document, but we are trying to get further details from our salesman. As soon as we can find out anything further we will let you know.

We give you this information thinking that it may be of some value to you.

Yours, very truly, ALTSHEIER & CO.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I simply wish to add that that is a sample of other telegrams which I am receiving. I desire further to say that the unanimity with which the minds of the people of the country have worked against this bill is perfectly marvelous. There are telegrams sent from Maine and from the State of Washington here to Congress on the same day and in the same language; and letters are written from various States on the same kind of paper, in the same typewriting, in the same language, and are sent on the same day. It is marvelous how the minds of the people have risen all over this country against this bill at one particular moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am receiving, and I presume every other Senator is receiving, telegrams and letters from merchants and retailers all over the country similar to those which have been received by the Senator from Iowa and which he has read. The packers, through their own agents, are getting up these letters and telegrams at their own expense and sending them here to Senators.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. MOSES obtained the floor.

Mr. WATSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Calder	Hale	Moses	Sherman
Capper	Harding	New	Shields
Curtis	Harris	Newberry	Smith, Md.
Dial	Henderson	Norris	Stanley
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sutherland
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Swanson
Elkins	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Fall	King	Phelan	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lenroot	Phipps	Watson
Gay	Lodge	Ransdell	Wolcott

Mr. KING. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] are absent on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. THOMAS answered to their names when called.

Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. KELLOGG entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the treaty of peace with Germany was signed at Versailles June 28, but discussion of its provisions, as conjectured or known, began even before any of its negotiators had set out for Paris. The final day of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress was marked by a speech from the senior Senator from Missouri, who took then the strong position which he has since maintained toward the proposed league of nations; and from that day to this the currents of debate, here and elsewhere, have surged about this subject to the exclusion, almost complete, of any other of the stipulations which we are at length called to consider in their final form.

It may be, Mr. President, that this would have followed if the Senator from Missouri had not spoken as he did. It is probable that another voice, perhaps less robust, would have been raised to sound the alarm which the vigilant Senator then set up—and indeed, sir, it is almost certain that the very novelty of the proposal would, in any event, have made the proposed covenant the storm center of discussion which we now know it to be. Contributing to this result is the fact that the covenant of the league of nations was the first portion of the treaty to emerge into pitiless publicity from the diplomatic laboratory where the alchemists of modern world politics were engaged in arriving openly at open covenants in the white light which beat upon a conference table set in a locked and guarded room where wild men shrieked at the keyhole and stones were clattering upon the roof—as one of the conferees has described it; and the attention thus concentrated upon a single portion of the treaty—by no means the longest, the most complicated, or the most important as regards the main task of the conference—has never been even measurably interrupted. The published summary of the treaty as a whole failed to arouse or hold the public mind; and even when a full and well-authenticated text fell under the eye of some of us and finally into the hands of all—not as receivers of stolen goods probably obtained by bribery but as legitimately as any document wrongfully withheld could possibly come into the possession of its rightful custodians—even this failed to divert the ebb and flow of the tidal waves of criticism and defense which have poured across the weather-beaten topic of the league of nations.

The stream of comment has continued to flow in its chosen channel, Mr. President, with but a single ripple—even since the President brought back belatedly and laid before us the instrument he had negotiated, together with his report upon it. Except for the singling out of the sinister and shocking scandal of Shantung by the junior Senator from Nebraska and the clarion blast with which he startled the ears of all Christian citizens, the treaty itself has been only negligibly touched upon by any Senator; and the country has little reason to think that we are here to pass senatorial judgment upon anything of consequence apart from the league of nations.

This is not altogether surprising, Mr. President. The keynote of this debate was not struck in the widely advertised speech of the Senator from Virginia; it was sounded by the President himself four days before the gallant Virginia admiral sailed into the course and hoisted and lowered his flag within the period of a single and none too prolonged session of the Senate.

The President's address to us, on the 10th of July, like all of the addresses he has anywhere made upon the subject of the treaty, was devoted, in space and emphasis, most largely to the league of nations. Only 14 lines of its printed text were devoted to the treaty itself, and his comment upon it was equally vague and apologetic. In consequence, and in line with the trend of debate during the President's absence, the remarks made here during the past two weeks have not departed from the beaten path, except, as I have already pointed out, for the discussion aroused by the Senator from Nebraska, and we have continued to content ourselves with criticism and explanation of the league of nations.

It is therefore pardonable, Mr. President, if I approach another phase of the general topic, contenting myself for the moment with saying only that I am in full accord with the views which the opponents of the league of nations have expressed, that to my mind the proposed covenant presents features which endanger our rights of sovereignty, which shackle our freedom of judgment and action, and which bind us to perpetual observance of stipulations, uncertain and unknown, to be laid upon us by a foreign concert acting under the most sinister of all the powers ever exercised by the old order of diplomacy, which we have been told had passed away—the reservation of the unrestricted right to act which the members of the league take to themselves under the provisions of article 15.

Bad, Mr. President, as the covenant of the league of nations is, it is by no means the worst feature of the pact which is before us; and if there are those among us who still persist that the voice of the fathers is more articulate and alluring than the call of those voices which we are told infest the air, if there are those who continue to think that Washington's Farewell Address is a nobler document than any recently produced at Versailles, I counsel these to turn their attention to the body of the treaty itself, and to learn from its many and complicated stipulations the full extent of the duties it seeks to lay upon us, the difficulties it will try to make us solve, and the inextricable thicket of complications into which it will thrust us.

After all, Mr. President, it is the entire treaty which we must consider, and it is the entire treaty which we will find worthy of a far closer scrutiny than any of us yet have given to it. In the form in which it has come to the Committee on Foreign Relations the English text comprises 267 printed pages of census size, of which nearly 6 are devoted to a preamble, a recital of the powers signatory, and a list of their plenipotentiaries—this last beginning with our own chief negotiator, "acting in his own name and by his own proper authority," and ending with the German "Dr. Bell, Minister of the Empire," who, in the absence of further distinguishing title or prognomen, may have sought thus to prepare an alibi against the possible anger of his constituents. Its more than 80,000 words are divided into 15 parts, which contain 49 sections, 26 chapters, 15 annexes, 4 maps, 3 tables, and 440 articles.

In it are considerations of many things—of "shoes and ships and sealing wax, of cabbages and kings." The wide world has been combed to find objects of reparation with which to carry out the doctrine of no annexations and no indemnities, and neither schoolhouses in China, nor villas in Egypt, nor manuscripts from Medina, nor skulls from East Africa have been overlooked. In short, Mr. President, the most ardent of special agents of our own Treasury, seeking for additional items of taxation from a rich Republic, could not have been more diligent than the peace commissioners at Paris in digging out remote and ofttimes unrelated properties, rights, and privileges with which to swell the treasure chest of booty.

In the treaty, described in words and laid down upon its accompanying maps, are new boundaries for Germany, for France, for Belgium, for Luxemburg, for Switzerland, for Denmark, and for East Prussia—to name the nations which were before the war; and for Poland and Czechoslovakia—to name those which the treaty will contribute to set up. It creates a new free city; it optimistically looks forward to new Russian States; it roams the plains, sails the seas, delves into the earth, and soars into the sky; it opens prisons and it guards graves; submarine cables and wireless telegraphic plants are subject to its terms; dyestuffs and drugs, coal and chemicals, Huns, horses, and huntsmen alike come within its purview; books, boundaries, and bullets; contracts, cattle, cotton, and claims; deeds, debts, and duties; finance, fire insurance, and fortifications; guns, goats, guaranties, and governments; missions, mines, and mixed commissions; navies, negotiable instruments, and natural products; ports, prizes, and penalties; railroads, recruiting, and rivers; sheep, submarines, stock exchanges, and social insurance; tunnels, tonnage, and trials; vessels, victuals, and the Vistula; warships, waterways, woman suffrage, and Wilhelm II—in short, Mr. President, the alphabet and alliteration alike are agonized in an attempt to deal adequately with merely a topical index to this instrument which we are asked to ratify in haste lest we break the heart of the world.

The main task of the treaty is to impose the terms of peace on Germany—and this it does rigorously. From Germany is demanded the surrender of Alsace-Lorraine; of German-Poland; of her rights in Moresnet; of her title over the Kreise of Eupen and of Malmedy; of all her overseas possessions and concessionary rights; of all her suzerain or supervisory privileges in Luxemburg; of her administrative authority in, and probably the ultimate surrender of, the Saar Basin; the exploitation privileges of the ports of Strasburg and of Kehl; of all rights and titles to a considerable portion of Silesian territory; the surrender of sovereign rights in East Prussia; of complete right and title to the territory of Memel, the city of Danzig and territory adjacent thereto; the absolute surrender of rule in Northern Schleswig, and further surrender of titular grasp upon the rest of the ancient duchy, unless its inhabitants shall determine to continue under German authority; the destruction of all military works upon the islands of Heligoland and Dune, the complete renunciation of concessionary rights and titles in all overseas possessions; renunciation of all rights in conventions and agreements relating to equatorial Africa; the relinquishment of all claims for indemnity under the Boxer treaty; the relinquishment of real and personal property, arms and munitions, vessels and wharves, in Chinese territory; the return of astronomical instruments taken from China nearly 20 years ago; the abrogation of leases for German concessions in various Chinese cities; the waiving of all claims against China and other powers for the internment of German nationals; the relinquishment of all privileges under international arrangements regarding Liberia; the surrender of all rights, titles, and privileges procured in Morocco, together with all property and possessions in the Sherifian Empire; the transfer of German shares in the Moroccan State Bank; the recognition of the English protectorate in Egypt; the abrogation of all German privileges in that country and the surrender of all German property there; the relinquishment, in favor of Japan, of all German rights, titles, and privileges in Shantung; the reduction of military, naval, and air forces to a mere skeleton, with severe restrictions regarding the period of enlistment and service, the training of men, the manufacture or store of guns and munitions; the restriction of the means of military education; the surrender of the right of military, naval, or air missions to leave Germany; the destruction of all fortified works in a wide area to the east of the Rhine; the surrender of warships, auxiliaries, submarines, docks, and aircraft; the breaking up of warships now under construction, together with all their machinery and equipment; a restriction upon the quantity of naval arms, munitions, and raw materials, and its storing in designated places; the surrender of hydrographic information concerning the channels and waters between the Baltic and North Sea, and a renunciation of rights to install guns on maritime routes between these waters; limitation upon the use of high-power wireless; absolute restriction upon the employment of military and naval air forces, and proscription against the keeping of any military dirigible, together with the surrender of all military and naval aeronautic material, except a few machines to be used exclusively in the search for submarine mines.
